How many acres are to be overflowed? How large an area is to be destroyed in the backing up of the water? How much will that cost? I said that with the exaggerated views now prevailing with respect to the value of real estate, Mr. President, it will cost very much more than it ought to cost.

Of course, some of the good people of the District, when it comes to paying taxes, think that their property is of but small value. When it comes to charging rents, and selling property to the Government, the same persons entirely change their views. The psychology of some of the property owners of the District of Columbia is a remarkable thing. When they want to rent their property to Representatives and Senators and employees of the Government, the property is as priceless as the possessions in the New Jerusalem. And if they want to sell it to the Government for dormitories, or for public buildings, it is more valuable than the choicest holdings in New York City abounding upon Fifth Avenue or Broadway. I do not want to put the head of the Government into the lion's mouth any oftener than we are compelled to. I do not want to go before the juries of the District within the next year to assess the damages upon property that will be necessary if this project is carried into effect. I do not want to buy now from the electric—I was about to say "trust"—the electric trusts, and those who furnish the machinery for these hydroelectric plants. Let us wait until prices come down, until we can get a quid pro quo, until the Government is in a position to meet the expenditures called for by the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, does the Senator realize, in connection with the legal discussion that he has been making of this amendment, that there would not be any condemnation trial before a jury in the District of Columbia? Does he not realize that it would all be outside of the District, and this terrible catastrophe of the Government running up against a jury in the District of Columbia would not take place? None of the property to be taken under condemnation proceedings would be in the District of Columbia.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, for the moment I labored under the impression that a portion of the property was in the District of Columbia. But I do not care whether it is in the District or not. If the Government goes across the District line into Maryland, or across the line into Virginia, and goes into the Virginia or Maryland courts, I submit it will have the same question to deal with.

Mr. NORRIS. That may be; but I thought the Senator only felt this awful fear against being robbed by the people of the District, and that it did not apply to citizens of Maryland and Virginia.

Mr. KING. My statement about condemnation proceedings in the District courts does not call for any material modification of the substantial part of the statement which I made. The juries of Maryland, or of Virginia, or of Pennsylvania, or Utah, or any other State now under the impulses and views now guiding the people will act substantially alike.

Property has inflated values, and jurors will honestly find high values. In suits for condemnation experts will contend that the land needed for power purposes is of enormous value, and they will give the various elements of damage, the uses to which it may be put for power purposes. We talk so much about electric energy and its necessity and its value that experts unquestionably would place a very high value upon property available for power purposes. The Senator will remember in his long legal experience the many cases which show that the uses to which the property may be put, regardless of the use to which it is presently put, may be taken into consideration in fixing the values.

So the experts, whether from Virginia or Maryland or the District of Columbia, would find powerful elements of value in the land which would have to be condemned under this bill.

Let me appeal to my good friend from Nebraska, knowing that he is an economist, to pretermit the consideration of this item now. I sympathize with the Republicans. They have sorrows and tribulations enough. I want to help them. They are between the devil and the deep sea, if I may use such unparliamentary language, Mr. President. Many people are demanding enormous appropriations, people are knocking at the door of Congress constantly, not for thousands and hundreds of thousands, but for millions and hundreds of millions of dollars.

On this side we can look with some complacency upon these demands, and perhaps some of us may contend that they be granted, but I want to say to the Republicans that they have a serious responsibility resting upon their shoulders. The Republican Party is going to be held accountable by the country for the expenditures which are made, and if it does not practice economy, if it does not cut down expenses whenever and wherever possible, the people will rise against that party, as I hope and believe they will at the next election, and the Democratic Party will not only elect the next President but will control the House and the Senate.

But I hope to be nonpartisan enough, enough of an American and a patriot to stand by you, Senators, when you stand for economy. I have denounced upon several occasions during my short stay in the Senate my own party for appropriations which I conceived to be improper.

I shall not hesitate to denounce it again if I believe it is exceeding the bounds of propriety and of rigid economy in the expenditures which it advocates or which it makes. I desire to join hands with Senators across the aisle in working for economy, for the reduction of taxes, and for retrenchment and reform. There are enough burdens that we are compelled to meet, and we ought not to take upon our shoulders any that we may postpone for a reasonable time.

I appeal to my distinguished friend to withdraw his amendment, or, if not, to accept the amendment offered by the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH].

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, the Senator from Utah, if he were consistent, it seems to me, would follow the conviction and the judgment that he reached many, many years ago on the proposition. When he was a young man in his prime in the House of Representatives he studied this question. He then reached the conclusion, he confesses now, that we ought to take hold of it, but he was beaten over there by the old warhorses, he says, the influential fellows who rode over him.

Now, they have been investigating Great Falls ever since. Water has been going to waste and power has been lost ever since. The Senator has grown, come to the Senate, joined the old warhorses, and is now trying to kill the very thing that before he came to be influenced by these powers and these associations he favored. He is now trying to kill the child that in the honest vigor of his youth he tried to sustain. It was killed then by men who had been in public life long and had become powerful. They ran up against this great unseen power that always reaches out its hand to prevent development where it interferes with their influential gain, and now even the Senator, unconscious, of course, that this influence has ever grasped him in his older age and got him beneath its power, is turning his back upon the proposition which, when he did investigate it, he thought was all right.

Mr. NELSON (in his seat). The child of his youth.

Mr. NORRIS. The child of his youth, as the Senator from Minnesota says.

The Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] is another man who is in favor of this thing. He has, he says, been out and looked at Great Falls, and he knows that it ought to be developed. He realizes that, as every other man does who goes out there, but he says, "Let us investigate it first." We have investigated it for 40 years. Now let us investigate some more, because, forsooth, there has been report made yesterday or last week about it. We have reports without number. I commented upon one of them that goes into great detail, as great detail as ever was gone into by any investigator of any water proposition in the world.

The Senator did not hold up the War Department, though, when they spent $63,000,000 or $64,000,000 of public money developing water power in Alabama without an investigation and without a report to Congress as to whether it was proper. That is a horse of a different color.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I am sure the Senator wants to be perfectly fair.

Mr. NORRIS. I do.

Mr. BANKHEAD. He knows perfectly well that the development in Alabama about which he is talking now was purely and strictly a war measure.

Mr. NORRIS. If the Senator had permitted me to go on for another sentence, that is just what I was going to say.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I did not think the Senator would.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator was wrong about that, if it is possible for him to be wrong. It was a war measure. I am one who never criticized the Government for doing it.

But what kind of a measure is this? Here is something that is admitted to be not only for the benefit of the Government of the United States but for the people of the Capital City, who must live here to transact the Government business, a proposition in which the Government is directly interested. The Government consumes in round numbers half of the electric power that is consumed in the District of Columbia. Those who must do its work are paying exorbitant prices for coal, for electric light, for street car tickets, and yet they say before we will give any relief we must have another investigation.

The Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] forgets, entirely forgets, I think, that if we investigate for another 10 years one of the chief arguments in favor of the development will have disappeared, and that is the water proposition, that now we can get with greater economy both as to the water part of it and the electric part of it, while if it is delayed, as one of them will have to be unless we do it now, the other one will be more expensive on account of the division of the proposition.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. GRONNA. I want to suggest to the Senator from Nebraska that in the great project at Muscle Shoals, the Government is now asking for $12,000,000 more. The bill is now pending before a committee of which the Senator from Nebraska is a member.

Mr. NORRIS. I suppose the Senator from Alabama, when that comes up, will insist that it be not allowed and that somebody shall be instructed to make an investigation and report to Congress on it.

Mr. GRONNA. I was also going to suggest that that is only an experimentation and for the manufacture of nitrogen to be sold and disposed of by the Federal Government. In other words, it is putting the Federal Government into actual business.

I have no objection to the improvement of Muscle Shoals or any other water power. The Secretary of War I understand has recommended it; in fact, I know that he has recommended the further appropriation of $12,000,000 in the bill introduced by the distinguished Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH].

It seems to me that the Great Falls water power has been going to waste, as the Senator from Nebraska has well said, for a long time. There is no experimentation about it. It seems to be agreed by all those who have spoken of it that it is feasible and possible to make a great water power there. It would mean conservation. It would benefit not only the people of the District of Columbia and the city of Washington but the people of the entire country, because it would save coal and it would save oil. Of course, it would be very, very beneficial to the citizens of Washington.

How any man who is in favor of the further improvement of Muscle Shoals or any other water power can oppose this project is more than I can understand.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I desire to say just a word with reference to Muscle Shoals. The improvement of Muscle Shoals is not a power proposition at all. The money that has been expended at Muscle Shoals has been for the construction of a nitrogen plant and other plants in the furtherance of making fertilizers and explosives and matters of that sort. It has not been expended for water power. It has not been expended for the improvement of the river. They are now at work on a great dam there in connection with those plants, all appropriated for by Congress.

As I have said, I have no objection to the improvement here. I think this water power ought to be developed, but I think it ought to be developed in the proper way. I do not know how the measure has been prepared; I do not know who prepared it, I do not know how carefully it is drawn, I do not know how the interests of the people of the country or of Washington, or Virginia, or Maryland, whose property is involved, are going to be preserved. I do not know anything about that.

I should be very glad to vote for an independent bill on the propositon. I think it is a great mistake to undertake to inject it into this bill, that has for its purpose an entirely different proposition, and that is the development of water power all over the country by private corporations and private enterprise under the direction of the Government. There is no connection between the two and can be none.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I want to refer to the objection which the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] has made. It has been made also by the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], and also I think by some other Senators. They are all in favor of the development of water power at Great Falls, but they are not in favor of having the amendment put on to the pending bill because it is not a good bill to put it on. The Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] thinks it is something that ought to come from the District of Columbia. The Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] thinks it ought to come out as an independent and separate bill. I would just as leave have it if it came in any of those different ways, but the Senators know that it can not come in that way.

Senators know that this is a proposition which, if it ever becomes a law, has got to be put on some bill which everybody knows is going to pass.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Why is that true?

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator has asked me a question that I dislike to go into, but I will say to the Senator that a bill providing for the development of this project was introduced and has been pending before the committees of Congress every since the Langfitt report was made, but that bill has never yet got out of a committee, and it never will.

Mr. BANKHEAD. If the Senator will permit me, I will say that the water power bill, the very bill that we are now considering, has been pending before the Senate for 10 years.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; but it got out of the committee and it passed the House of Representatives and the Senate.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes; but it did not become a law.

Mr. NORRIS. There is not any such delay with this kind of a bill. The Senator says that my proposal ought to come up as an independent measure and he would then vote for it. Some other Senator would vote for it if it came from the Committee on Naval Affairs, probably, though he would not vote for it unless it did so; and some other Senator would vote for it if it came from the Committee on Appropriations, but unless it did he would not have anything to do with it.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The power now consumed by the Government of the United States in all of its branches in the District of Columbia is supplied from what source?

Mr. NORRIS. Some of it the Government makes and some of it it buys. It all comes, however, from steam plants.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. What proportion of that power is bought?

Mr. NORRIS. I can not now tell the Senator.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Really, the very great proportion of it is supplied by the Government's own plants, is it not?

Mr. NORRIS. In my judgment—I may be wrong about it; it is my recollection, however—the Government does not make one-half of the electricity that it uses.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Very well. Then, I infer from the statement of the Senator that it is the private corporations which supply the other half of the power that stand in the way of this legislation, and of course the inference from the remarks of the Senator is that those of us who now object to the investment of this sum without any further investigation are, in some way or other, representing them?

Mr. NORRIS. No; the Senator is not justified in taking that position.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I am very glad to hear the Senator say that.

Mr. NORRIS. I do not want the Senator to take that position; I do not think he has any reason to take that position.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. What I want——

Mr. NORRIS. Let me go on now for just a moment. I have not any question whatever of the sincerity of purpose of anybody who is either for or against this proposal, but it does not follow because I believe that that I can not call attention to what I believe to be their illogical position.

I had just as lief that this particular proposition came from the Committee on Irrigation; but everybody must admit that under the rules of the Senate it is in order as an amendment to the pending bill. So, under the rules of the Senate, the amendment is properly and legally before the Senate.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Will the Senator pardon another question?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. If that is the case, I wish the Senator would overcome his objection and merely tell us why the bill embodying his proposal does not come out of the committee.

Mr. NORRIS. The same thing has happened to a thousand other bills.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The Senator intimated that there was something obscure about the reason why this bill did not come out of the committee.

Mr. NORRIS. That is the Senator's language; that is the Senator's construction. I did not say that there was something obscure about it. The Senator knows that any proposition of this kind, unless it can be put onto some one of the great bills that must pass, unless it is backed up by the administration or by some political party in control, or something of that kind, never does get out of the committee. There are thousands of such bills; this is not the only one; there are a great many others. I do not say that the Potomac Electric Power Co. is doing its best to pass this bill; it is against it, of course, and whatever it can do against the bill will be done. Wherever it can wield any influence, it will wield it; there is not any doubt about that.

I am not charging and I do not believe that any Member of the Senate or of the House of Representatives is directly or consciously influenced by anything of that kind, but there are 10,000 ways in which that may come about. Since the question has arisen I am going to tell the Senate the circumstances in this case.

Immediately or soon after Col. Langfitt made his report I introduced a bill which, in substance, carried out the proposition which is now before the Senate. I had a man come into my office who said, "You will not get anywhere with your bill." I thought, inasmuch as the bill authorized the Secretary of War to make the improvement, it would be referred by the committee to the Secretary of War; that the Secretary of War would have to take the advice of some engineer, and that Col. Langfitt would naturally be the man who would be consulted. He knew more about it than did any other man in the Army or, perhaps, in the whole Government service. This man said to me, "Langfitt will not be here." I thought the matter would be reported on immediately. The man said to me, "I do not mean to say, now, that the Secretary of War is against it, or that the President is against it; I do not think they know anything about it; I do not want to be understood as charging that; but in some way, somewhere, there will be influence brought to bear that will take Langfitt out of the city of Washington and away from the District of Columbia." And that is just what happened. Of course, it might have been a coincidence, for such officers are frequently transferred from place to place; but when the bill was referred to the department Langfitt was somewhere down in the Southern States superintending the putting of some water into or the building of dams in a lot of creeks down there, or snagging them, or something of that kind, under the river and harbor bill, so the bill had to be referred to somebody who did not know anything about it. That is what actually occurred. I am not saying and I have not any reason to believe that the officials above Col. Langfitt who transferred him did so to get him away from this proposition; yet the man who came in my office and prophesied in advance what would happen was right, that is what did happen. Such things do happen; there are 10,000 ways in which such influences can control and can delay, and that is what has happened to this proposition. For seven years there has been nothing but delay, and now it is met in the Senate by a number of Senators, all of whom are in favor of it, but none of whom seem to want it; they want it in some other way.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I think it would be well for the Senator to state the name of the man who assumed to know so much about this matter; it would be enlightening to the Senate I am sure. Further than that, he should name the man who subsequently investigated and made the report which Col. Langfitt ought to have been called upon to make.

Mr. NORRIS. I will say to the Senator I can not give either name now; I do not have either one in mind. It is just one of the things that happens. This matter has been sidetracked and, in my humble judgment, while I do not question the honesty of those who want to take such action, to provide for another investigation will simply be to put it on another sidetrack, and I do not know where the end will be.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the Senator from Montana as a substitute for the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, in order to have Senators present before the roll call is commenced, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The absence of a quorum being suggested, the Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	France	Lenroot	Sheppard
Ball	Gay	McCormick	Smith, Ga.
Bankhead	Gronna	McKellar	Smith, S. C.
Beckham	Hale	Moses	Stanley
Brandegee	Harding	Nelson	Sutherland
Calder	Harris	New	Thomas
Capper	Harrison	Newberry	Trammell
Chamberlain	Henderson	Norris	Underwood
Colt	Hitchcock	Nugent	Wadsworth
Culberson	Jones, N. Mex.	Overman	Walsh, Mass.
Curtis	Kendrick	Page	Walsh, Mont.
Dial	Kenyon	Phelan	Watson
Dillingham	King	Phipps	Wolcott
Fernald	Kirby	Pittman

Mr. TRAMMELL. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague, the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER], on account of illness.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-five Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the Senator from Montana in the nature of a substitute for the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. GRONNA. I ask that the amendment may be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. In lieu of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] proposes the following substitute:

The commission is hereby authorized and directed to investigate and, on or before the first Monday in December, 1920, report to Congress the cost and, in detail, the economic value of the power plant outlined in project No. 3, House Document No. 1400, Sixty-second Congress, third session, in view of existing conditions, utilizing such study as may heretofore have been made by any department of the Government.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, if I may have the attention of the Senator from Montana, if he is in the Chamber, I will suggest to him that this might properly be made an amendment to the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska. I can not vote for this amendment as a substitute for what has been offered by the Senator from Nebraska. I can see no objection to a provision which would ask for an investigation. This is only an authorization of a certain amount of money, and it does not say that the building of these dams and the development of the water power shall be commenced within any given period of time. I do not know that it is necessary as an amendment, but I certainly can not vote for making this a substitute for the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the amendment, in the nature of a substitute, offered by the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH], on which the yeas and nays have been requested and ordered. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX], which I transfer to the junior Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH] and vote "nay."

Mr. FERNALD (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON]. In his absence, I withhold my vote.

Mr. KELLOGG (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS] and vote "nay."

Mr. NEWBERRY (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED]. In his absence, I withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CUMMINS. I desire to announce the necessary absence of the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON].

Mr. BALL. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER]. I understand, however, that if he were present he would vote as I shall vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I have a general pair with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN], which I transfer to the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] and vote "yea."

Mr. THOMAS. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY] and vote "yea."

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I rise to ask if the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] has voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He has not.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. As I have a general pair with that Senator, I withhold my vote.

Mr. CURTIS. I wish to announce that the senior Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] is detained on business of the Senate.

I desire also to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE] with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN];

The Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON];

The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS]; and

The Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON].

The result was announced—yeas 22, nays 41, as follows:

YEAS—22.

Bankhead	Henderson	Phelan	Trammell
Beckham	Hitchcock	Pittman	Underwood
Culberson	Jones, N. Mex.	Ransdell	Walsh, Mont.
Gay	King	Smith, Ga.	Wolcott
Gore	McKellar	Stanley
Harrison	Myers	Thomas

NAYS—41.

Ball	Cummins	Harris	McCormick
Borah	Curtis	Kellogg	McNary
Brandegee	Dial	Kendrick	Moses
Calder	Dillingham	Kenyon	Nelson
Capper	France	Kirby	New
Chamberlain	Gronna	Lenroot	Norris
Colt	Hale	Lodge	Nugent

Overman	Pomerene	Spencer	Watson
Page	Sheppard	Sutherland
Phipps	Sherman	Wadsworth
Poindexter	Smith, Md.	Walsh, Mass.

NOT VOTING—32.

Ashurst	Harding	McLean	Smith, Ariz.
Edge	Johnson, Calif.	Newberry	Smith, S. C.
Elkins	Johnson, S. Dak.	Owen	Smoot
Fall	Jones, Wash.	Penrose	Sterling
Fernald	Keyes	Reed	Swanson
Fletcher	Knox	Robinson	Townsend
Frelinghuysen	La Follette	Shields	Warren
Gerry	McCumber	Simmons	Williams

So the amendment of Mr. WALSH of Montana, in the nature of a substitute, was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is upon the original amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. The Senator from Georgia offers the following amendment: On page 33, in line 17, after the word "pledges," insert "an unimproved dam site or."

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I call the attention of the chairman of the committee to this proposed amendment. I understand that he will not oppose it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is upon the adoption of the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 31, line 14, after the word "matter," it is proposed to insert:

In any valuation of the property of any licensee hereunder for the purposes of rate making no value shall be claimed by the licensee or allowed for any project or projects under license in excess of the value or values prescribed in section 14 hereof for the purposes of purchase by the United States, and no value shall be claimed or allowed for the rights granted by the commission or by this act.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ASHURST in the chair). The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from New York.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PHIPPS. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, and I call the attention of the Senator in charge of the bill to the language on page 19. The clause commencing on line 22 properly provides that where one is operating on a stream and has built works or properties, and another applicant comes along and derives the benefit of the works already instituted, the second applicant shall pay his proper proportion of the expense contingent on the upkeep of the improvements, and so forth. To cover that point the language of the bill provides on page 19, line 22:

That whenever any licensee hereunder is directly benefited by the construction work of another licensee.

I suggest adding the words "a permittee," for this reason: Those operating works to-day are not licensees; they are operating under permits; and unless something is put in this clause to cover them they are at a disadvantage, because they will not properly be classed as licensees. It seems to me it clarifies the meaning of the clause and only carries out what is intended by the proponents of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The READING CLERK. On page 19, line 23, after the word "licensee," insert a comma and the words "and permittee."

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I have no objection to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PHIPPS. Mr. President, in the same paragraph, in line 25, page 19, the language is:

The commission may in its discretion.

I have already sent to the desk a proposed amendment, which has been printed, and which provides that the words "may in its discretion" shall be stricken out and the word "shall" inserted in place thereof, the intent being that it should not be within the discretion of some representative of the commission to say whether or not those who are coming in to benefit under works, dams, or other properties already established on a stream shall be called upon to pay a just proportion of the upkeep and the cost of the installation. I called this amendment to the attention of the Senator having the bill in charge.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The READING CLERK. On page 19, line 25, strike out the words "the commission may in its discretion" and insert in place thereof the word "shall," so as to read:

That whenever any licensee hereunder is directly benefited by the construction work of another licensee or of the United States of a storage reservoir or other headwater improvement, the commission shall require—

And so forth.

Mr. NELSON. I have no objection to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PHIPPS. Mr. President, on page 14, line 10, after the word "plans," I have offered an amendment which was printed. It is an additional proviso, which I request the Secretary to read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the amendment.

The READING CLERK. On page 14, line 10, after the word "plans," add the following proviso:

Provided, however, That nothing contained in this section shall apply as to any nonnavigable stream or streams at the headwaters of which a storage reservoir or reservoirs used or to be used for power purposes has or have already been constructed, or are in process of construction, but in all such cases the party or parties operating or actually engaged in constructing power works on such stream or streams shall have the preferential right to a license or licenses for other or secondary power developments.

Mr. PHIPPS. Mr. President, a few days since I took occasion to make some general remarks, and touched on this question, which I consider of some importance. The object of this proposed additional proviso is to protect those people who take the initial risk, who go in and venture their money in constructing reservoirs upon the headwaters of streams and demonstrate the power-producing possibilities of the streams. It seems to me only fair and reasonable that where that initial risk is undertaken by an individual or a company, and the possibilities of the stream have been in part developed, no newcomer should be allowed to come in and take advantage of the situation, and be allowed to develop the secondary power possibilities of the stream, until and unless the original locator on the stream has first been given an opportunity to make that development.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. PHIPPS. Certainly.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. That would practically give the man at the head of the stream, who has created a storage reservoir, a practical monopoly of the stream, no matter how long the stream might be.

Mr. PHIPPS. Not necessarily, I will say to the Senator. I want to illustrate by citing a case that occurred on one of the rivers in California—the San Joaquin, if my memory does not fail me—where a power company made an initial installation of a fair-sized power plant, I think with a capacity of 5,000 horsepower, and also constructed two reservoirs, I believe, on the headwaters of that stream. It was not a strong company financially. It was developing its business; it had to make its way. But before it had marketed its output up to its full capacity another and larger and stronger company came along and filed on the lower reaches of the same river to develop the secondary horsepower. Whereupon the initial company, finding that that application had been lodged in the Interior Department, tried to intervene and file. The net result was that the newcomer, the second and larger and more powerful company, obtained the privilege under a permit simply because it filed its application first, and developed horsepower there which was partly furnished by means of the dam built at the expense of the initial locator, and paid no consideration whatever for the service it so derived. That is a situation which I do not think should be permitted. I believe where an applicant files in all good faith on a stream, his application should always be considered, as it will be; but I do not think that the mere fact of filing an application should, by reason of its priority in filing, preclude the one who is better entitled to develop that secondary horsepower from having the privilege.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. It does not seem to me that the amendment ought to be adopted. Take the Columbia River, for instance, at the headwaters of which the possibilities of power development may not be very large, or take the head of the Deschutes River in Oregon, where the possibility of water-power development is not large, but as you get toward the mouth it constantly increases. Take either of those streams, and the man who has taken the initial steps at the headwaters of either would practically have a preferential right for power along both streams to the mouth.

Mr. PHIPPS. He would merely have the right to have his application considered at the time an additional application might be made upon the stream.

Mr. LENROOT. He would have a preferential right.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. He would have a preferential right. Here is the danger of the provision. In the illustration the Senator cites the initial development of the California stream was by a company of small resources. The second company, which developed below, was a powerful company. Would it not enable the initial locator of a power plant at the head of the two streams I have instanced to form combinations with everybody who went in below, so that they practically would have a monopoly of the whole stream?

Mr. PHIPPS. I do not feel that it would have that effect. Certainly that is not the intention of the amendment I have offered. Where a company takes the initial risk, goes in and ventures its money in developing the possibilities of a stream, part of its installation, in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred, in the mountain sections on these small streams, as the Senator knows, will be a dam, a reservoir, or reservoirs. Having made the production of power in paying quantities a possibility by reason of this investment, is it not reasonable to give that first locator a right to continue the development of the possibilities of the stream? He may locate his first plant away down on the stream, but his reservoir is up at the head. Some one may come in and locate above him and might very seriously interfere with the supply of power.

Mr. LENROOT. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. PHIPPS. Certainly.

Mr. LENROOT. Would not the inevitable result be to grant a monopoly to all the power upon the given stream, and that there could be no such thing as competition?

Mr. PHIPPS. I do not think it would have that result.

Mr. LENROOT. He would have a preferential right.

Mr. PHIPPS. I did not intend that it should extend for all time, and that no one else could locate on the stream, but where some one else comes in and files, that then the original locator would have the right to file along with him, and that his claim would be considered in preference to the other.

Mr. LENROOT. That is not the language of the Senator's amendment. If he has a preferential right to a license, his filing would take precedence, of course, under the terms of the amendment.

Mr. PHIPPS. If the Senator will suggest wherein that language could be modified to meet his objection, I will be glad to accept his suggestion.

Mr. LENROOT. If he does not desire a preferential right, he has the right without the amendment to make his filing and be considered with others. An amendment is not necessary unless the Senator desires to give him a preferential right to a license.

I do not know that the Senator has offered an amendment, but he spoke to me about an amendment yesterday by which it would be made mandatory upon the commission to require a licensee down a stream to pay his equitable share of any headwater improvements, and I have no objection to that amendment. If a new licensee down the stream is, under the terms of the bill, compelled to compensate the licensee who has constructed the headwater improvements, there is no injustice to the first licensee.

Mr. PHIPPS. My desire was to give the individual or company who demonstrated the power-producing possibilities of a stream some consideration over and against that which might be extended to the ordinary citizen. Anyone is privileged to come in at any time and file for water-power possibilities, and it seemed to me, and I still believe, that the person who has made the development of the power a possibility on a stream should have some advantage over a newcomer.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I regret to say that I can not agree to this amendment. I am inclined to agree with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN], as well as the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT], that the amendment would give those who made the headwater reservoirs a monopoly of the stream. There is no occasion for that, for this reason: If they have made any improvement at the headwaters of which any project lower down gets the advantage, under other provisions of the bill they are entitled to compensation. I think it is a dangerous amendment and ought to be rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. PHIPPS].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. PHIPPS. I move a further amendment, on page 25, in line 18, after the word "revenues," to insert the words "relating thereto." The intention is merely to make it explicit that the property to be taken into consideration is where the revenue from the property relates only to property which has been received from the United States Government under license or lease.

Mr. NELSON. I think that is putting too narrow a limitation on it, and it would not be a good plan to have the amendment agreed to.

Mr. PHIPPS. Then, if the Senator will permit me, I wish to call attention to the other feature. Unless you do limit the words "prospective revenues" by adding the words "relating thereto," so as to confine them to the property received from the United States Government, you make it possible for the commission to figure the revenue that a company might receive on property that never did belong to the United States Government. It has no investment in private properties which have earning powers and are bringing in revenue.

The object is simply to clarify the language and make it definite that the prospective revenues taken into consideration in this case are those revenues received through the use of property that had belonged to the Government.

Mr. LENROOT. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. PHIPPS. Certainly.

Mr. LENROOT. Of course the Senator realizes that the word "project" is defined elsewhere in the bill and that it must be an entire unit of development. Then under other provisions of the bill the Government is given the right to take it over under the conditions named, with the idea that when they get a license for a unit of improvement, although it may not all be upon Government land, it is to be considered as one unit, and, getting that license, they agree then that prospective revenues or prospective profits shall not be considered at the end of the term. They certainly ought not to be, because you are just making it that much more impossible for it ever to be taken over if you do consider them.

Mr. PHIPPS. I will ask the Senator if he will kindly state wherein there could be objection to the qualifying words which are intended to clarify the meaning of the clause?

Mr. LENROOT. The license covers a unit of improvement, and it must cover a unit of improvement.

Mr. PHIPPS. That I understand.

Mr. LENROOT. Then the Government is given the right to take over the entire unit of improvement, and that becomes a part of the contract.

Mr. PHIPPS. That is true.

Mr. LENROOT. They are not given the right to take over part of a project, but they take over the entire project, which is a complete unit of development. If the Senator is going to allow prospective profit for part of that unit of development, does not the Senator see that it would be absolutely impossible for the Government ever to take it over or another applicant ever to get a new license?

Mr. PHIPPS. I will state the point I am trying to cover. I will endeavor to illustrate it in this way: The power company may have two or more producing plants, one of which may be under license from the Government, and the other may be on private property and not under the control of the Government at all as far as the license is concerned. The Government in a case of that kind may come in and take over the project which is under license and if called upon make adjustment of the revenues, not of the project, but under this clause the revenues of the company may be considered.

Mr. LENROOT. Oh, no; it would be the revenues of that unit of development; but suppose in the unit of development only a portion of it is on Government property, under the Senator's amendment you would have to apportion the revenues properly chargeable to that Government property on the entire unit and allow them prospective profits upon all the balance.

Mr. PHIPPS. That is not the intention at all. I do not think the language would have that effect.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] has stated correctly the objections to the amendment. It ought not to be agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. PHIPPS].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. PHIPPS. I offer the following amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 25, lines 18 to 23, strike out the following:

Provided further, That the values allowed for water rights, rights of way, lands, or interest in lands shall not be in excess of the actual reasonable cost thereof at the time of acquisition by the licensee.

And insert the following in lieu thereof:

Provided further, That the values allowed for water rights, rights of way, lands, or interest in lands or other property of the United States licensed by the commission under this act shall not be in excess of the actual reasonable cost thereof at the time of acquisition by the licensee: Provided further, That the values allowed for water rights, rights of way, lands, or interest in lands or other property heretofore acquired by the licensee shall be just and reasonable.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. NUGENT. Mr. President, on behalf of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS], who is absent from the Senate on official business, I tender an amendment. On page 19, after the word "charge," in line 17, I move to strike out the semicolon, insert a comma and the words "except on tribal lands within Indian reservations."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the proposed amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 19, in line 17, after the word "charge," insert the words "except on tribal lands within Indian reservations."

Mr. NELSON. There is no objection to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LENROOT. I should like to ask whether the same amendment should not be made at the end of line 13?

Mr. NELSON. That has been covered by an amendment offered by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS].

Mr. NUGENT. Mr. President, I tender the following amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 7, after line 5, insert the following:

In order to aid the commission in determining the net investment of a licensee in any project, the licensee shall, upon oath, within a reasonable period of time, to be fixed by the commission, after the construction of the original project or any addition thereto or betterment thereof, file with the commission, in such detail as the commission may require, a statement in duplicate showing the actual cost of construction of such project, addition, or betterment, and the price paid for water rights, rights of way, lands, or interests in lands. The commission shall deposit one of said statements with the Secretary of the Treasury. The licensee shall grant to the commission or to its duly authorized agent or agents at all reasonable times free access to such project, addition, or betterment, and to all maps, profiles, contracts, reports of engineers, accounts, books, records, and all other papers and documents relating thereto.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President——

Mr. NUGENT. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. NELSON. I have no objection to the amendment, but I should like to have it inserted at the end of line 17, on page 7, so as to make it a part of that paragraph.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho consent to that arrangement?

Mr. NUGENT. I will say to the Senator from Minnesota that I think I have inserted it in the proper place in the bill, for the reason that it relates to the question of net investment, which is defined in the paragraph immediately preceding line 5.

Mr. NELSON. If the Senator will look at the bill, he will see that it is an amendment to section 4. That section starts out by stating "That the commission is hereby authorized and empowered," and then the first subdivision is (a) "to make investigations and to collect and record data concerning the utilization of the water resources of any region to be developed, the water-power industry and its relation to other industries," and so forth. I think it would be more appropriate to come at the end and as a part of that paragraph, especially because, if it goes into conference, we can in that way handle it better and get it in shape if there is any question about it. I am in favor of the amendment, but I suggest that it be added at the end of line 17.

Mr. NUGENT. I am still of the opinion that I have offered the amendment for incorporation in the bill at the proper place, but at the same time I have no objection to incorporating it after line 17.

Mr. NELSON. As a part of that paragraph.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 7, after line 17, as a part of subdivision (a) insert the matter just read at the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NUGENT. I offer the following amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 9, line 8, after the word "reservation," insert the following:

Provided, That in respect to tribal lands embraced within Indian reservations, which said lands were ceded to Indians by the United States by treaty, no license shall be issued except by and with the consent of the council of the tribe.

Mr. NELSON. I do not believe in that amendment. It would allow a few Indians to hold up an improvement; but I am willing that it shall go to conference.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. NUGENT].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LENROOT. The word "further" should be inserted after the word "Provided." There is already a proviso in that section.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will take notice of the suggestion of the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from South Dakota will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 19, line 9, after the word "is," it is proposed to insert "sold to the public without profit or is"; so as to read:

Provided, That licenses for the development, transmission, or distribution of power by States or municipalities shall be issued and enjoyed without charge to the extent such power is sold to the public without profit or is used by such State or municipality for State or municipal purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from South Dakota.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President, I offer the amendment to the pending bill which I send to the desk.

Mr. NELSON. We are through with the amendments to the bill, so far as I know.

Mr. HENDERSON. I have one amendment to offer.

Mr. KING. I also have an amendment to offer.

Mr. HENDERSON. I have offered an amendment which was printed last night, and which I desire to submit at this time.

Mr. SPENCER. I ask that the amendment submitted by me may be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri has sent an amendment to the desk, which will now be stated.

Mr. SPENCER. I think that the page referred to in the amendment should be changed, if there is no objection. The proper page at which the amendment should be inserted may be ascertained by the Secretary. The amendment was prepared before the bill was printed in its present form.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert at the proper place the following:

Provided, That the commission shall investigate the utility of tunnels in connection with dams, either with relation to the conservation of water for irrigation purposes or for power or other purposes, and to make such rules regarding the use of tunnels and the kind of tunnels to be used, and the compensation to be paid by any joint use thereof, as in the judgment of the commission may be wise, in order that water dams to be constructed in the future, and which require Government permits, may be most efficient in the storage and conservation of water.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. KING. I should like an explanation of that amendment from the Senator from Missouri. It seems to me that the limitations which should surround the amendment are not clearly set forth and that there is nothing to indicate that it is limited to the investigation of those tunnels which might be cognized by the Federal Government or which might tend to the utilization of power controlled by the Federal Government.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President, if the Senator from Utah will consider the amendment, he will find, I think, that it is merely permissive in character; there is nothing mandatory about it. It merely gives to the commission in connection with tunnels that require Government licenses the power to investigate and make regulations in regard to them. It is a grant of permissive power that, in the opinion of some of those interested in the Western States, seemed to be necessary, and I am free to say that it struck me as being very desirable.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, if the Senator from Missouri will yield, I think it is not permissive but mandatory upon the commission to make rules and regulations regarding the use of such tunnels.

Mr. SPENCER. Exactly; but I say whether they shall make regulations that are at all mandatory in character or nothing but formal regulations rests entirely with the commission. The point I want to make is that there is not anything that requires the commission to do anything except what in their judgment seems to be wise.

Mr. LENROOT. They will be required to make regulations regarding tunnels.

Mr. SPENCER. They may be strict or they may be weak.

Mr. LENROOT. Yes; but what jurisdiction has this commission or can it have to make regulations for tunnels that are not a part——

Mr. SPENCER. It has only permission in connection with those tunnels that require a Government license or a Government permit or that are used in connection with a dam which is under Government control. Of course, beyond that the commission would not have anything to do with the matter.

Mr. LENROOT. The language of the amendment does not so read.

Mr. SPENCER. It can not have any application except in so far as the commission has jurisdiction of those matters with which the tunnel itself is connected.

Mr. LENROOT. Here is a tunnel that is necessary for the use of a transmission line, we will say, but has nothing to do with the license itself, and yet it is the existence of the dam which makes the tunnel necessary. What power have we to regulate such a tunnel?

Mr. SPENCER. The amendment confers no power; it can not confer power where it is impossible to confer power.

Mr. LENROOT. The Senator understands that Congress may attempt to do that which it has no power to do—and that, perhaps, is a better way to state the matter—this amendment attempts to do on its face that which it seems to me Congress has not the power to do.

Mr. SPENCER. It is not so intended, and any modification which would accomplish what the Senator has in mind would be satisfactory to me.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator permit an inquiry?

Mr. SPENCER. Certainly.

Mr. KING. Does it sufficiently appear in the amendment offered by the Senator that the investigation is to be limited to those matters as to which unquestionably the Federal Government has jurisdiction? Is there anything to limit it to streams that are navigable in fact or as to examination of tunnels that relate to streams navigable in fact or to matters which would come clearly under the commerce clause of the Constitution?

Mr. SPENCER. It was so intended. It was intended to limit any regulation or rule to those tunnels which are connected with water dams which require Government permits; in other words, when a tunnel has to do with a project which requires a Government permit, in such case the commission shall have the right to make rules and regulations regarding the tunnel. I do not see any objection to that. The amendment, as I read it, does not apply to anything else.

Mr. LENROOT. I suggest to the Senator, in order to relieve the objection which I think both the Senator from Utah and I have, that the amendment could be perfected by inserting the words "over which the United States has jurisdiction," so as to read:

That the commission shall investigate the utility of tunnels over which the United States has jurisdiction.

Mr. KING. That meets the objection which I had in mind and I think very much improves the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. SPENCER. I see no objection to that.

Mr. KING. It makes it clear that the Senator does not intend that the commission shall go on a fishing expedition and take cognizance of matters that are purely within the jurisdiction of the States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that the Senator from Missouri modifies his amendment by the insertion of the words which will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On line 2 of the printed amendment, after the word "tunnels," it is proposed to insert the words "over which the United States has jurisdiction."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment as modified.

The amendment as modified was agreed to.

Mr. NELSON. I understand the Senator from Nevada [Mr. HENDERSON] desires to offer an amendment.

Mr. HENDERSON. I have already sent the amendment to the desk, and I now offer it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 41, at the end of line 21, it is proposed to strike out the word "repealed" and insert "amended to read as follows," and the following:

That a commission is hereby created and established, to be known as the Waterways Commission, which shall be composed of the Secretary of War, Secretary of Interior, Secretary of Agriculture, Director of the United States Geological Survey, Forester and Chief of the Forest Service, Director and Chief Engineer of the United States Reclamation Service, and the Engineer of the Corps of Engineers of the United States Army who is in charge of the river improvement work, and said commission is hereby authorized and empowered, under such rules and regulations as the President may prescribe, and subject to the approval of the heads of the several executive departments concerned, to bring into coordination and cooperation the engineering, scientific, and constructive services, bureaus, boards, and commissions of the several governmental departments of the United States and commissions created by Congress that relate to study, development, or control of waterways and water resources and subjects related thereto, or to the development and regulation of interstate and foreign commerce, with a view to uniting such services in investigating, with respect to all watersheds in the United States, questions relating to the development, improvement, regulation, and control of navigation as a part of interstate and foreign commerce, including therein the related questions of irrigation, drainage, forestry, arid and swamp land reclamation, clarification of streams, regulation of flow, control of floods, utilization of water power, prevention of soil erosion and waste, storage, and conservation of water for agricultural, industrial, municipal, and domestic uses, cooperation of railways and waterways, and promotion of terminal and transfer facilities, to secure the necessary data, and to formulate and report to Congress, as early as practicable, a comprehensive plan or plans for the development of waterways and the water resources of the United States for the purposes of navigation and for every useful purpose, and recommendations for the modification or discontinuance of any project herein or heretofore adopted. Any member appointed from the retired list shall receive the same pay and allowances as he would if on the active list, and no member selected from the public service shall receive additional compensation for services on said commission.

In all matters done, or to be done, under this section relating to any of the subjects, investigations, or questions to be considered hereunder, and in formulating plans, and in the preparation of a report or reports, as herein provided, consideration shall be given to all matters which are to be undertaken, either independently by the United States or by cooperation between the United States and the several States, political subdivisions thereof, municipalities, communities, corporations, and individuals within the jurisidiction, powers, and rights of each, respectively, and with a view to assigning to the United States such portion of such development, promotion, regulation, and control as may be undertaken by the United States, and to the States, political subdivisions thereof, municipalities, communities, corporations, and individuals such portions as belong to their respective jurisdictions, rights, and interests.

Nothing herein contained shall be construed to delay, prevent, or interfere with the completion of any survey, investigation, project, or work herein or heretofore or hereafter adopted or authorized upon or for the improvement of any of the rivers or harbors of the United States or with legislative action upon reports heretofore or hereafter presented.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, while I am not in love with this amendment, or enamored of it, I shall make no objection to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KING addressed the Senate. After having spoken for some time,

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. LODGE. There ought to be a short executive session for some confirmations and two treaties which I wish to report. If it will be agreeable to the Senator from Minnesota and the Senator from Utah, I should be glad to move an executive session at this time.

Mr. KING. It will be entirely agreeable, and I will conclude my observations to-morrow.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I remained continuously in the Senate to-day until 20 minutes of 3 this afternoon, when, upon the urgent solicitation of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS], I was called to attend the session of a subcommittee of the Judiciary Committee, of which I am a member. While I was absent there were tendered by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. NUGENT], and, as I am advised, adopted by the Senate, two amendments in which I am very deeply interested, and my interest in them the Senator from Idaho had reason to know. I refer to the first and the last amendments offered by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. NUGENT], and printed. One refers to an amendment to appear on page 9, in line 8, and another on page 21, in line 8; and, if I am in order, I move to reconsider the vote by which each of those amendments was adopted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands that the pending question is the request on the part of the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] for unanimous consent for the reconsideration of the vote whereby the committee amendment, beginning in line 22, on page 4, was adopted.

Mr. NUGENT and Mr. LODGE addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Idaho.

Mr. NUGENT. Mr. President, there was but one of the amendments referred to by the Senator from Montana which I presented——

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

Mr. NUGENT. I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. LODGE. I only wanted to say to the Chair that I rose to move an executive session, and yielded because I gathered from what was said by the Senator from Montana—there was a little noise—that he wished to enter a motion to reconsider.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Yes; but I did not intend to endeavor to press it at this time.

Mr. LODGE. So I understood. It is now 20 minutes of 5; and if the Senator from Idaho is willing to let it go over, so that we can have an executive session, I shall be glad to have that done.

Mr. NUGENT. Most assuredly; I shall be glad to do so. I desire to state that when I tendered the amendment to which the Senator from Montana refers, particularly with regard to water-power sites within tribal lands on Indian reservations, the chairman of the committee accepted the amendment, and I assumed that the matter had been discussed and that such acceptance on his part would be agreeable to the Senator from Montana.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After seven minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

TREATY WITH NICARAGUA.

In executive session this day the following treaty was ratified, and, on motion of Mr. LODGE, the injunction of secrecy was removed therefrom:

To the SENATE:

I transmit herewith to receive the advice and consent of the Senate to its ratification a convention signed on January 5, 1920, between the United States and Nicaragua, to foster the development of commerce between the two countries and to increase the exchange of commodities by facilitating the work of traveling salesmen.

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE,
9 January, 1920.

The PRESIDENT:

The undersigned, the Secretary of State, has the honor to lay before the President, with a view to its transmission to the Senate, to receive the advice and consent of that body to its ratification, if his judgment approves thereof, a convention signed at Washington on January 5, 1920, between the United States and Nicaragua to foster the development of commerce between the two countries and to increase the exchange of commodities by facilitating the work of traveling salesmen.

Respectfully submitted.

ROBERT LANSING.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, January 6, 1920.

The United States of America and the Republic of Nicaragua, being desirous to foster the development of commerce between them and to increase the exchange of commodities by facilitating the work of traveling salesmen, have agreed to conclude a convention for that purpose and have to that end appointed as their plenipotentiaries:

The President of the United States of America, Robert Lansing, Secretary of State of the United States of America, and

The President of the Republic of Nicaragua, Señor Don Diego Manuel Chamorro, his envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary to the United States of America, who, having communicated to each other their full powers, which were found to be in due form, have agreed upon the following articles:

ARTICLE I.

Manufacturers, merchants, and traders domiciled within the jurisdiction of one of the high contracting parties may operate as commercial travelers either personally or by means of agents or employees within the jurisdiction of the other high contracting party on obtaining from the latter, upon payment of a single fee, a license which shall be valid throughout its entire territorial jurisdiction.

In case either of the high contracting parties shall be engaged in war, it reserves to itself the right to prevent from operating within its jurisdiction under the provisions of this convention, or otherwise, enemy nationals or other aliens whose presence it may consider prejudicial to public order and national safety.

ARTICLE II.

In order to secure the license above mentioned the applicant must obtain from the country of domicile of the manufacturers, merchants, and traders represented a certificate attesting his character as a commercial traveler. This certificate, which shall be issued by the authority to be designated in each country for the purpose, shall be viséed by the consul of the country in which the applicant proposes to operate, and the authorities of the latter shall, upon the presentation of such certificate, issue to the applicant the national license as provided in Article I.

ARTICLE III.

A commercial traveler may sell his samples without obtaining a special license as an importer.

ARTICLE IV.

Samples without commercial value shall be admitted to entry free of duty.

Samples marked, stamped, or defaced in such manner that they can not be put to other uses shall be considered as objects without commercial value.

ARTICLE V.

Samples having commercial value shall be provisionally admitted upon giving bond for the payment of lawful duties if they shall not have been withdrawn from the country within a period of six months.

Duties shall be paid on such portion of the samples as shall not have been so withdrawn.

ARTICLE VI.

All customs formalities shall be simplified as much as possible with a view to avoid delay in the dispatch of samples.

ARTICLE VII.

Peddlers and other salesmen who vend directly to the consumer, even though they have not an established place of business in the country in which they operate, shall not be considered as commercial travelers, but shall be subject to the license fees levied on business of the kind which they carry on.

ARTICLE VIII.

No license shall be required of:

(a) Persons traveling only to study trade and its needs, even though they initiate commercial relations, provided they do not make sales of merchandise.

(b) Persons operating through local agencies which pay the license fee or other imposts to which their business is subject.

(c) Travelers who are exclusively buyers.

ARTICLE IX.

Any concessions affecting any of the provisions of the present convention that may hereafter be granted by either high contracting party, either by law or by treaty or convention, shall immediately be extended to the other party.

ARTICLE X.

This convention shall be ratified, and the ratifications shall be exchanged at Washington within two years, or sooner if possible.

The present convention shall remain in force until the end of six months after either of the high contracting parties shall have given notice to the other of its intention to terminate the same, each of them reserving to itself the right of giving such notice to the other at any time. And it is hereby agreed between the parties that, on the expiration of six months after such notice shall have been received by either of them from the other party, as above mentioned, this convention shall altogether cease and terminate.

In testimony whereof the respective plenipotentiaries have signed these articles and have thereunder affixed their seals.

TREATY WITH ECUADOR.

In executive session this day the following treaty was ratified, and, on motion of Mr. LODGE, the injunction of secrecy was removed therefrom:

To the SENATE:

I transmit herewith to receive the advice and consent to its ratification a convention signed on December 31, 1919, between the United States and Ecuador to foster the development of commerce between the two countries and to increase the exchange of commodities by facilitating the work of traveling salesmen.

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE.

The PRESIDENT:

The undersigned, the Secretary of State, has the honor to lay before the President, with a view to its transmission to the Senate to receive the advice and consent of that body to its ratification, if his judgment approves thereof, a convention signed at Washington on December 31, 1919, between the United States and Ecuador to foster the development of commerce between the two countries and to increase the exchange of commodities by facilitating the work of traveling salesmen.

Respectfully submitted.

ROBERT LANSING.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, January 6, 1920.

The United States of America and the Republic of Ecuador being desirous to foster the development of commerce between them and to increase the exchange of commodities by facilitating the work of traveling salesmen have agreed to conclude a convention for that purpose and have to that end appointed as their plenipotentiaries:

The President of the United States of America, Robert Lansing, Secretary of State of the United States of America, and

The President of the Republic of Ecuador, Señor Rafael H. Elizalde, envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary of the Republic of Ecuador near the Government of the United States of America,

Who, having communicated to each other their full powers, which were found to be in due form, have agreed upon the following articles:

ARTICLE I.

Manufacturers, merchants, and traders domiciled within the jurisdiction of one of the high contracting parties may operate as commercial travelers, either personally or by means of agents or employees, within the jurisdiction of the other high contracting party on obtaining from the latter, upon payment of a single fee, a license, which shall be valid throughout its entire territorial jurisdiction.

In case either of the high contracting parties shall be engaged in war, it reserves to itself the right to prevent from operating within its jurisdiction under the provisions of this treaty or otherwise enemy nationals or other aliens whose presence it may consider prejudicial to public order and national safety.

ARTICLE II.

In order to secure the license above mentioned the applicant must obtain from the country of domicile of the manufacturers, merchants, and traders represented a certificate attesting his character as a commercial traveler. This certificate, which shall be issued by the authority to be designated in each country for the purpose, shall be viséed by the consul of the country in which the applicant proposes to operate, and the authorities of the latter shall, upon the presentation of such certificate, issue to the applicant the national license as provided in Article I.

ARTICLE III.

A commercial traveler may sell his samples without obtaining a special license as an importer.

ARTICLE IV.

Samples without commercial value shall be admitted to entry free of duty.

Samples marked, stamped, or defaced, in such manner that they can not be put to other uses, shall be considered as objects without commercial value.

ARTICLE V.

Samples having commercial value shall be provisionally admitted upon giving bond for the payment of lawful duties if they shall not have been withdrawn from the country within a period of six (6) months.

Duties shall be paid on such portion of the samples as shall not have been so withdrawn.

ARTICLE VI.

All customs formalities shall be simplified as much as possible with a view to avoid delay in the despatch of samples.

ARTICLE VII.

Peddlers and other salesmen who vend directly to the consumer, even though they have not an established place of business in the country in which they operate, shall not be considered as commercial travelers, but shall be subject to the license fees levied on business of the kind which they carry on.

ARTICLE VIII.

No license shall be required of:

(a) Persons traveling only to study trade and its needs, even though they initiate commercial relations, provided they do not make sales of merchandise.

(b) Persons operating through local agencies which pay the license fee or other imposts to which their business is subject.

(c) Travelers who are exclusively buyers.

ARTICLE IX.

Any concessions affecting any of the provisions of the present treaty that may hereafter be granted by either high contracting party, either by law or by treaty or convention, shall immediately be extended to the other party.

ARTICLE X.

This convention shall be ratified; and the ratifications shall be exchanged at Washington or Quito within two years, or sooner if possible.

The present convention shall remain in force until the end of six months after either of the high contracting parties shall have given notice to the other of its intention to terminate the same, each of them reserving to itself the right of giving such notice to the other at any time. And it is hereby agreed between the parties that on the expiration of six months after such notice shall have been received by either of them from the other party as above mentioned this convention shall altogether cease and terminate.

In testimony whereof the respective plenipotentiaries have signed these articles and have thereunder affixed their seals.

Done in duplicate at Washington this 31st day of December, 1919.

[SEAL.] ROBERT LANSING.
[SEAL.] R. H. ELIZALDE.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. NORRIS. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, January 15, 1920, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, January 14, 1920.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Rev. A. C. Millar, D. D., editor of Arkansas Methodist, Little Rock, Ark., offered the following prayer:

Our Father in heaven, we Thy children lovingly and reverently approach Thee, thanking Thee for the multitude of Thy mercies, seeking Thy pardon for our sins, asking Thy continued blessing and Thy further favor upon us. We pray Thy richest blessings to rest upon this body of representative men. Bless each one in his personal life and help him to be a true and a noble man, realizing his personal responsibility to Thee, to his country, and to his fellow men. Bless this body in its united capacity as it undertakes to deal with the important questions that come before it. Grant that each one here may be a true patriot, that each one may fear Thee, that the results of the labors of these men may be such as to please Thee.

Bless our President and his advisers. Bless our country and its relations to all of the other countries of the earth. Bless us as a people and help us to pursue righteousness, to desire it, to speak it, and to find it.

We ask these things in Christ's name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

RETURN OF AMERICAN SOLDIER DEAD.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Military Committee I ask unanimous consent that a letter addressed to me by the Secretary of War, under date of January 13, which I send to the Clerk's desk, be read for the information of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that a letter received by him from the Secretary of War be read for the information of the House. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will read the letter.

The Clerk read as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, January 13, 1920.

DEAR MR. CALDWELL: Your note of yesterday reaches me this morning, informing me that a statement reaches this country, embodied in a letter from one of the attachés of the Paris Embassy, to the effect that decision as to the return of our military dead does not rest with the French Government, but with the American military authorities, who have decided for the present that no remains shall be returned to the United States within three years. I am particularly grateful to you for having called my attention to this matter, because it is highly important that a statement so thoroughly unfounded should be quickly corrected.

Happily the files of the War Department, which is informed from time to time by the State Department concerning the international aspects of the matter, contain documents which will dispel any existing uncertainty.

I inclose a copy of the translation of the regulation promulgated by M. Clemenceau, as president of the council and minister of war, on June 19, 1919, as taken from the Echo de Paris of that date, stating, as you will note, that "all exhumations of bodies of military dead, even for the purpose of reinterment in the same place, are prohibited in the war zone; with the exception of those with which the service d'état civil aux armees is exclusively charged in the carrying out of the operation of grouping the isolated graves, liberating private property, repairing of cemeteries, or for reasons of hygiene or of public health."

As demonstrating the attitude of the military authorities of the United States, you will wish to have copies also of several cables which I inclose. Gen. Pershing, you will note, cabled us as far back as March 1 of last year, stating that a bill was about to be submitted in the Chamber of Deputies which would permit disinterments for three years, and suggesting the propriety of diplomatic representations to the French Government.

Our cablegram of June 30 to Gen. Pershing described the progress which the State Department had made up to that time in its negotiations with the French Foreign Office, and added a suggestion concerning our dead in North Russia, which has since been carried into effect.

Our cable of October 30, 1919, to Gen. Connor, commanding American forces in France, emphasizes once again the viewpoint of the military authorities, and I inclose a copy of it for your information.

I send you also a copy of a cable from Gen. Connor dated December 22, which further clarifies the situation.

Now, as previously, I shall be happy, of course, to convey to you any additional information which may be available to us and desired by you about this matter, which is so close to the hearts of the parents of those young men who lost their lives in the service of the Nation. Any honor which may now be done to their remains will be but a scant recognition of the service they have rendered the country.

Faithfully, yours,

NEWTON D. BAKER,
Secretary of War.

Hon. CHARLES P. CALDWELL,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Speaker, I have also copies of the papers referred to in the letter, and I ask that they be printed in the RECORD without reading.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. They are not long. Why not read them?

Mr. CALDWELL. I am perfectly willing that they be read, but the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] thought it would take several minutes, and we would save time by simply having them inserted in the RECORD. I am perfectly willing that they should be read and I think they ought to be.

Mr. MONDELL. My thought was that it would serve the purpose to have these papers printed in the RECORD. They are of some length—cablegrams, communications, and orders in council.

Mr. CALDWELL. I thought the same thing could be arrived at by printing them, and I am willing that they be printed unless the gentleman objects.

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CALDWELL. Yes, sir.

Mr. DYER. I do not believe there is anything more important at this time or more near to the hearts of the people who have lost their loved ones in France than that they should know why the remains are not being brought home. I understand that there have been some exceptions, and that some of the remains of some of the dead have been brought home by those who have had special influence, and where the parents have gone and got them themselves at their own expense. I believe we ought to know the true status of these facts. I ask unanimous consent that the communications referred to by the gentleman from New York be read for the information of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that the communications be read. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

(Published in the Echo de Paris, June 19, 1919.)

[Translation.]

EXHUMATIONS AND TRANSPORTATION OF MILITARY DEAD.

"Mons. Clemenceau, president of the council, minister of war, has announced the following provisional laws:

"1. Exhumations: Until new orders have been issued, all exhumations of bodies of military dead, even for the purpose of reinterment in the same place, are prohibited in the war zone, with the exception of those with which the service d'etat civil aux armees is exclusively charged in the carrying out of the operation of grouping the isolated graves, liberating private property, repairing of cemeteries, or for reasons of hygiene or of public health.

"This zone is bounded by the limits:

"Southwest of the Department of the Somme.

"West and south of the Department of the Oise.

"West and south of the districts of Meaux, Coulommiers, Provins.

"South of the Departments of the Marne and of the Meuse.

"West and south of the Department of the Vosges.

"West of the territory of Belfort.

"2. Transportation of bodies: (a) Transportation of the bodies of military dead, by whatsoever means, is absolutely forbidden in the zone defined in paragraph 1 of the present directions, whether this transport is to take place from one point to another in this zone, proceeding from this zone to any other locality in France, or vice versa.

"(b) All transport into France of bodies of military dead buried in foreign countries is likewise prohibited.

"(c) All transport of bodies of military dead in French territory situated south or west of the zone of military operations can be authorized and effected under the same conditions as in time of peace, it being understood that the transport shall take place exclusively from one point to another in this territory.

"(c) Until new orders are issued, no transport of military dead can be effected at the expense of the State; in consequence, no reimbursement can be made to requests presented by families who have undertaken such transportation themselves.

"The present directions, which are only of a provisional character, annul and replace the general directions of October 2, 1917, on the exhumations and transportation of military dead or of civilians during the war; it repeals, therefore, the restrictions which were enacted by these former directions in that which concerns the exhumations and transportation of bodies of civilians."

[Cable from Pershing No. 2184, Mar. 1, 1919. Confidential.]

"Paris Temps publishes text of proposed law submitted in chamber, which, if passed, would prohibit for a period of three years the disinterment and transportation of bodies of officers and soldiers buried in France. Existing French regulations to same effect might be modified in favor of Americans by ministerial authority, but after passage of law now proposed it is believed that such dispensation would be much more difficult to obtain. Proposed law also provides that disinterments necessitated by remaking cemeteries and assembling isolated graves will be made exclusively by French civil administration, which it is feared will increase difficulty of preserving identificatons. It is believed that if any representations to be made to French Government they should be made now and through diplomatic rather than military channels."

[Cable to Pershing No. 3716, June 30, 1919. Confidential.]

"Reference P 2256 paragraph 1 and A 3615, Secretary of State advises that French Government is not in a position to render a different ruling in regard to the return of the bodies of American soldiers who have died while prisoners of war in Germany or in north Russia than that governing the return, after a period of three years, of the bodies of French soldiers. The French foreign office adds, however, that as soon as the restrictions on the transportation of bodies shall be lifted the French Government will again consider this matter, with a view to affording satisfaction to American families concerned. In view of this development your further views and recommendations as to the disposition of American dead in north Russia and in Germany are desired. It has been suggested that the best policy would be to return to the United States without intermediate interment American dead in territory referred to."

[Cable to Connor No. 1694, Oct. 30, 1919.]

"Paragraph 3. French ministerial restrictions on removal and transportation of dead buried in France, published June 19 last, indicate that the most rigid provisions apply only to zone military operations, and that authority for removal from other parts of France can be obtained. Ascertain from what areas French authorities will consent for immediate removal of American dead and transfer to United States. It is estimated that 18,800 bodies are buried in France exclusive of the zone of military operations, and that of those about 11,000 have been requested to be returned by the next of kin. It is desired to begin the removal as soon as arrangements can be made. Expedite report."

[Cable from Connor No. S-2619. Dec. 22, 1919.]

"Paragraph 1. The French minister of the interior advises these headquarters that the council of ministers has authorized the immediate removal and shipment of bodies of American soldiers buried in France outside of the old zone of the armies; but pending the grouping and identification of bodies of French dead the French Government has forbidden the removal of bodies of French soldiers from the old zone of the armies, and consequently it is obliged to delay the authorization for exhumation and removal of American dead from the old zone of the armies so long as such privilege can not be extended to families of French dead.

"Subparagraph A. It is probable that the present ministerial decree prohibiting the removal of bodies from the old zone of the armies for a period of three years may be modified by the French Parliament so as to permit the removal of bodies at an earlier date."

Mr. PARRISH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from New York [Mr. CALDWELL] be given three minutes. I want to ask him a question, in view of the question raised by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DYER] a moment ago.

Mr. KING. Reserving the right to object, if the gentleman will couple with that request for one minute for myself I shall not object.

Mr. PARRISH. I will make it five minutes, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from New York [Mr. CALDWELL] be given five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PARRISH. A few moments ago the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DYER] made the statement on the floor—and I am sure he is honest in it—that he had the impression or that it had been stated that certain bodies had been removed from France and that parents in some instances had been permitted, through influence, to go to France and bring back the bodies of their dead. If that is true I think that the country ought to know it right now, and if it is not true I think the country ought also to know it, because in my mind there would be nothing more disturbing and nothing that would have a greater tendency to cause unrest in this country than to have a false report of this kind go unchallenged from the floor of this House.

Mr. CALDWELL. I will say to the gentleman that, so far as my information goes, that is not true, that no bodies of American soldier dead have been disinterred and returned to this country through influence. I have made specific inquiry and am so informed. I do not know where the gentleman got his information.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CALDWELL. In a moment.

Mr. PARRISH. Has there been a single instance where the bodies of soldiers have been returned? Have any bodies been removed from France, through influence or in any other way, since the armistice or before?

Mr. CALDWELL. Not that I know of.

Mr. PARRISH. I am not saying this in criticism of what the gentleman from Missouri said. I am strictly in favor of the return of these bodies as soon as it is possible.

Mr. DYER. I have information, I will say to the gentleman, that among those who have been returned was the son of Gen. George H. Harries.

Mr. PARRISH. I will state this, that about two months ago, in response to a request from the ex-district judge in my district who was very anxious to go to France to bring back the remains of his son, I went to see the Secretary of War, and I was told personally by him that there had not been a single body removed from France; and that there would not be any until permission was given to remove the bodies of all back to this country at the expense of the Government.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. CALDWELL. I will yield first to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. KING].

Mr. KING. I want one minute later on.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Is it not true that they brought some bodies back of Wisconsin soldiers and Maine soldiers?

Mr. CALDWELL. I am advised that the bodies of soldiers killed and those who died in Siberia were brought home, and I have information to the effect that some from Italy were brought home. But, as I understand it, none of the soldiers who were buried in France have been brought home.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The whole difficulty is that France does not want it done. Is not that it?

Mr. CALDWELL. Yes; that is the difficulty. I would like to explain to the House, if I have time, the situation as I understand it.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended five minutes, so that he can make the explanation, in which we are all interested.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. CALDWELL] be extended five minutes. Is there objection? There was no objection.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Speaker, immediately after conditions got so that it was possible to remove the bodies of American soldiers who had been buried in France, the War Department began making preparations to remove those bodies where the families concerned were desirous of having the bodies returned to this country, and circulars were sent out to all the families of the dead, asking what their desire in the matter was, and so far as I know every family where a boy was lost received such a notice. There was a bill introduced in the French Chamber of Deputies, which was on its way toward passage, that was going to limit the authority to remove the bodies of American soldiers from the soil of France; but the War Department heard of it and cabled, through the Secretary of State, to the American representative in Paris and asked them to present a protest to the French Government against the passage of that act. As I understand it, the American minister did lay such a protest before the French Government and the bill was not passed. It was withdrawn.

Subsequently another bill was introduced, but not pressed for passage; but in the meantime negotiations have gone forward, with the result that approximately 11,000 of those bodies that are in the territory outside of the Army area are now being brought home out of a total of approximately 20,000 so interred—the remainder are left at the request of their families.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CALDWELL. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. I understand the French Government entered into a contract with the Government of the United States, dated about the 18th of December last year, in which they agree that the bodies of the dead American soldiers should be permitted to be brought back, and since the contract was entered into the minister of foreign affairs—or whatever his title may be in France—has issued an edict modifying the terms of the contract without any consideration being given to the American Government in the matter, and that the matter is in that condition to-day.

Mr. CALDWELL. The gentleman may be right about it, but my understanding was that the only consent granted by the French Government up to date has been consent to remove the bodies of those buried outside the war area.

Mr. PARRISH. I want to say right there that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN], according to the information I have from the Secretary of War, is correct, with the exception that the original contract provided that the removal of the bodies should be subject to the health and police regulations of France.

Mr. CALDWELL. Yes. Perhaps the House would be willing to listen to an excerpt from The Casket, the source of practically all this propaganda which has caused this uneasiness among the people who have relatives buried in France, and with the permission of the House I will ask that the Clerk read this extract from The Casket. It is the official magazine of the undertakers.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I do not know what the attitude of the gentleman from New York is. I take it he is heartily in favor of bringing the bodies of these dead soldiers back to America.

Mr. CALDWELL. I am——

Mr. DYER. I have heard that the War Department is not in sympathy with that. I do not see that it does any good to read what some publication has to say on the subject. The American people want the bodies of these boys brought back, and that is what we want done. [Applause.]

Mr. CALDWELL. If the gentleman objects to the reading of this article I will not send it up.

Mr. DYER. I do object.

Mr. CALDWELL. I am in favor of the return of every body where the families want the bodies returned, and I am satisfied, from all I have been able to learn from the Secretary of War, that he and the other people in the War Department are as anxious as we are.

Mr. DYER. If they are as anxious as the American people are, these bodies will be brought back. If the administration is in earnest about this thing France will yield if this Government insists upon it.

Mr. BRAND. Gen. Harris, The Adjutant General, is from Georgia and personally known to me. I do not think the information which the gentleman has obtained and given expression to is correct. When I heard the statement made by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DYER] I promptly called up Senator HARRIS, the general's brother, and asked him if it was true that his brother's son's remains had been removed from France, and he replied that it was not true. I know that Gen. Harris is an honorable man and an upright officer, and that he would be the last man connected with the Army to bring his own son's body home and deny this right to other parents. His son's death was intensely mourned by him and his friends, though, like the soldier that he is, he bore his great sorrow and endured his calamity in silence.

Mr. DYER. It was Gen. Harries who was referred to.

Mr. BRAND. The gentleman said Gen. Harris, and I supposed he was talking about Adjt. Gen. Harris, of Georgia.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HASTINGS. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman have one minute more. I want to ask him a question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from New York be extended one minute. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HASTINGS. Why is it that France objects to the return of our soldier dead to this country?

Mr. KING. Will the gentleman permit me to answer that?

Mr. HASTINGS. I shall be glad to have both gentlemen answer it; first, the gentleman from New York and then the gentleman from Illinois. I should be glad to have more than one answer. I am heartily in favor of the return of every one of our dead soldiers to this country.

Mr. CALDWELL. So am I, wherever their families want them returned; but in our family we want our boys to rest there—to let the tree lie where it fell. Now, the gentleman has asked why France raises any objection. There are three reasons: The first reason, and a very proper one, is that in a great many instances American boys were with French boys. Many of them were killed by high-explosive shells, and in making the interment they picked up such of the remains as were left and put them in the ground, marking part of the ground as the grave of the American soldier and part of the ground as the grave of the French soldier, and in many instances the bodies of animals killed at the same time were buried with the bodies of the men, and under such circumstances it is only right and proper that no attempt should be made to disturb the remains. Under the leave granted me to extend my remarks, I print herewith the most despicable piece of propaganda that has ever been brought to my attention. I am sure that the good men of the vocation will resent it, as do all that read it who are not of the ilk of the ghouls who would profit by the sorrow of the bereaved families of our valient dead:

[From the Casket, Sept. 1, 1919. (A magazine of expensive make-up, published in New York.)]

BETWEEN YOU AND ME.

(By S. G. Q.)

Suppose, Mr. Funeral Director, that upon one of the few bright, sunshiny mornings we have vouchsafed to us in this year of peace, strikers, and high prices, some one were to come into your office and tell you that he had a scheme for increasing the number of funerals this year by more than 50,000; what would you do about it?

WHAT ARE YOU GOING TO DO ABOUT IT?

Most likely you would rush out wildly into the street and shout that you had a dangerous lunatic in your place and wouldn't somebody please send the police in a hurry before he murdered everyone in sight. Or maybe you would invite your visitor to go to the country asylum, or possibly you would ask him where he got it with prohibition so prominent in our midst and the Anti-Saloon League tracking even poor, inoffensive 2.75 per cent to its lair.

Anyhow you would think that the plan for creating all this extra business must necessarily be mixed up with plague, pestilence, and famines, battle, murder, and sudden death and would refuse to have anything to do with it.

But, Mr. Funeral Director, with your neatly appointed office and your not entirely paid for motor equipment, this offer is being made you in all seriousness and without the killing of a single heart. What are you going to do about it?

Between you and me, this is a plain business talk, a matter of dollars and sense, plus sentiment.

In alien soil there lie more than 50,000 American men who died in battle or of disease during their tour of duty abroad.

* * * * * * *

For nearly every American soldier returned some funeral director will be called upon to perform the necessary duties of reception and burial.

Extra business, gentlemen, legitimate, patriotic; kindly sympathetic, remunerative extra business. No increased death rate, no additional number of widows and orphans. Only the final laying away of America's sons in the bosom of their dear motherland.

The Congress pauses in its votes to hear the expression of the public's wishes.

What are you going to do about it?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CALDWELL. I ask for two minutes more, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. CRAMTON. I believe the House is gradually getting a poorer understanding of this situation, and I am obliged to object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. KING] has one minute.

Mr. KING. The gentleman from Oklahoma has asked a very pertinent question. I think one of the reasons why the French people insist upon holding these bodies over there is one of the most mercenary reasons I ever heard of. I heard it several times when I happened to be across. They are constructing great automobile tourist routes through that section of the country. I do not know how many American dead there are there, but the French people expect that every American family who can raise the money, who have relatives buried in France, will come over there and visit the graves of their dead. I think it is one of the greatest national outrages that was ever perpetrated against us, and it seems to me that if the State Department would move and move effectively the French Government would not insist upon these orders that have been issued.

Mr. PELL. Mr. Speaker, there can be no doubt in anyone's mind that the desires of the families should be considered and carried out wherever possible, but I feel that we should most strongly express our disgust and contempt for the mercenary propaganda now being carried on by a group of undertakers.

"Extra business" for them, they say. What do they care for the wounds reopened, the harrowed feelings of parents and friends; it is all "extra business" for them.

We are told that the American people want those bodies returned. How many fathers will really want this new funeral over which the undertakers gloat when they realize that on them will fall the horrid task of telling the boy's mother that she had best not see the dead face of her son. There are things that we know but should not see, and this is one of them.

By unanimous consent, Mr. CALDWELL, Mr. DYER, and Mr. PARRISH were given leave to revise and extend their remarks in the RECORD.

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY.

The SPEAKER. To-day is Calendar Wednesday. The Clerk will call the roll of committees.

INDIAN CITIZENSHIP AND TRIBAL PROPERTY.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, on last Calendar Wednesday, because of the illness of the ranking minority member of the Committee on Indian Affairs, we were unable to proceed with a measure that we desired to take up at that time. The gentleman is able to be here to-day, and we ask unanimous consent to take up H. R. 288 and consider it now.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that the House consider the bill referred to. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the title of the bill (H. R. 288) for the purpose of conferring citizenship upon Indians, segregation of Indian tribal property, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. This bill is on the Union Calendar. The House automatically resolves itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for its consideration.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill, with Mr. MADDEN in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That every Indian born within the territorial limits of the United States is hereby declared to be a citizen of the United States and shall have the benefit of and be subject to the laws, both civil and criminal, of the State or Territory in which he may reside, without in any manner impairing or otherwise affecting the right of any such Indian to tribal or other property.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Interior shall within one year after the approval of this act cause to be made a complete and final roll of all persons entitled to membership in each tribe of Indians to whom allotments of land have been heretofore or which hereafter may be made, and no person whose name does not appear on such membership roll as approved by said Secretary shall thereafter participate in any benefits derived from the tribal funds or other property of any such tribe of Indians.

Upon the completion of such final roll of members the said Secretary shall determine and designate all members having a quantum of less than one-half Indian blood and shall issue patents in fee to all able-bodied and mentally competent Indians over 21 years of age of less than one-half Indian blood for the lands which have been heretofore or which may be hereafter allotted to them. And any Indian who has been heretofore or who may be hereafter allotted lands from the public domain who is 21 years of age, able-bodied and mentally competent, and of less than one-half Indian blood shall likewise be issued a patent in fee to the lands so allotted: Provided, That the personal property of any such Indian, of less than one-half Indian blood, on January 1, 1922, and his other individual property on January 1, 1932, shall become subject to taxation by the State or Territory within which the same is located: Provided, however, That the stipulations of any treaty, or agreement relating to the nontaxation of allotted lands, shall not be impaired or otherwise adversely affected by the issuance of the patent in fee simple as provided for herein.

SEC. 3. That upon the completion of such final membership roll the Secretary of the Interior, within 90 days thereafter, shall cause a pro rata division to be made of the funds belonging to all tribes of Indians to whom allotments of land have been made, and from time to time cause any additional funds to be prorated which may have been derived from the proceeds of sale or other disposition of the tribal property belonging to such tribe of Indians. Such pro rata shares shall be credited to the individual members whose names appear on the final membership roll of the tribe and held in trust until such time as in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, or as otherwise hereinafter directed, the pro rata shares may be paid to the beneficiaries or expended for their benefit upon their application therefor: Provided, That during the time which any of said funds are held in trust by the United States the same shall bear interest at 4 per cent per annum, but in no case at a less rate than is now provided by law respecting such fund: Provided further, That within 90 days after the completion of the final membership roll of any tribe of Indians the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to pay, upon their application therefor, to all able-bodied and mentally competent Indians over 21 years of age having a quantum of less than one-half Indian blood their pro rata shares of all tribal funds, after deducting any portion which may have been previously paid, together with any other funds which may be found to be due them, and thereafter to pay to other able-bodied and mentally competent members of less than one-half Indian blood their shares, upon application, after they reach the age of 21 years; and within 90 days after the completion of the said final membership roll the said Indians of less than one-half Indian blood, upon receipt by them of their pro rata share of tribal funds then due, shall thereafter be free from any and all restrictions or supervision by the Federal Government: And provided further, That nothing contained in this act shall be construed to impose restrictions heretofore or which hereafter may be removed from Indian lands or other property, nor to prohibit the Secretary of the Interior from removing restrictions upon such allottees as in his opinion may be expedient.

SEC. 4. That all or any portion of the pro rata share of the funds or other property placed to the credit of or found to be due to any member of a tribe who shall die intestate which remains unpaid at the date of his death shall descend to his heirs and personal representatives in accordance with the laws of the State or Territory relating to such funds or other property.

SEC. 5. That where allotments of land have been made to any tribe of Indians and there remain certain members of such tribe who at the time such allotments were made were legally entitled and did not receive an allotment by reason of there being an insufficiency of tribal land, the Secretary of the Interior may determine the equities in such cases and may credit such individual members with an equitable share of the tribal funds in lieu of land before making the pro rata division of such funds to the members of the tribe entitled thereto as provided in section 3 of this act.

SEC. 6. That for the further purpose of determining the competency of Indians and placing them on their individual responsibility the President of the United States shall appoint three commissions, each commission to be composed of three persons, one of whom shall be a member of an Indian tribe, another a member of the Board of Indian Commissioners, and another to be designated from the Indian Service, the last of whom shall have a civil-service status.

SEC. 7. That each commission shall organize by electing one of its membership chairman and another secretary, and each commissioner shall receive a salary of not to exceed $2,500 per annum and expenses while actually engaged in the discharge of the duties imposed hereunder, and not to exceed $50,000 of the amount of $135,000 carried under the head "General expenses of the Indian Service," at page 13, of the Indian appropriation bill which passed the House on January 22, 1918, is hereby made available for such purpose. The term of office of each commissioner shall be two years, during which time such work shall be completed, at the end of which time all of such commissions shall be abolished.

SEC. 8. That it shall be the duty of such commission to visit in person each Indian reservation and other community in the United States where Indians have been or may hereafter be allotted lands and whenever practicable the home of each such Indian of one-half or more Indian blood with a view to establishing the capabilities of each, removing restrictions from upon his lands and other property, and delivering to him a patent in fee if he is adjudged to be competent by such commission.

SEC. 9. That each commission shall make a detailed report to Congress annually on the first Monday in December setting forth the progress of the work, showing the number of applications received, those favorably acted upon, and those rejected on each Indian reservation and in each community where lands have been or may hereafter be allotted to Indians, and shall further report the number of reservations and communities where lands have been, or may hereafter be, allotted to Indians but not reached by their investigations, and any other data that may assist Congress to deal intelligently with the question of competency and incompetency of Indians.

SEC. 10. That the provisions of this act shall not apply to the Five Civilized Tribes nor to the Osage Tribe of Indians in Oklahoma.

The following committee amendments were read:

Page 1, line 10, after the word "That," insert "in all cases where a final roll has not heretofore been made and approved."

Page 1, line 11, strike out the words "one year" and insert in lieu thereof the words "two years."

Page 2, line 11, strike out the word "and," after the word "able-bodied," and insert "Indians not adjudged"; and in the same line strike out the word "competent" and insert the word "incompetent."

Page 2, line 17, after the word "and," insert "not adjudged incompetent," and strike out the word "competent" after the word "mentally."

Page 2, line 23, strike out the words "or Territory."

Page 3, line 25, after the words "able-bodied," insert "Indians not adjudged"; and after the word "mentally" strike out the words "competent Indians" and insert the word "incompetent."

Page 4, line 5, strike out the words "and mentally competent."

Page 4, line 24, strike out the words "or Territory relating to" and insert in lieu thereof "in which."

Page 4, line 25, after the word "property," add the words "are located."

Page 6, line 1, strike out the words "bill which" and insert the words "act approved" in lieu thereof.

Page 6, line 2, strike out the words "passed the House on January 22, 1918," and insert in lieu thereof the words "June 30, 1919 (Public, No. 3)."

Page 6, line 7, strike out the numeral "8" and insert the numeral "7."

Page 6, line 12, after the word "each," insert the words "and such commission is authorized to remove"; and strike out the word "removing," in the same line.

Page 6, line 13, strike out the word "upon," after the word "from."

Page 6, line 14, strike out the words "delivering to him a patent in fee if he is adjudged to be" and insert "the Secretary of the Interior is authorized and directed to deliver to each Indian so adjudged to be competent, a patent in fee."

Page 6, line 15, strike out the words "competent by such commission."

"SEC. 9. That any Indian allottee entitled to a patent in fee under the provisions of this act who owes money to the Government from reimbursable funds or other sources must make final settlement of his indebtedness, and on his neglect or refusal to do so the amount of such indebtedness shall be deducted from any tribal or other funds that may be due him. In the event that the tribal or other fund is insufficient to cancel the indebtedness the amount remaining unpaid shall be a first lien on his allotment, and the fact of such lien shall be recited on the face of each patent in fee issued and the amount of the lien set forth thereon, and the receipt of the Secretary of the Interior, or of the officer, agent, or employee duly authorized by him for that purpose, for the payment of the amount assessed against any allotment as herein provided shall, when duly recorded by the recorder of deeds in the county where the land is located, operate as a satisfaction of such lien."

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this bill is, as its title indicates, to confer citizenship on certain Indians. This measure has been under discussion by the Committee on Indian Affairs at various times during the last two years. It is admitted by the committee that it is a difficult matter upon which to legislate. Therefore that difficulty, in great measure, accounts for the great number of amendments which have been proposed since the original draft of the bill was made.

Everyone, I believe, desires to have the Indian, when he is in a competent state, become an American citizen and possess all the rights of an American citizen. There are no people in existence who have a better right to be citizens than have the Indians. But one of the most difficult things we have discovered, at least within the five years I have been serving on the Indian Committee, is to separate the competent or the incompetent Indian, or any kind of an Indian, from the care and protection with which the Indian Bureau insists on surrounding him. For myself, I believe that this is proper legislation for the Indian. There are many Indians who are able-bodied, competent men, and who would successfully work out their own existence and their own salvation if they were permitted to do so. My belief is that one of the reasons why they do not do it is because they are surrounded with conditions which make it unnecessary for them to labor. That, of course, contributes to their indolence and carelessness, and they feel their affairs will be handled for them in such a way as to not interfere with their existence, and so they are not brought face to face with the economic conditions of the country, and do not know the value which would come to them if they were forced to labor for their living.

What this bill attempts to do is to make citizens of every able-bodied Indian, no matter what per cent of aboriginal blood he has in his veins from full blood down. Immediately this becomes a law it makes every Indian of half-blood or less a citizen and throws him on his own resources, without the care of the bureau, so far as his personal relations to the country are concerned. It makes him a voter and gives him a right to have the same representation as any other citizen. It does not, however, release him wholly from the care of the bureau, because if the Indian happens to have a tribal relation in which there is property or money, that money must be taken care of as a tribal proposition by the bureau, and will be distributed to the Indian some time, even though he be a citizen. That keeps him now in contact with the Indian Bureau, but it would have no supervision over his action if this bill becomes law. If restrictions are eliminated entirely, he becomes a citizen, to all intents and purposes, the same as any other citizen.

I believe on the whole that this is a splendid measure, and my estimate is that within the coming two years, if this should become a law, 50,000 or 60,000 Indians who are now wholly responsible to the Government of the United States and are under restrictions, even to the most limited extent, will reach full citizenship. Now, if an Indian is working on his farm and wants to buy a horse, a plow, or a wagon, or any implement for farm or garden, he is not able to do it without going to the superintendent or foreman on the reservation and getting permission to purchase it. That applies to the simplest thing he deems necessary to carry on his work.

Our investigation shows that this has made the Indian lazy; probably he was lazy to start with. One thing we found, and that is it is very difficult to get an Indian to work. For years it was difficult to get Indians to work on the irrigation schemes, but they have now discovered they can get a little money from this source, and since the wages have been so high they have done a little work. My thought is that the quicker we separate the Indian from the bureau and throw him on his own resources and let him sink or swim the sooner we will develop a working force throughout the country from these men, who have apparently no interest in life whatever except to exist. That is the reason I particularly favor this legislation. I think it is a humanitarian thing. I think the quicker we separate from the bureau every able-bodied Indian the better, whether or not he is able to recite the multiplication table; if he is able to work and earn a living, he ought to be separated from bureaucratic care and made a citizen, to take rank with the thousands of other able-bodied men in this country who are not literary giants but have strong arms and are able to work and earn a living.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNYDER. Certainly.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The other day the Committee on Indian Affairs, in the Indian appropriation bill, reported an item of appropriation for various things in connection with the Choctaw Indians of Mississippi. It went out on a point of order, but was reinstated afterwards by amendment. Those Indians are citizens. They have not been under the care of the Indian Office. Then we insisted on taking them under our care. Does the gentleman think that those Indians that had citizenship and were under no supervision of the Indian Office felt that they had to work in order to live, and would not we do the same thing with these Indians?

Mr. SNYDER. In reply I would state that those Choctaw Mississippi Indians ought not to have been taken back under the control of the Government. They ought to have been forced to work out their own existence, or the State of Mississippi should have been forced to take care of her own paupers.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The same committee that reported this bill reported that provision in the Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. SNYDER. That is true.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Does the gentleman think that if restrictions are removed and the rights given, the Indians in some localities in the country will act differently from the Choctaw Indians of Mississippi?

Mr. SNYDER. I have no knowledge that that might not happen in isolated cases here and there, as it did in Mississippi. But I believe that in the main that would not occur. Here is a situation where a State apparently offers no assistance in the direction of taking care of its own citizens who become poor and helpless, but yet it has strength enough through its legislative representatives to come here to the House and get an appropriation which permits the bureau to take back under its control citizens of the United States, to which I object. I do not believe in it.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I understand the gentleman's position.

Mr. SNYDER. I do not think we should take that case as a sample and say that all of the rest are coming back to do the same thing.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I do not know whether the gentleman would know or not, but can he tell whether there is any considerable body of Indians in the United States anywhere that does not receive appropriations in some way, for some purpose, from the Government of the United States, or who are not seeking such?

Mr. SNYDER. I do not know of any segregated body of Indians in the United States which is not receiving some support from the Government. I do know, however, that it is not the intention of the committee to present measures to this House which will increase those activities among the Indians in the immediate future. This proposition carries no appropriation, and it is the belief of the committee, after careful consideration, that it will diminish the number of Indians under restriction and increase the number of able-bodied, competent Indians who will be an assistance to themselves and to the country in general if it becomes a law.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNYDER. Yes.

Mr. HAWLEY. In section 9 it is provided that if the Indian owes money to the Government, which his portion of any tribal funds will not pay, when the patent is issued to him, a reservation shall be made in the patent of the amount, which would be in the nature of a lien upon his land. I suppose that would be in the nature of a mortgage lien.

Mr. SNYDER. Under the reimbursable scheme for industrial purposes money is regularly loaned to Indians for the purchase, for instance, of horses, or harness, or a wagon, or something of that sort. If the Indian should be declared competent, having contractual relations with the Government this means that he would have to liquidate at that time, if he owed the Government anything, or that it would still be a charge against him which could be collected from his allotment.

Mr. HAWLEY. My question goes to another point: Suppose the Indian has 200 acres of land allotted to him and owed the Government $500 or $1,000, that his funds on hand will not pay. Will the Secretary of the Interior sell out his entire land, or only such portions of it as would be necessary to pay the amount due?

Mr. SNYDER. What this contemplates is that when that transformation takes place, if the Indian owes the Government anything when he becomes a citizen, it would still be a debt against him that would be secured at the time.

Mr. HAWLEY. The point I am endeavoring to arrive at is this: The Secretary issues him a patent stating he owes the Government $1,000, and gives him 200 acres of land. If 50 acres are sold, it would more than pay the $1,000, and if the whole amount of land patented was sold, he would then be deprived of his homestead. Does the Secretary of the Interior intend to sell only such proportion of his allotment as may be necessary to pay the debt, or will he sell the Indian out altogether under this language?

Mr. SNYDER. My understanding of the language is—and this is after consideration of the section—that it would be, of course, the intention of the Secretary of the Interior to leave the Indian who has been declared a citizen all of the property he could after paying his debts, and if he did not have sufficient funds to pay the whole debt, he would have a lien upon his whole allotment, not on a part of it. He would not sell a piece of it to pay him off. That must be left somewhat to the discretion of the person who is to make the contract at the time the transfer is made.

Mr. HAWLEY. It would seem to do an injustice to the Indian, if he owed the Government $1,000, which is only one-fourth of the sale value of his allotment, to sell out the whole allotment to pay the $1,000.

Mr. SNYDER. I do not think there is any such intention as that. Of course, the committee would have no objection to having that section written in such a way as would safeguard the interest of the Indian to that extent.

Mr. DUNBAR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNYDER. Yes.

Mr. DUNBAR. What are the qualifications required of an Indian which, if he possesses them, would now entitle him to become a citizen of the United States?

Mr. SNYDER. I would say to the gentleman that the various competency commissions seem to have different ideas with regard to that. There is no fixed rule. The theory is that a competency commission goes into a reservation and they are supposed to see the individual Indian and talk matters over with him, to see that he is a man who keeps his property up in good shape and whether or not he is making a living. It is not specified that he must read and write the English language or anything of that kind; but he must be an able-bodied man, who is a decent man in the community—a man who would be able to demonstrate that he could take care of himself and those who belong to him.

Mr. DUNBAR. Have many availed themselves of the privileges afforded them?

Mr. SNYDER. The difficulty has been that the Indian has not had an opportunity to become competent, and we have had to send these competency commissions into the communities in order to give the Indians an opportunity to become competent. Of course, this also is true, and the House has been advised of it on many occasions. Then, there is the question of taxation which comes in. The Indian is not anxious to pay taxes, and therefore he is not rushing to become a citizen. If this bill becomes a law, Indians of a certain class can be declared competent and will be declared competent and become citizens whether they want to or not.

Mr. CARTER. And ought to.

Mr. SNYDER. And they ought to.

Mr. CARSS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNYDER. Yes.

Mr. CARSS. Under this bill I note that the Indian will become subject to the law, both civil and criminal, of the State in which he resides. Will that in any way interfere with the right of the Indian on the reservation?

Mr. SNYDER. When the Indian becomes a citizen under this law he will have no separate rights on the reservation any more than any other citizen of the United States. He would become a citizen of the United States, and he will be subject to all of the laws of the State in which he lives.

Mr. CARSS. Then these treaties which permit him to hunt on the reservation will be annulled?

Mr. SNYDER. They will be annulled. He will have no more right to hunt than the gentleman has.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield for a short question? There is a small settlement of Indians, Pottawotami, in my district, and they have been exercising the right of citizenship for a number of years. They will not be affected by this bill?

Mr. SNYDER. No; not if they are citizens, they will not be affected by this bill.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. So that this bill, where it refers to tribal——

Mr. SNYDER. This refers to all Indians from full-blood down who can be made competent, and it does not make any——

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. If they are not citizens, then this bill——

Mr. SNYDER. Then this bill makes them citizens under certain conditions, no matter where they are. I yield to my colleague, Mr. CARTER. How much time does the gentleman desire?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has 42 minutes remaining.

Mr. SNYDER. I yield 20 minutes to my colleague from Oklahoma, Mr CARTER.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I do not think I shall use the entire 20 minutes. This bill undertakes to do three things, in the main. First, to give to every Indian in the United States citizenship; that is to say, the right of suffrage, jury service, and so forth. Then it undertakes to separate the competent from the incompetent Indians, first by relieving the Indians of less than half Indian blood of all restrictions upon their individual property. Third, for the appointment of competency commissions to go among the Indians and separate the competent from the incompetent among those of half and more than half Indian blood and release them from Government supervision. The Indian citizen's rights under existing law are so complicated, so anomalous, and so inconsistent as to make any general definition of his civil rights practically impossible. Now let me just give you an instance or two of these inconsistencies. In States like Indiana, Illinois, and many others full and independent citizenship, free and untrammelled from any restrictions whatever, is enjoyed, while other States, such as South Dakota, Oklahoma, and so forth, grant him all privileges of citizenship of both the State and the United States, except that restrictions are retained on his Indian estate, the sale of his property, and so forth. Many other States which I might mention deny to these aborigines of the country, no matter how intelligent, any citizenship rights at all.

Many peculiar situations exist, such as that in the State of North Carolina, where Indians are full citizens of the State but have not been granted citizenship in the parent Government, the United States. So you will see by these comparisons that an Indian living in one State may have a complete reversal of his civil rights, and completely all citizenship rights, by simply stepping across the line of an adjoining State, and this bill in a measure rectifies that. The chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs has just told you that some Indians do not desire to become citizens, because under present law when he acquires citizenship he is also required to pay taxes. It is true, Mr. Chairman, that while the Indian may not be so fast in accepting the white man's virtues he has an abundant capacity to take on his vices. [Laughter.] There are not a great many of them who take this view. A great majority of the Indians desire to be graduated into full citizenship with fee patents, certificates of competency, and removal of all restrictions at the earliest possible moment. But we have found some few other competent Indians who objected to fee patents because their lands and other property would thereby be made taxable. They are only a small minority, but they are there, part of the problem, and must be dealt with.

I found one Indian, a Yakima Indian Reservation man, blue eyed, light haired, probably about a thirty-second degree Indian. He complained about the manner in which the agent was leasing his allotment, which was very valuable, and I said, "What degree of blood are you?" He told me it was very small. I said, "Why do not you get a fee patent and have your property free?" He said he did not want a fee patent. He said, "If I did I would have to pay taxes on that valuable property." I said, "If I had anything to do with you, my friend, you would get a fee patent right off the bat, because when you become so shrewd that you are willing to give up some of your valuable rights in order to avoid taxation you have assimilated enough of the white man's civilization to take on some of his burdens."

So far as the Indian himself is concerned, I do not believe there is sufficient justification for making the issuance of a certificate of competency and delivery of a fee patent a necessary complement of citizenship.

The Indian is the native citizen of this country, and if anybody has a right to the privilege of voting, jury service, and so forth, certainly it ought not to be denied him. I think I can safely say a very large majority of the Indians want this bill passed. The only objection that has ever come has been through a misunderstanding over this very matter of taxation of lands. Some of the incompetent Indians were opposed to the bill because, on account of the present law, they naturally connect any granting of citizenship with the taxation of property, from which a conclusion might be expected to follow to the effect that if citizenship were granted him he will have to pay taxes on his property, perhaps nonproductive, and over which he understands this bill does not give him full control.

No matter what citizenship rights may be given him, this bill does not provide for the taxation of property of any Indian whose full restrictions it fails to remove. It provides for the taxation only of the Indians of less than half Indian blood and those competent ones whose restrictions may hereafter be removed by a competency commission which might be done in accordance with existing law.

I will confess that the blood line for a division between competent and incompetent among Indians is not an ideal line of demarcation, but there is this to be said in its favor, and we have this often in the past. In order to constitute an Indian of less than half Indian blood it is necessary for both of his parents to have had some degree of white blood. That is to say, an Indian of less than half Indian blood must have had both mother and father with white blood in their veins. Otherwise he would necessarily be more than one-half Indian blood. That being the case, this fellow of less than half Indian blood must have been raised by a mother with some degree of white blood and in nine cases out of ten she was educated and had taken on the civilization of the white man before this child was even born.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER. I will.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. If I understand the gentleman, he spoke of an Indian who was of the thirty-second degree——

Mr. CARTER. I am not sure about that.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Suppose the mother of the Indian had a very small proportion of white blood. The fact the Indian's father and mother both had white blood in them would not make a half blood if there was not a greater proportion——

Mr. CARTER. In order to have a half-blood Indian one of two things must be true: Either one of the parents must be of the full blood or both parents must have white blood; so it follows that in order to produce a person of less than one-half Indian blood each parent must have some degree of white blood.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Conceding a half?

Mr. CARTER. There you find the distinction between a half-blood and a less than half-blood. The half-blood may have had a full-blood Indian mother and white father, with no Indian blood at all, which would be impossible with any person of less than half Indian blood.

So that this child of less than one-half Indian blood must essentially have been raised not by Indian parents but by white parents. He has had the advantages of the white man's civilization by living in the white man's home with parents of white blood, and is very likely better educated than his next door white neighbor's child. Therefore we should no longer supervise him, and he ought to be willing to share his portion of taxation, unless there is some treaty or agreement provision which precludes it. Not only that, every competent Indian in the United States, no matter what his degree of blood, ought to be relieved of any further supervision by the Federal Government. The Government ought to take its hands off of him and let him be a man. That is true whether or not the fellow wants to be a citizen. And whether it were true or not, 90 per cent ought not to be held back because 10 per cent object to it. When an Indian has reached the state of civilization and says, "I do not want to pay taxes," and he has valuable property, it is more important to make that fellow a citizen than it is to make a fellow a citizen who is clamoring for it, because we occasionally hear of a case of an Indian who wants citizenship in order to squander his property in riotous living.

Mr. TILSON. Section 8 of the bill, before the amendment has been added, provides for the appointment of three commissions, and the powers and responsibilities of those commissioners seem to me very great. I wish to get the benefit of the gentleman's experience and knowledge of these matters as to what he thinks about the carrying out of those powers and responsibilities of the commissioners. The gentleman will notice there are to be three commissions, that they are to go to all the Indian reservations, and, so far as possible, they are to go into the homes of the Indians, and they are there to pass upon their competency and to remove the restrictions upon their land, and the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to deliver each Indian so adjudged a patent in fee. That is a great power, a great responsibility, and I wondered as to what those three commissions would do when sent out among a great number of Indians to try to examine each and pass upon his competency?

Mr. CARTER. Well, as the gentleman will note from the bill, the Secretary of the Interior is authorized and directed to deliver to each Indian so adjudged to be competent a patent in fee. That leaves with the Secretary the issuance of the patent. The gentleman may claim and others may claim that that is a mandatory provision, with no discretion lodged in the Secretary. But those of us who have dealt with Indian affairs know that the writing of a provision for such a purpose as this and making it mandatory upon the Secretary of the Interior is, indeed, a most difficult matter. The commissioner ought, in my opinion, to be clothed with authority to settle with this fellow himself, and I will tell you why. He goes into the Indian home; he sits down across the table from him, and talks to him, and gets a close-up visualization of the Indian, which is not possible to the man who undertakes to pass upon it some 1,500 or 2,500 miles away.

Mr. TILSON. My opinion is that the Secretary can not know anything about the Indian. The Secretary is here in Washington. He must take the recommendation of the commission. It would be folly if he did not, and it ought to be made mandatory that he should. But I am thinking about the responsibility of those commissioners and the personal equation that will enter into each case. One commission might decide that a man was competent and another decide that he was not competent.

Mr. CARTER. There are no two commissions passing upon a man's competency. When one passed upon it, that would settle it, unless perchance a commission passed upon a man's competency and declared him incompetent, then afterwards the man made an application to another commission and that commission reversed the finding of the first commission. That might be possible, because at the time of the first investigation the man might have been a drinking man and two or three years afterwards, when a commission made a second investigation, the man had quit the use of alcohol and had gotten to be a straightforward citizen who took care of his affairs. I agree with the gentleman that these fellows ought to have jurisdiction if we can give it to them.

And I call his attention to the character of men who are to be appointed.

Mr. TILSON. They ought to be all-wise and all-good.

Mr. CARTER. One is to be from the Indian Bureau, with a civil-service status. Another is to be from the Board of Indian Commissioners, in which board many times this House has expressed its confidence and carries right now an appropriation of $10,000 for it. Certainly neither of these can be subjected to the customary criticism of undue local influence. The other is to be an Indian. You have a commission of two disinterested white officials of experience and one Indian to decide upon this competency question. I have given the matter a great deal of thought, and I think we placed in the bill the very best and strongest safeguard that could be made against any imposition on Uncle Sam's wards.

Mr. TILSON. The gentleman thinks it will not be liable to abuse?

Mr. CARTER. I am inclined to think that an Indian Bureau official and a member of the Board of Indian Commissioners on that commission would lean more against removing a man's restrictions than they would lean toward it.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER. Yes.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Now, there is no provision here for an appeal in case of an adverse report on the part of this commission?

Mr. CARTER. No.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Do you think there ought to be such an appeal?

Mr. CARTER. I do not believe that would be necessary. I believe the Indian could take that up directly with the Secretary under the existing law. But if the gentleman thinks that ought to be done, I indorse the policy, and I would not object at all to an amendment being placed in the bill specifically authorizing an appeal where the report was adverse.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER. I will.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. The gentleman was explaining the competency commission provided in this bill. Will not the gentleman go further and explain the difference between the make-up of the present plan of competency commission and the plan provided in this bill?

Mr. CARTER. Usually they are men picked up in the Indian Service, just here and there. And they usually pick two men for the competency commission, and then they take the superintendent on the reservation as one of the members of the commission. In this bill we do not provide that anybody on the reservation shall be appointed, but we provide that the board shall consist of one who is a competent member of an Indian tribe, another a member of the Board of Indian Commissioners, and another from the Indian Service, who shall have a civil-service status.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. In other words, this bill provides for an impartial functioning of these incompetency proceedings, while the other is a policy of the bureau?

Mr. CARTER. Absolutely. Now, I want a word without interruption.

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER. Yes.

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. I notice in the second section of the bill that you provide for the completion of the rolls where incomplete. Are there any of the tribes which now have complete rolls?

Mr. CARTER. Yes.

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. Why then withhold from them the application of this act while the other rolls are being completed? Why not bring to them immediately the relief that is provided for in this bill?

Mr. CARTER. I do not catch the point of the gentleman's question.

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. Well, if there are certain tribes which have completed their rolls, and there are Indians there who are not now declared competent, but which are of less than half blood, why not make this act operative at once in place of waiting for the two years?

Mr. CARTER. It is operative at once. Within 90 days after the rolls are completed that portion of the bill becomes operative. Where the rolls are already completed the act will go into effect at once. I am inclined to think that this bill should become effective July 1 next.

Mr. HASTINGS. This does specifically say that within 90 days after the completion of the roll so and so shall be done?

Mr. CARTER. Yes. Where the rolls have been completed within 90 days, the 90 days have already expired, and the act would take effect immediately.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER. Yes.

Mr. HAWLEY. I should like to submit to the gentleman this question, because he was long chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs: Section 9 provides that there shall be a reservation to the Government in the patent of any amount unliquidated when the patent is issued to the allottees?

Mr. CARTER. Yes.

Mr. HAWLEY. Now, it does not provide that the Government shall have authority to sell the land. That is presumed to be the intent in case the allottee does not pay within a reasonable time. It does not provide that the Secretary of the Interior shall have authority to proceed only with the sale of a fraction of the allotment, leaving the remainder of the allotment to the Indian in case a small fraction of it will settle the Indian's debt.

Mr. HASTINGS. Let me say, if the gentleman will permit, in answer to that question, that it is the law everywhere, so far as I know, in every State in the Union, that only such amount of the property mortgaged can be sold as is needed to satisfy the debt.

Mr. HAWLEY. The whole property under the mortgage is sold in some States.

Mr. HASTINGS. I do not know of any State where that is so. It is not so in my State, and I do not know that it is so in any other State, where, when the property is sold, the officer is justified in selling any more than that which will liquidate the indebtedness.

Mr. HAWLEY. Suppose a man gives a mortgage on his farm, and——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. CARTER. I would like to have a little more time, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I left?

The CHAIRMAN. Twenty-two minutes.

Mr. SNYDER. I yield 10 minutes more to the gentleman.

Mr. HAWLEY. If a man mortgages a farm of 160 acres, and the mortgage covers the entire farm, and he fails to pay the mortgage when due proceedings are instituted, the court would order the sale of the entire farm in order to satisfy the mortgage.

Mr. HASTINGS. Not when the proceeds of the sale of 20 or 30 acres would be a sufficient amount to cover the debt. That would be the practice followed. That is the unbroken precedent of the Interior Department, so far as I have knowledge of the cases.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. If the gentleman will yield——

Mr. CARTER. Yes.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The sale can only be made, as I take it, under decree of the court. There is no authority to the Indian Bureau to sell the property after fee had passed to the property. It could only be made under decree of the court. The court would probably order a sale of the property. That is the customary thing on a mortgage.

Mr. SNYDER. I would like to ask the gentleman from Oklahoma a question.

Mr. HAWLEY. One moment. Would the gentleman have any objection to this language, "And the Secretary of the Interior, in the event proceedings at law become necessary to collect any amount due, shall ask for the sale only of such portion of the lands transferred as may be deemed necessary to liquidate the indebtedness, and any surplus remaining after the indebtedness is paid shall be paid to the patentee or his grantee or grantees"?

Mr. CARTER. Of course, you can not closely analyze an amendment from hearing it read, but as I heard the amendment read I think it is good, and when we come to discuss it under the five-minute rule, if I find it means what I now think it does, I shall be glad to support it.

Mr. SNYDER. That amendment would be satisfactory to me. I would like to ask the gentleman one question.

Mr. CARTER. Very well.

Mr. SNYDER. In section 9 what authority is there to give the Secretary of the Interior the right to foreclose a mortgage?

Mr. CARTER. It does not give him the specific right in that section, as I recall.

Mr. SNYDER. Is there any authority in the law to-day, without this act, that gives the Secretary of the Interior the right to bring action against citizens without a special authorization?

Mr. CARTER. I could not answer that, because the Interior Department, as the gentleman knows, in dealing with Indians, takes what our union-labor friends call "direct action." They usually take this action and the Indians submit to it, and it does not get into court.

Mr. SNYDER. But the gentleman knows that in that case they would be dealing with a citizen?

Mr. CARTER. Yes. I would like to take just a few minutes now in discussing another point.

Mr. DUNBAR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER. I would like to yield, but I want to make just a brief statement on another point, if the gentleman will give me the opportunity.

Mr. DUNBAR. Very well.

Mr. CARTER. This bill ought to be passed, for two reasons: First, there is no one within the boundaries of the United States who is more entitled to citizenship than the aborigines of this country. Yet we have gone along, during more than a century of this Government, excluding them from those rights, except in such cases as the States have given them citizenship and where Congress has passed special acts for special tribes.

Figures from the report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs show that there are now in the United States some 330,000 Indians. Less than one-half that number, perhaps not to exceed 160,000, are permitted to enjoy any of the privileges of our cherished United States citizenship, leaving the majority of the original owners of this country strangers around their own fireside, as it were, without the right of suffrage, without the privilege of serving on a jury, even when the rights of their fellow tribesmen, their peers, are involved.

We have just emerged from the great world conflict during which every demand of citizenship was met by both citizen and noncitizen Indians. Both classes contributed liberally to all Red Cross and other war activities. They purchased more than $25,000,000 worth of Liberty bonds. Why, there is an Indian by the name of Barnett who does not speak a word of English, living in either the district of my friend McKEOWN or HASTINGS, an Indian who can not read a word of the Constitution which he must invoke for the protection of his rights, yet in order that this country might maintain its Army and carry forth to victory the flag of liberty throughout the whole world, purchased on his own account $1,000,000 worth of Liberty bonds.

During this horrible encounter it was necessary to call into service of our country some 4,000,000 men out of our list of 110,000,000 splendid citizenship, thus making a little more than 4 per cent actually called to the colors. Yet these same Indians, most of whom are now denied citizenship, and consisting of only about 160,000 United States citizens, but 330,000 all told, furnished 12,000 soldiers and sailors who marched beneath the folds of our flag to victory. Many of them went overseas. Some of them will never return. By this contribution to the military service our Indians not only furnished more than their full complement, but while the whole country was furnishing 4 per cent the Indians furnished more than 7 per cent of their citizenship to the cause for which their country was fighting, and the majority of them were volunteers. Have or have not these aborigines qualified themselves for American citizenship? No matter what his incompetency may be, no matter how poor his business ability, is not this same poor, benighted Indian entitled to just the same citizenship rights under this Government, for which he fought, as the shrewd, cunning draft dodger who evaded service to his country during this horrible war?

Not only has the Indian contributed his full part during this war, but he has contributed his full part toward the upbuilding of this country. There was a time when his word was supreme on the American continent, a time when he was master of all he surveyed, and this great Republic has been carved and built from his domain.

A little less than 500 years ago a great Genoese navigator approached the island of San Salvador. He asked that he might be given a few days' landing on the island, permitted to rest up his weary sailors and repair his ships. The request was granted, and before this great man, whom we now revere, had departed he had in the name of his religion planted a cross upon the island and claimed it for his king.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. SNYDER. I yield to the gentleman five minutes more.

Mr. CARTER. We called upon the Indian to discard his manner of dress. He has responded by accepting the habilaments of the white man. Next we called upon him to dispense with the pursuit of life which he so well loved. He responded by accepting our most enlightened civilization. We asked him to give up his religion. He renounced the great spirit and the happy hunting ground and accepted the white man's religion. He surrendered his tribal government to accept the citizenship of his immigrant friends. So through all these many years, through all these many generations, you have called upon this aborigine to make sacrifices, and during that time, to our discredit and shame, no one seems ever to have been sufficiently interested in his real welfare to see that he was given the ordinary rights of citizenship which this same immigrant now enjoys.

The purpose of this bill is a simple act of justice to render to the Indian that which has long been due him. [Applause.]

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I ask for recognition if no one here desires recognition to say he is opposed to the bill. I am not sure whether I am or not.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized for one hour.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I am inclined to think this bill is an abrupt reversal of the policy pursued by the United States for many years in regard to the Indians. It may be that it is the correct policy to be pursued, but I feel fairly confident that it is not the policy which has been pursued in the main without objection, so far as I know, in Congress.

This bill proposes, first, to grant to all Indians the right of citizenship and to render them liable in every case to the criminal and other laws of the United States and of the locality where they reside. We maintain a good many Indian reservations. A good many Indians still maintain tribal relations—I do not know to what extent—and are not governed now by the State laws in reference to a great many things. Perhaps they ought to be. We maintain Indian reservations where Indians are under some surveillance from the Indian agents. As far as I can understand, this bill will absolutely remove the authority of the Indian agent over most or all of the Indians now upon these reservations. It may not entirely remove the authority of the Indian agent over the property of those Indians who are still left as incompetents, but in the main it removes entirely the present control of the United States over the Indians. That has not been our policy from the beginning of the Government in its dealings with the Indians up to this hour. So it seems to me this bill entirely and suddenly reverses the whole theory upon which the Government has maintained relations with the Indians.

It may be desirable to let all Indians vote. I myself have always been consistent in the theory that in the main it was desirable to permit people who were going to live here exercise the duties of citizenship, and I have been run over in the House so often on that subject that it does not even affect the callous spots that now exist on my body. Yet with the tendency in recent years to restrict the exercise of citizenship on the part of people who come to this country and to make the obtaining of citizenship papers much more difficult now than it used to be, and proposing now that the Government expend money to educate the foreigner so that he may be able to read and understand the Constitution before he is admitted to citizenship, it is proposed here, without any difficulty at all, to grant to all of the ignorant and incompetent Indians full citizenship and the right to vote. Now, I will ask these gentlemen on the committee, if I may, what will be the effect on the Indian reservations, where now the agents of the Government exercise some control over the Indians, if we grant to the Indian the right of citizenship and deed to him his property?

Mr. HASTINGS. If the gentleman will permit——

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Certainly.

Mr. HASTINGS. It will have no effect whatever upon the incompetent Indians, but as to the competent Indians, those of less than one-half Indian blood or those who are adjudged competent by the competency commission, those Indians will be turned loose. We have just that state of affairs in Oklahoma now, where the competent Indian is turned loose, and where the restricted Indian is still under the supervision of the officers of the Interior Department.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Now, wait a moment. Let us see. On a number of these reservations the Indians are required to remain on the reservation unless they are given permission to leave. Is not that the case?

Mr. HASTINGS. Some one else will have to answer that. We have no such condition in Oklahoma.

Mr. CARTER. That is no longer done on Indian reservations except as a matter of punishment, as a matter of disciplining refractory Indians.

Mr. HAYDEN. There is no Indian reservation in the United States at this time where an Indian must obtain permission from the superintendent to leave the reservation.

Mr. CARTER. Unless as a matter of punishment.

Mr. HAYDEN. If an Indian was convicted of crime he might be confined to the agency, but that would be true of a white man who was convicted of some crime.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. It would not be applicable to a white man.

Mr. HAYDEN. If a white man was convicted of a crime he could also be restrained.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. There is no law in the United States authorizing a court to say that a man shall reside in a certain place unless they put him in the penitentiary or jail.

Mr. LITTLE. They may parole a man to stay in the State.

Mr. HAYDEN. On certain reservations there are now recognized Indian courts, and Indians are sentenced to jail or confined to the reservation as a punishment by such courts.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. That is where the Indian maintains tribal relations and have a judge.

Mr. HAYDEN. Judges appointed by the superintendent; yes.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. All that is abolished by this bill.

Mr. HASTINGS. No; that would not be abolished.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. What authority, if a man is a citizen of the United States, is there under the Constitution of the United States for an Indian judge to try him?

Mr. CARTER. If the gentleman will permit, that is not the case now.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. But the gentleman from Arizona said it was.

Mr. CARTER. I did not hear the reply of the gentleman from Arizona.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I am trying to find out. The gentleman had better consult with the gentleman from Arizona.

Mr. CARTER. I think I know what the gentleman from Arizona said without hearing it.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I know what he said, because I heard him.

Mr. CARTER. What the gentleman from Arizona meant to say was that the restricted Indian comes under the regulation that the gentleman speaks of. The restricted Indian is not a citizen except in the State of Oklahoma.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. They have some tribal relations; they do have a certain method of punishing infractions of what they think are their laws, not the laws of the United States; but the moment you make them citizens you abolish that.

Mr. CARTER. That is true, and that is the same condition that exists to-day on every reservation throughout the United States of Indians who are citizens, and perhaps here and there an Indian who is not a citizen. When made a citizen he is severed from tribal relations.

Mr. SNYDER. That is what I desire to say. The gentleman from Illinois stated that this was a change of policy. This simply intensifies the condition that now exists. On every reservation there are competent Indians and citizens, and this will make more competent Indians and citizens.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Heretofore the theory has been, and always has been, that as long as the Indians were allowed to maintain tribal relations they themselves adopted certain policies in reference to their own government. This proposes to entirely abolish that idea. It proposes to make them all subject, and only subject, to the laws of the United States and the States in which they reside or happen to be.

Now, how far that will affect the Indians in their individual relations I do not undertake to say. I do not know. We have not been given that information. How many of these Indians are in this condition, how many Indian tribes there may be in the United States maintaining tribal relations and their own form of government, I do not know. How advantageous or disadvantageous it may be for them has not been explained to the House. In this bill you propose to change entirely the policy which the Government has maintained heretofore toward these Indians without, so far as the House is informed, any knowledge on the subject.

Now, I would like to get a little more information in reference to the disposition of the property of the half bloods. As I understand this bill, it proposes to declare competent and deed to the individuals all the property which may belong to the half-blood Indian, either individual or tribal property.

Mr. HASTINGS. To Indians less than half blood.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Well, say Indians of less than half blood; that is six to one and half a dozen to the other.

Mr. SNYDER. If the gentleman will yield, that is the avowed policy of the department to-day, and we are enacting into law what the Commissioner of Indian Affairs has stated that he is now doing under a rule issued two years ago.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The Indian Office could do this; if that was their policy, they could have done it. If they have done it, what is the object of this bill?

Mr. CARTER. If the gentleman will permit, there is some distinction between what this bill does and what the Indian Bureau can do.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Not what the Indian Bureau can do, but what they do do.

Mr. CARTER. This bill gives the Indian citizenship. It removes the restriction from all Indians of less than half blood. We can not grant citizenship unless at the same time we remove the restrictions.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I have left the question of citizenship and taken up the question of property. The Indian Office now has the authority to declare competent any Indian it chooses to. This bill assumes that all Indians of less than half blood are competent Indians, and thereupon decrees that they shall all receive their property regardless of whether they are competent or not. The Indian Office is able at least to differentiate between the half blood who is competent and the half blood who is not competent, but we declare by this bill that all of them are competent whether they are or not.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. CARTER. Does the gentleman believe that a man who has been raised by a mother and father, both having white blood, has any claim upon the United States to further supervise his acts and pay money for the expenses of such supervision?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I hesitate to express my opinion upon that subject, because the gentleman from Oklahoma, the Indian Committee—Congress—has for many years followed the policy, which I have mainly believed was wrong, of fostering and taking care of these people whether they were full-blood or one forty-second-blood Indian.

Mr. CARTER. I think the gentleman should say that we have submitted to that policy.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I do not know what word I used, but I have been run over on it a good many times. There is not a case, not one that I know of—and there may be many that I do not know of—where there are Indians in the United States who have been given their property and who have lost it, that somebody has not asked Congress to take care of those Indians in some way and do something for them. Everyone knows perfectly well that if we were to divide up the whole United States among the Members of this House to-day and give each one a patent to his share there would be some of them hunting for a loaf of bread to-morrow. That is a situation, however, that is not confined to Indians. That is human nature. The difference is, however, that where the white people lose their heritage in that way they are told that they must work for a living, while the Indian is practically told that he must beg for a living. That is the policy of Congress, that is the policy of the Indian Office, to a large extent, and that is the practical application of what we have done and the practical application of what we will do, probably, for many years in the future. Some gentlemen with eloquent tongues in their heads, who have Indians who have become voters living in their district, seek to obtain the votes of their Indian constituents by promising to do what they can to right the "wrongs" of a Government that has seized their property and driven them to poverty, and in that way to secure an appropriation from the Federal Treasury. They come here, and enough of them manage to get on the Committee on Indian Affairs to have some influence with the Indian Office, and perhaps with the House and Congress, and through their eloquence they carry us off our feet and we make the appropriations. How much of the Indian bill is pure gratuity?

Mr. SNYDER. Seven and a half million dollars.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. How much of it is under treaty obligation? A trifle, compared with the gratuity.

Mr. SNYDER. Eight hundred and twenty-five thousand dollars.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Then we go ahead and loan them money to make improvements. It may be a wise thing to do. We satisfy ourselves by calling the transaction reimbursable. That eases our conscience, but it does not affect the Treasury so far as getting the money back is concerned to any great extent. There are incompetent Indians of less than half blood. Who denies that there are incompetent Indians of less than half blood? The Indian Office can remove the restrictions if it chooses to, but we are asked here to remove them without any knowledge whatever of the specific Indian, wholesale, all of them—and then to-morrow, when cuter men, not of half blood but of whole white blood, have gotten their property away from them, we will be asked to appropriate money to take care of them.

The bill has another sugar-coated pill in it, which may be a desirable thing. Just why it was sugar-coated, I suppose will appeal to everyone. The bill provides for the appointment of commissions to determine the competency of those Indians who were not made competent by this bill and directs that the commission shall not exist for more than two years. There is this to be said about it: You will not get a very high grade of man, probably, if the salary remains at $2,500 a year, but you probably will get a class of men who like to remain on the pay roll. There never has been a commission created by Congress or anyone else to do a particular work, to end at a specified time, which quit at that time, unless the work was completed, and he is a wild dreamer who thinks that there will be commissions created under this bill sufficient to examine personally into the competency of all those Indians who otherwise would be left incompetent under the bill. At the end of two years we will be asked to extend the life of the commission two years more, and at the end of four years we probably will be asked to extend the life of the commission for two years more.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. SNYDER. The reason the period was fixed at two years may be this: Perhaps we did not think as deeply as does the gentleman who now has the floor regarding this subject, but our thought was that at the end of two years if the commission had not done what we expected it to do we could get rid of it entirely and stop the proceedings. We did not have the thought that we would have to raise the salary or that we would have to keep them on the roll. We thought that we better make it two years, and that at the end of that time, if they did their work, we could continue them if we saw fit, but if they did not, we could get rid of them.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Whether they have done good work or not, at the end of two years we will be asked to extend them for a longer time.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. After the gentleman's very analytical argument, is he now able to tell us younger Members who seek to follow him whether or not he is in favor of or against the bill?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I do not think I shall vote against the bill. If I had the power to determine whether the bill should become a law at this time I probably would spend a little further time to find out about it. I took the floor, not for the purpose of guiding the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON], who has his own opinion, no matter what mine is, and he never follows my opinion or that of anyone else except his own [laughter]—and that is to his credit—but for the purpose of calling attention to a few things in the bill so as to find out something more about the facts. I have not gotten very much more information about the facts.

Mr. SNYDER. I do not know——

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Oh, I am not criticizing the committee. I think they have given all they had.

Mr. SNYDER. To the best of my ability I have given the gentleman all that I have.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I think so, and that is the reason I have been inclined to think that the bill was reported not so much because the committee knew about it, but because some gentlemen have been agitating for years to get the restrictions on Indians removed, because the white people in the neighborhood mainly wanted them removed. Here is a case where it is proposed to throw a sop to the Indians by declaring them citizens and a sop to the whites who want to rob the Indians by giving them a good opportunity.

Mr. HASTINGS. Does the gentleman have any more time? I was wondering if he would let me have a little of his time. I am not opposed to the bill.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is always entertaining, he is always interesting, and I am very glad to hear him discuss any subject. He always develops the weak points if there be such in any bill.

Mr. SNYDER. There usually are.

Mr. HASTINGS. I never saw a bill, as my colleague says, that there were not some weak points in it. In the first place, in order that I may disabuse the mind of any Member of this House, this bill does not affect the Five Civilized Tribes in Oklahoma, and therefore what my friend from Illinois said about the possible motives that might influence the introducing and favorably reporting and voting for the passage of bills could not apply to my colleague from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER] or myself, both of whom are upon the Committee on Indian Affairs. Let me say to the Members of the House that the Five Civilized Tribes were made citizens of the United States by the act of March 3, 1901. Prior to that time there had been some agreements made with the Government of the United States that were ratified looking to the individualization of their tribal lands and money. The Cherokee agreement was passed by Congress July 1, 1902, and ratified by the Cherokee people August 7, 1902, the year after they were made citizens of the United States. Now, the effect of citizenship among the Five Civilized Tribes, which we expect to be the same among the other tribes throughout the United States, is this, that according to the first section here all are made citizens and subject to the criminal and civil laws of the State and it does not interfere with or affect in any way their tribal or individual property. Now, the second section, as I recall, prescribes for the making of the rolls of the various Indian tribes. That is but a reenactment of the present law. Most of you remember that a similar provision had been already placed upon the Indian appropriation bill of last year authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to make these rolls, to make them descriptive of the person, giving the age, quantum of blood, and so forth, looking to just such legislation, so that a good many of those rolls are now in process of being made, and a great many, as I understand, are now completed, so as soon as these rolls are completed they will have the age and quantum of Indian blood, so this bill could become effective with that tribe.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HASTINGS. I would be glad to do so.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Will the gentleman state how it is proposed to pass upon the mental incompetency of Indians of less than half blood? I notice in the first portion of the bill to which the gentleman is now referring that is alludes very frequently to the adjudging of the mental incompetency.

Mr. HASTINGS. I am very glad the gentleman has invited my attention to that, although I fear in the 10 minutes allotted to me now I will not have time to discuss it, but I want to invite the attention of my friend from Nebraska to this section, and I want to say to the gentleman from Virginia that it is my purpose, if some one else does not, to offer an amendment to this section when it is reached and to discuss it more at length to the effect that the Indian be adjudged mentally incompetent by a competent court. I do not have time now to discuss it at length, and I did not have time to discuss it when the Indian appropriation bill was under consideration when a similar amendment was offered. But let me say to this House that there is no place in our Government for arbitrary power, and as one Member of Congress and a citizen of this great Government, I am opposed to any employee in the Indian Service, upon ex parte affidavits, declaring a competent person incompetent. I believe that that matter ought to be submitted to a competent court, and that the court should pass upon it; where the representative of the department could be heard and where he could bring such testimony as he thinks ought to be brought, and submit it to the court showing, as he believes, that the Indian ought to be declared incompetent. And at the same time I think that the Indian ought to have the right to be heard before the court where testimony could be introduced and where the court could judicially pass upon it and not have it passed upon by ex parte affidavits gathered up in a locality 1,500 or 2,000 miles away from here and then have some clerk in the Interior Department say whether or not that man is competent or incompetent.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Unless you submit to judicial determination the question of competency, you leave an arbitrary discretion in the Interior Department.

Mr. HASTINGS. Yes. I want to say I am in favor of amending this section so that the court may determine after a full and complete hearing with the department represented by an attorney, such as they have throughout the country. Now, I want to say to the Members of the House that this bill removes all restrictions of those of less than half Indian blood. That is what we did for the Five Civilized Tribes by the act of March 27, 1908, and that is the law among the Five Civilized Tribes now, and that is the reason why this act does not refer to the Five Civilized Tribes because that is to-day the law among the Five Civilized Tribes in Oklahoma. Let me say now, generally, in reference to the Indian: Our hope is this, that we who believe that we are the best friends that the Indians have, we who want him looked after, we see the day coming here when Congress is not going to be disposed to make sufficient appropriations to safeguard the interests of the real Indians, and our best judgment, gentlemen, is to remove the competent Indians from the supervision of the department. Then you will have more funds and more employees and you can concentrate your efforts so as to take care of the real incompetent Indians. He is the man you ought to look after, but there are thousands of competent Indians in a great many tribes—I will not say in all tribes, because I am not familiar with all of them—but as you remove the competent Indian from the supervision of the Government then you concentrate the efforts of the employees of the department in looking after and taking care of and supervising the real incompetent Indian. We believe that that is the best for the Indians. Let me say to you now while I am on my feet that the best way to strengthen any man is to place responsibility upon him.

You can not make an Indian a strong citizen of this great Government and always treat him as a baby. You apply that same rule to your children. You gradually place responsibility upon a child, and it grows stronger and stronger, and gradually you relieve him of any supervision.

Mr. SNYDER. Will the gentleman yield for a moment?

Mr. HASTINGS. I will be glad to do so.

Mr. SNYDER. When the gentleman from Illinois had the floor he said that, notwithstanding the fact that all Indians were being declared competent, the expense of the——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman two minutes of my time.

He said that the expense of the department continued to go up. Now, it was a fact that in our investigation we found that that had been so, that the expenses had increased and the number of Indians had diminished from whom restrictions had been removed. But the committee also found in its investigations many places where the expense to the Government could be decreased, and it has shown its ability to decrease it by what has taken place here in the last few days in the reduction of the items in the appropriation bill. Now, I want to ask this question: If this bill becomes a law what per cent of the half-bloods that will be declared citizens will be incompetent to take care of their own affairs, in the gentleman's judgment? What per cent of the half-breeds will become automatically citizens if this becomes a law?

Mr. HASTINGS. I am afraid that I do not have sufficient information on which to base a judgment on that that I am safe in making an estimate. If you will remember, this section says of less than half Indian blood. As to those of even half Indian blood there is some supervision retained over——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. SNYDER. I grant five minutes to the gentleman.

Mr. HASTINGS. I thank you.

Now, I do not believe, answering further the question of the gentleman from New York, that as to the Five Civilized Tribes—and there are 101,506 of them, I believe, in the five of them—that there is any greater per cent of incompetent people among those Indians of less than half Indian blood than there are among those of as many whites. That is the point I want to emphasize and make clear. I believe all Indians of less than half Indian blood, certainly so far as I know, are as competent as the white people.

Now, as has been stated, there are a great many white people who are incompetent, and the illustration was used that if a certain amount of money was divided among the membership of the House, in a short time a few would have the greater part of it.

Mr. SNYDER. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. HASTINGS. I will be glad to do so.

Mr. SNYDER. Now, in 1901, when this proposition we are trying to enact here to-day was included, so far as the Five Civilized Tribes was concerned, what was the immediate effect upon the people of the Five Civilized Tribes? Was there greater difficulty in managing their affairs, or less difficulty, after they were declared citizens?

Mr. HASTINGS. The gentleman knows that at that time the lands were not allotted among the members of the Five Civilized Tribes, but, of course, they have been subsequently allotted. They became citizens of the United States. They exercised the same rights of citizenship and there was no bad effect.

Mr. SNYDER. What has been the progress of the people since? Have they increased in value as units of the United States since they were declared citizens, or have they deteriorated, and has their country become less productive than it was before they became citizens?

Mr. HASTINGS. Unquestionably it has proven very beneficial legislation from every standpoint. It has been beneficial to the State of Oklahoma and to the individual Indian. He has taken up the duties of citizenship and I think I may safely say that everybody agrees that the Indian is a much stronger man to-day than in 1901; that he has taken an active part in the affairs of the State. I think we had some 16 or 18 Indians in the constitutional convention in 1906 from the members of the Five Civilized Tribes. We have had a great many Indian county judges. We have a great many of them occupying various county offices and State offices.

Mr. SNYDER. That state of affairs could have not arisen except that they had been made citizens?

Mr. HASTINGS. Of course, they did not elect them because they were Indians. They just took their chances with other citizens in the communities in which they lived. There is no distinction between a white man and an Indian.

Mr. SNYDER. The gentleman believes, then, that if this bill to-day should become a law the condition not only of the Indians, by reason of their becoming citizens, would be greatly improved throughout the United States, but the people who belong to them would be improved by having the right to become citizens of the United States?

Mr. HASTINGS. I heartily agree with that statement. I do not think there is any doubt about that. Now, there is just one other thing to which the chairman of the committee has referred, and I tried to explain this the other day. I know that I did not make myself clear about it. I fear I will not make myself clear now. The question was asked by the gentleman from Illinois here why it is, if you are making a lot of these Indians competent, the expenses gradually increase.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HASTINGS. I will not take any more time, but I will discuss that under the five-minute rule. I thank you.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNYDER].

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask a few questions in reference to the measure, which I know the chairman of the committee is able to answer. I would just like to ask him if this legislation was given consideration by the committee in the very thorough investigation that it made of Indian matters and the administration of laws by the Indian Bureau?

Mr. SNYDER. It was not at this last hearing.

Mr. WALSH. I would like further to ask if the committee has any additional argument in favor of the passage of this measure beyond that contained in the report, which is limited to two letters from the Secretary of the Interior?

Mr. SNYDER. The only additional argument that the chairman has to offer he has already offered in the statement he made in presenting the bill, and that is simply as to a question of policy. My thought in answering the question is that this bill will relieve from restrictions many thousands of men who are entitled to citizenship, and who in the main will become better citizens of the United States, more helpful to our general conditions, more useful members of society, than they are in their present state.

Mr. WALSH. I should like to ask the gentleman, further, if we do not in this legislation say in effect, if it is enacted, "We confer citizenship upon you, but before you can be said to be a competent citizen you must have your case passed upon by a commission provided in the bill"?

Mr. SNYDER. That is my understanding.

Mr. WALSH. Then, if that is the case, we are not conferring much of a right or benefit upon the Indian, are we?

Mr. SNYDER. Yes; I think we are.

Mr. WALSH. We say, "We are conferring citizenship upon you, but we are conferring it upon the understanding that you are incompetent."

Mr. SNYDER. I think the gentleman loses sight of the really important factor in this whole case. The Indian is not begging or clamoring for this citizenship. Congress believes that certain Indians ought to be made citizens and become a part of this country and to take over their property and become payers of taxes and representative citizens of the Government.

Mr. WALSH. Of course, with reference to that, we could take care of all Indians without conferring the right of citizenship upon them by enacting the rest of the bill.

Now, there is one other question I should like to ask.

Mr. SNYDER. I will be glad to answer the gentleman if I can.

Mr. WALSH. What does the chairman of the Indian Committee have to say with reference to the argument suggested by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. HASTINGS], which, as I understand it, is that instead of creating commissions to pass upon this matter of competency, we leave it in the courts?

Mr. HASTINGS. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. SNYDER. Let me answer.

Mr. WALSH. I will yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma if I have misstated his intention.

Mr. SNYDER. The gentleman from Massachusetts is asking a question with reference to one thing, and the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. HASTINGS] is talking about another thing.

Mr. HASTINGS. Where they are declared mentally incompetent, that is one thing. You may have restrictions, and retain supervision over an Indian, but I do not want to have him declared mentally incompetent except by a court after a judicial hearing.

Mr. WALSH. These commissions are created for the purpose of determining the competency of the Indians, and their duties are set forth. Now, the competency of an Indian means his mental competency, does it not?

Mr. HASTINGS. Oh, no.

Mr. WALSH. What does it mean?

Mr. HASTINGS. The question decided by the competency commission is whether a man is competent to manage his own affairs.

Mr. WALSH. That is, his mental ability?

Mr. HASTINGS. In other words, all Indians of less than half Indian blood are made competent by this act unless they are adjudged mentally incompetent. Now, I want a court to adjudge a man mentally incompetent.

Mr. WALSH. I should like to ask the gentleman, who is an expert in Indian legislation, if this question of competency after all does not resolve itself into a question of the mental capability of the Indians?

Mr. HASTINGS. That is taken into consideration, of course.

Mr. WALSH. What else is taken into consideration?

Mr. HASTINGS. His past experience, his capacity in handling property—all those things are taken into consideration.

Mr. WALSH. Those are all mental qualifications. There is no question of being able to read or write necessarily involved. The question of competency, in the last analysis, is one of mental competency, ability to transact business.

Mr. HASTINGS. I should like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. WALSH. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HASTINGS. Have you not got any mental defectives in Massachusetts?

Mr. WALSH. Yes; not many, but some.

Mr. HASTINGS. Who passes upon the question of their mental deficiency?

Mr. WALSH. The courts.

Mr. HASTINGS. Now, that is what I want done among the Indians, regardless of whether they are competent to manage their affairs or not. As to the mental defectives, I want a court to pass upon them, for the Indians, just the same as you demand it for the mental defectives in Massachusetts. That is all; no more and no less.

Mr. WALSH. We do not differ on that.

Mr. HASTINGS. I am glad to know that.

Mr. WALSH. But I should like to know why the commission should pass upon the mental qualifications of an Indian with reference to one phase of the problem and the courts pass upon it with reference to another.

Mr. HASTINGS. The competency commission does not pass upon the competency of persons of less than one-half Indian blood under this bill.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Is it not a fact that the competency of an Indian goes further than his mental ability, in that it takes into consideration his business ability? For instance, an Indian might be mentally competent and yet not be considered capable of transacting business for himself.

Mr. WALSH. I do not think anyone transacts much business without using up some mental energy.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Some do.

Mr. WALSH. It falls back on the question of their mental ability. I should like to say, Mr. Chairman, that I regret that I was unable to be present when the distinguished chairman of the committee opened the discussion on this bill, and hence I may have asked some questions that have been answered before. I would like to ask the gentleman if the committee made any investigation as to what the additional expenditure from the Public Treasury will be as the result of this legislation.

Mr. SNYDER. Along last July when this measure was up before the committee it was the belief of the committee that it would tend to decrease the amount necessary for the maintenance and upkeep of the Indians. That is true of the Five Civilized Tribes under the same proposition. Within a few years the Five Civilized Tribes will be discharged entirely, and there will be no further governmental expense with reference to them. It is hoped that this legislation will bring about a similar state in various parts of the country.

Mr. WALSH. In how few years are we going to be relieved of the support of the Five Civilized Tribes?

Mr. HASTINGS. On April 26, 1931. I know of no one in Oklahoma that is in favor of an extension of that time, certainly no member of the Oklahoma delegation. The expenditure is now rapidly decreasing, and in 1931 there will be no further expenditure on the part of the Government for the Five Civilized Tribes.

Mr. WALSH. Have they similar legislation to this bill?

Mr. HASTINGS. Yes; that legislation was passed May 27, 1908.

Mr. CARTER. This bill does no more as far as the removal of restrictions goes than that which applied to the Five Civilized Tribes of Oklahoma.

Mr. WALSH. And that has been in operation since 1908.

Mr. CARTER. May 27, 1908.

Mr. WALSH. Do I understand that under this legislation, while the Indians are made citizens, before they can participate in municipal affairs they must further prove their right to citizenship and become registered?

Mr. CARTER. No; this is to make a citizen of every Indian in the United States who is not now a citizen. I will be candid with the gentleman. It proposes to exclude certain Indians in New York under an amendment which we shall offer. We can not make them citizens, as it might involve the security of their present title to their reservation, and the committee did not think that ought to be done.

Mr. WALSH. Why is it peculiar to New York? Are there not other reservations that it would apply to?

Mr. CARTER. No; it is peculiar to New York because the Indians had their title from the Ogden Land Co. prior to the time the Federal Government was established, during the days of the Colonies. It is claimed—I do not think correctly—but it is contended that making them citizens would make insecure their title to their reservation. So long as they think that, and their attorneys so advise them, we concluded that it was too important a matter to include them in this legislation.

Mr. SNYDER. It involves title to lands in the city of Salamanca.

Mr. WALSH. Does this confer citizenship on the Indians wandering through the Everglades of Florida?

Mr. CARTER. Every Indian in the United States except those I have alluded to in New York, which will be taken care of by an amendment.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing an article from the New York Journal of Commerce by the gentleman from New York [Mr. PLATT], chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency. It is the best statement that I have seen, and a very brief statement, of the reasons why the decline in exchange is now so large in the world market.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That every Indian born within the territorial limits of the United States is hereby declared to be a citizen of the United States and shall have the benefit of and be subject to the laws, both civil and criminal, of the State or Territory in which he may reside, without in any manner impairing or otherwise affecting the right of any such Indian to tribal or other property.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the committee amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 6, strike out the words "or Territory."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BLANTON) there were 23 ayes and 1 no.

So the committee amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 8, strike out the word "right" and insert "property rights, individual or tribal."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 9, after the word "other," insert the word "Indian."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I notice that this paragraph provides that the Indian shall have the benefit of and be subject to the laws, both civil and criminal, of the State in which he may reside, without in any manner impairing or otherwise affecting the property rights, and so forth. Can we by legislation provide that those who have hitherto not been citizens of the United States shall be citizens and say that by reason of their being citizens they shall be subject to the several laws of a particular State without the State itself taking some action?

Mr. CARTER. I will say to the gentleman that that was not done with reference to the civilized tribes, but was done in the State of South Dakota.

Mr. WALSH. That was when South Dakota was created a State.

Mr. CARTER. No; I think it was since it was created a State.

Mr. HASTINGS. If the gentleman from Massachusetts will reflect, he will see that when you make a man a citizen of the United States he immediately becomes amenable to the civil and criminal laws of that State where he resides without our saying so.

Mr. SNYDER. This does not change any condition that exists.

Mr. WALSH. That is true, when you make a citizen in the way provided for by the laws and the Constitution; that is, when they go before the court, produce their proof, and renounce allegiance to their former country.

Mr. HASTINGS. This is only another method of making a citizen of the United States, which Congress has the power to do, and whenever you make a man a citizen of the United States he is subject to all the laws, civil and criminal, of the locality where he lives.

Mr. WALSH. Yes; but can we say that he shall have the benefit of a State statute by suddenly making him a citizen of the United States—that he shall have the benefit of a State statute without the State taking some action?

Mr. HASTINGS. Can the gentleman point to one single State that makes any discrimination among the citizens of the United States, so far as civil rights are concerned? None whatever.

Mr. SNYDER. What I attempted to say a moment ago was that this simply intensifies a situation that exists. There are Indians being declared competent and becoming citizens, we hope, every day now that are subject to and have the benefit of all the laws of the various States in the Union. All this does is to intensify that work and make more Indian citizens and make them subject to the laws of the various States.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Interior shall within one year after the approval of this act cause to be made a complete and final roll of all persons entitled to membership in each tribe of Indians to whom allotments of land have been heretofore or which hereafter may be made, and no person whose name does not appear on such membership roll as approved by said Secretary shall thereafter participate in any benefits derived from the tribal funds or other property of any such tribe of Indians.

Upon the completion of such final roll of members the said Secretary shall determine and designate all members having a quantum of less than one-half Indian blood and shall issue patents in fee to all able-bodied and mentally competent Indians over 21 years of age of less than one-half Indian blood for the lands which have been heretofore or which may be hereafter allotted to them. And any Indian who has been heretofore or who may be hereafter allotted lands from the public domain who is 21 years of age, able-bodied and mentally competent and of less than one-half Indian blood shall likewise be issued a patent in fee to the lands so allotted: Provided, That the personal property of any such Indian of less than one-half Indian blood on January 1, 1922, and his other individual property on January 1, 1932, shall become subject to taxation by the State or Territory within which the same is located: Provided, however, That the stipulations of any treaty or agreement relating to the nontaxation of allotted lands shall not be impaired or otherwise adversely affected by the issuance of the patent in fee simple as provided for herein.

The following committee amendments were severally reported and severally agreed to:

Page 2, line 1, after the word "that," insert the words "in all cases where a final roll has not heretofore been made and approved."

Page 2, line 3, strike out the words "one year" and insert "two years."

Page 2, line 15, strike out the word "and" and insert the words "Indians not adjudged."

Page 2, line 22, after the word "and" insert the words "not adjudged incompetent."

Page 3, line 3, after the word "State," strike out the words "or Territory."

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 12, before the word "upon," insert the words "where a final roll of an Indian tribe is complete within 90 days after the passage of this act but where the roll is incomplete."

Mr. WALSH. So that the paragraph will read how?

The Clerk read as follows:

So that it will read:

"Where a final roll of any Indian tribe is complete within 90 days after the passage of this act, but where the roll is incomplete, upon the completion of such roll of members the said Secretary shall determine," and so forth.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend, on page 2, line 16, by inserting the word "judicially" before the word "adjudged."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 16, before the word "adjudged," insert the word "judicially."

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, does the gentleman think that by the use of that phraseology it would require the matter to be passed upon by a court of competent jurisdiction?

Mr. CARTER. That is my intention.

Mr. HASTINGS. I do not think we ought to make any mistake about that. What does the gentleman from Massachusetts think about it?

Mr. WALSH. I had a little doubt as to whether by putting the word "judicially" before the word "adjudged" we would require the matter to be passed upon by a court of competent jurisdiction, and I suggest to the gentleman that he insert the words "by a court of competent jurisdiction."

Mr. CARTER. If the gentleman thinks that is necessary, I have no objection.

Mr. WALSH. It might be held that these commissions, in passing upon the question of competency, were judicial bodies.

Mr. CARTER. I do not believe that would be a judicial determination; but, in order to make it absolutely beyond cavil, I think it would be better to accept the suggestion of the gentleman from Massachusetts. I ask unanimous consent to withdraw my amendment and substitute in its place the amendment just suggested.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment as it would now read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CARTER: Page 2, line 16, after the word "adjudged," insert the words "by a court of competent jurisdiction."

Mr. WALSH. That is correct.

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, permit me to make this suggestion: In some of the States there is a commission appointed which is scarcely entitled to be called a court, but the commission passes upon the question of competency of certain people; and, in view of that fact, it seems to me the amendment ought to be broad enough to include the commissions in the different States. I suggest the following language to cover the situation: After the word "incompetent," in line 16, on page 2, insert "in the method and by the tribunal provided for by the laws of the State in which the Indian resides."

Mr. HASTINGS. I would suggest that it be inserted after the word "adjudged."

Mr. CARTER. I have not any objection to that; that simply clarifies it and makes it more definite.

The CHAIRMAN. There is an amendment now pending, which the gentleman from Oklahoma has offered. Does the gentleman from Nebraska offer this as a substitute?

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. If it is satisfactory, I will be very glad to offer it as a substitute for the amendment before the committee. I do so offer it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska offers an amendment as a substitute, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 16, after the word "incompetent," insert "in the method and before the tribunal provided for by the laws of the State in which the Indian resides."

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I suggest that the amendment would come more properly after the word "adjudged."

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that it may be so changed as to come after the word "adjudged."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska asks unanimous consent to so modify his amendment. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the substitute.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I desire to discuss the substitute. What sort of a tribunal would this operate upon in the gentleman's State?

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. In the State of Nebraska persons charged with being insane are tried before a tribunal composed of a physician, registered; the clerk of the district court; and an attorney selected by the judge of the district court, and all persons must come before that body.

Mr. WALSH. That is in case the person is suspected of being mentally deficient or insane, and somebody has to set that on foot by a petition, I suppose?

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. It is done by a petition, and notice then is personally served on the person and the one in charge of the person.

Mr. WALSH. Is there any appeal from that tribunal?

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. Of course, there is an appeal in the ordinary way to the proper court on the record there made.

Mr. WALSH. Does that same tribunal pass upon the case of idiotic children—the mentally deficient?

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. In the case of mentally deficient persons, their condition is determined by that tribunal.

Mr. WALSH. And the court of which one of these commissioners is clerk has nothing to do with this matter?

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. Our district court is our court of general jurisdiction. The clerk of that court keeps the record, and it is part of his official duties to keep that record.

Mr. WALSH. But what I am getting at is, the court does not appoint this commission in each individual case?

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. No; it is a standing commission.

Mr. WALSH. Provided for by law?

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. Provided for by the statute of the State of Nebraska.

Mr. WALSH. Does the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. HASTINGS] think that this would answer the requirements which he expressed as being so desirable in the case of those Indians, to have them brought before a tribunal that passes upon insane people?

Mr. HASTINGS. I think it would. If that kind of a tribunal passes upon the white people of the State of Nebraska I believe it would be fair for the Indians to go before it. Now, we have a similar commission in Oklahoma, but this commission is appointed by the county court, and they report back to the county court, and the county court confirms their finding and issues an order, so they are creatures of the county court, which has probate jurisdiction. I thought that was the case in every State in the Union. I may be mistaken as to what is the law in the gentleman's State.

Mr. WALSH. Then the gentleman from Oklahoma desires these Indians treated in the same way as persons who are suspected of being insane or mentally deficient, and a proceeding shall be set on foot by somebody who is of that opinion?

Mr. HASTINGS. I am in accord with that view. I believe that it is fair to the Indian. He will have a right to be heard either before the court or before the commission of which the gentleman speaks. He can introduce testimony, have his friends heard, or they can introduce testimony, and the department can have testimony introduced, so that the matter can there be heard, and I much prefer to have it heard and settled there by a court or local commission rather than upon ex parte affidavits forwarded here to the department for final determination.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WALSH. I ask for three minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. CARTER. Let me call the gentleman's attention to a matter, and the matter is just this, Mr. Chairman: This applies only to Indians of less than half Indian blood. The view of the committee was that practically every one of these fellows was competent, or at least there was as large a degree of competency among that class of Indians as among white people.

Mr. HASTINGS. Puts them on a plane with white people.

Mr. CARTER. Yes; place them on a plane with white people.

Mr. WALSH. Except for this, you say, "Not adjudged mentally incompetent." Now, none of these courts or some of these courts may not know about any such thing as not adjudging a person mentally incompetent. All they may do is adjudge a person insane or sane and by saying "not adjudged mentally incompetent," you may create some new procedure or confer additional authority upon that court. Now, it would seem to me that with respect to those Indians they come in under a different footing from an insane person, and when you say "not adjudged mentally incompetent," you ought not to subject them to the danger of being declared insane.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, what the committee intended to do was, I repeat, to place the Indians on the same plane with the white men in States where it is not necessary to have any other judicial determination except that between sanity and insanity, and we expect the court would follow out with the Indian just what it has carried out with the white people.

Mr. WALSH. Well, if that is intended, there is no reason why the substitute ought to be agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the substitute offered to the amendment of the gentleman from Oklahoma.

The question was taken, and the substitute was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment as amended by the substitute.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. That upon the completion of such final membership roll the Secretary of the Interior, within 90 days thereafter, shall cause a pro rata division to be made of the funds belonging to all tribes of Indians to whom allotments of land have been made and from time to time cause any additional funds to be pro rated which may have been derived from the proceeds of sale or other disposition of the tribal property belonging to such tribe of Indians. Such pro rata shares shall be credited to the individual members whose names appear on the final membership roll of the tribe and held in trust until such time as in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, or as otherwise hereinafter directed, the pro rata shares may be paid to the beneficiaries or expended for their benefit upon their application therefor: Provided, That during the time which any of said funds are held in trust by the United States the same shall bear interest at 4 per cent per annum, but in no case at a less rate than is now provided by law respecting such fund: Provided further, That within 90 days after the completion of the final membership roll of any tribe of Indians the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to pay, upon their application therefor, to all able-bodied and mentally competent Indians over 21 years of age having a quantum of less than one-half Indian blood their pro rata shares of all tribal funds, after deducting any portion which may have been previously paid, together with any other funds which may be found to be due them, and thereafter to pay to other able-bodied and mentally competent members of less than one-half Indian blood their shares, upon application, after they reach the age of 21 years; and within 90 days after the completion of the said final membership roll the said Indians of less than one-half Indian blood, upon receipt by them of their pro rata share of tribal funds then due, shall thereafter be free from any and all restrictions or supervision by the Federal Government: And provided further, That nothing contained in this act shall be construed to impose restrictions heretofore or which hereafter may be removed from Indian lands or other property, nor to prohibit the Secretary of the Interior from removing restrictions upon such allottees as in his opinion may be expedient.

The committee amendments were read, as follows:

Page 4, line 5, after the word "able-bodied," strike out "and" and insert "Indians not adjudged."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Page 4, line 5, after the word "mentally," strike out the words "competent Indians" and insert the word "incompetent."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Page 4, line 11, after the word "able-bodied," strike out the words "and mentally competent" and insert, after the word "members," the words "not adjudged mentally incompetent."

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to discuss that for a moment, if I may. I rise more to discuss the provision in the bill at the bottom of page 3, beginning with line 2—

Provided, That during the time which any of said funds are held in trust by the United States the same shall bear interest at 4 per cent per annum, but in no case at a less rate than is now provided by law respecting such fund.

Now, what is effected by that proviso? Is it a case where we have one fund held for the Indians that pays interest at one rate and another fund at another rate?

Mr. HAYDEN. That is correct.

Mr. HICKS. Depending upon the various treaties?

Mr. HAYDEN. Exactly so. Some of the treaties provide as low as 3 per cent and some provide as high as 5 per cent.

Mr. HICKS. In the case of 3 per cent, why should they pay as low as that? Is it because of some special provision?

Mr. HAYDEN. Some special arrangement where it happened to be a very large fund.

Mr. HICKS. Does not that seem to the gentleman a rather low rate of interest to be paying these Indians at the present time?

Mr. HAYDEN. That was agreed to at the time the United States was selling bonds at 2 per cent.

Mr. HICKS. And they agreed to it at that time?

Mr. HAYDEN. They had to do so.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman from New York yield?

Mr. HICKS. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. FESS. What I wanted to ask was whether this is subject to taxation now by the Federal Government.

Mr. CARTER. You mean the funds of the tribe?

Mr. FESS. Yes.

Mr. CARTER. Oh, no. There is no tax whatever.

Mr. FESS. Would it be subject to tax when they became citizens?

Mr. CARTER. Yes. After it was divided; after the division, and not before.

Mr. FESS. Four per cent subject to tax is not a very high rate.

Mr. CARTER. Well, that would be the condition after the division was made.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, on page 4, line 5, after the word "adjudged," by inserting "as hereinbefore provided."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. CARTER: Page 4, line 5, after the word "adjudged," insert the words "as hereinbefore provided."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, for the purpose of having it as clear as possible, I think it ought to be well enough to have the same language repeated after the word "adjudged," in line 11.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. CARTER: Page 4, line 11, after the word "adjudged," insert the words: "as hereinbefore provided."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. That all or any portion of the pro rata share of the funds or other property placed to the credit of or found to be due to any member of a tribe who shall die intestate which remains unpaid at the date of his death shall descend to his heirs and personal representatives in accordance with the laws of the State or Territory relating to such funds or other property.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the first committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 5, line 6, after the words "or Territory relating to," insert the words "in which."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 5, line 7, after the word "property," insert the words "are located."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 5. That where allotments of land have been made to any tribe of Indians and there remain certain members of such tribe who, at the time such allotments were made, were legally entitled and did not receive an allotment by reason of there being an insufficiency of tribal land, the Secretary of the Interior may determine the equities in such cases and may credit such individual members with an equitable share of the tribal funds in lieu of land before making the pro rata division of such funds to the members of the tribe entitled thereto as provided in section 3 of this act.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all of section 5.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Chairman, I move——

Mr. JUUL. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized.

Mr. JUUL. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that this section 5 is a very good section, and I would like some one who is familiar with this bill to tell me why we should strike it out. Suppose some Indian is omitted entirely from the pro rata division or distribution of matters belonging to the tribe, this provides that where certain members legally entitled to allotment, and did not receive any by reason of there being an insufficiency of tribal land, the Secretary of the Interior may grant him or them an equitable share of the tribal funds, and I do not see why that should be stricken out.

Mr. CARTER. If the gentleman will permit, it is because we wanted to let an adjudicated matter remain res adjudicata. If you place this provision in the bill, you would simply repeat what has been done so often in the past, an error that has been committed often in the past by Congress, by hanging out in front of a hungry bunch of grafting attorneys an inducement to go out all over the country and perhaps hunt up fellows that have no Indian blood—and if they did have it, do not belong to this particular Indian tribe—and bring them in, and perhaps come back to Congress for a fee for attempting to defend these Indians and creating a great lot of unnecessary expense, which in the end, of course, might cause the Indians to come back onto the Federal Government with a claim, because perhaps there was a treaty by which this settlement was made, and it was agreed at the time the roll was closed it was final, and no name should be added. It is put in there as a protection of both the Government and Indian.

Mr. JUUL. If the gentleman will permit me, this is the way the bill reads:

That where allotments of land have been made to any tribe of Indians and there remain certain members of such tribe who, at the time such allotments were made, were legally entitled and did not receive an allotment.

And this section provides they may later be cared for, and you want to strike it out. I do not understand your line of procedure.

Mr. CARTER. It does not change the existing law in the least. If there is a tribe where there is still land to allot, and where the rolls have not been finally closed, then these Indians can come in and make their claims just as they can now. This does not prevent them from doing so.

Mr. JUUL. Why do you strike it out?

Mr. CARTER. For the reason that I explained to the gentleman.

Mr. JUUL. The supposition was that at the time this bill was drafted there was a good and sufficient reason why these men should be protected, and you strike out the provision.

Mr. CARTER. So far as my knowledge goes, there is no necessity for protection. I do not remember why this section was in the bill originally.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I ask for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER. Yes.

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. Is it not a fact that the only person who is legally entitled to an allotment is one whose name is upon the approved roll?

Mr. CARTER. Yes.

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. And therefore there are no persons legally entitled except it is in a case recently raised?

Mr. CARTER. That is true.

Mr. JUUL. Suppose they forget to put them on the roll? Would they not be entitled?

Mr. CARTER. No.

Mr. JUUL. If they were unlawfully kept off the roll?

Mr. CARTER. That is not the question. If the law required that the rolls should be closed at a certain date, and that the tribal property should be divided among those enrolled at that time, then his claim for a division, no matter how equitable, could not be called a legal right. It might be equitable but not legal, for the legal time for adjudication had passed.

Mr. BRIGGS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER. Yes.

Mr. BRIGGS. This bill was reported by the gentleman from Oklahoma?

Mr. CARTER. Yes. I do not remember anything about the section being in the bill originally. As a matter of fact, I introduced a bill for citizenship and other things, and when it was introduced several insertions from other sources were placed in the bill. I do not recall any reason why this section should have been put in the bill at all, because I do not know of any cases where recovery could be sought under this section, nor do I recall the exact reason why it was stricken out.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Did the committee have the opinion of the Secretary of the Interior about striking out this section?

Mr. CARTER. Yes. We had his report.

Mr. WALSH. He favored the elimination?

Mr. CARTER. Yes.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Chairman, I ask for recognition in my own right.

The CHAIRMAN. The debate is closed.

Mr. HASTINGS. I move to strike out the necessary number of words.

I do not know, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, what consideration moved the committee to eliminate this section. I believe that it is an error, and I do not believe that this section ought to be stricken from the bill.

This section simply provides that when these rolls are completed they are then, of course, final. If there be an insufficient amount of land to make the allotments to all the members of that particular tribe, then that number shall be equalized with money. That is all it does.

Now, that is exactly what was done with the Cherokee Tribe of Indians. We had 41,824 Indians. We added certain newborn Cherokees by act of Congress. We found that we did not have a sufficient amount of land to make the allotments. We gave them twice the appraised value of the land in money. That did not add any new names to the roll. That did not give anybody else the right to be enrolled, but it simply took care of those who were enrolled. In my judgment it is a mistake to eliminate this section. I believe it is good legislation, and I believe it ought to be retained in the bill.

Now let me say that these rolls will have to be closed up as of some date. We provide for that. After the rolls are closed, then, of course, no outside person can come in and get upon the roll. And I will say to my good friend from Illinois [Mr. JUUL], who is sitting in front of me and who asked a question about this matter some moments ago, Suppose some one was left out? He is given notice that these rolls are being made. Some tribunal has to pass upon it. We give that jurisdiction to the Secretary of the Interior. He, through his inferior officers and agents, makes these rolls. Applications are made to them. Testimony is taken. The Government is heard, and the representatives of the tribe are heard. Finally, each individual case is passed upon, first by the local man and finally approved by the Secretary of the Interior, before that roll is finally approved. Now the court has to pass upon it, and the Secretary is the tribunal that is fixed here. It is the tribunal that has been fixed with reference to the making of all the Indian rolls.

Mr. JUUL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HASTINGS. Yes.

Mr. JUUL. But in this section, by striking it out, you are striking out the provision where a man was legally entitled to receive lands and did not receive an allotment. You are providing that he shall not receive it. My distinguished friend from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER] a moment ago said a man might have an equitable right but not a legal right. Two lines farther down you provide—in line 13—that the Secretary of the Interior may determine the legal rights and equities. By striking this out you strike out the right of a man to secure a hearing in equity for fraud perpetrated against him or anything else. You deprive a man of his legal rights and his equities, too.

Mr. HASTINGS. I am not in favor of striking out this section. This section provides for the mode of procedure when an Indian is enrolled and there is not a sufficient amount of land to allot to him. He ought to be paid in money in lieu of the allotment. That is all that this section does.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask some member of the Committee on Indian Affairs about the word "Territory." This word has been stricken out in several places in the bill. I understand that those Territories have now become States. The inquiry I want to make is what provision do we make for Indians in the Territory of Alaska?

Mr. HAYDEN. They are not cared for by the Indian Bureau. They are cared for by the Bureau of Education.

Mr. HICKS. Why do we separate one class of Indians in the States of the Union from the Indians in the Territories?

Mr. SNYDER. There are none in the Territories.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. They are Esquimaux in Alaska.

Mr. HICKS. Are there no Indians in Alaska who are not Esquimaux?

Mr. SNYDER. The reason why the word "Territory" is stricken out is that they are eliminated from the jurisdiction of this act, which was framed by the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the chairman announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. WALSH. A division, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. A division is demanded.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 23, noes 3.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 6. That for the further purpose of determining the competency of Indians and placing them on their individual responsibility the President of the United States shall appoint three commissions, each commission to be composed of three persons, one of whom shall be a member of an Indian tribe, another a member of the Board of Indian Commissioners, and another to be designated from the Indian Service, the last of whom shall have a civil-service status.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 5, line 22, after the word "a," insert the word "competent."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAWLEY. There is an amendment to change the number of the section.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 5, line 18, strike out the figure "6" and insert the figure "5."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 7. That each commission shall organize by electing one of its membership chairman and another secretary, and each commissioner shall receive a salary of not to exceed $2,500 per annum and expenses while actually engaged in the discharge of the duties imposed hereunder, and not to exceed $50,000 of the amount of $135,000 carried under the head "General expenses of the Indian Service," at page 13, of the Indian appropriation bill which passed the House on January 22, 1918, is hereby made available for such purpose. The term of office of each commissioner shall be two years, during which time such work shall be completed, at the end of which time all of such commissions shall be abolished.

With the following committee amendment:

Mr. LONGWORTH. Is not the Clerk authorized to renumber the sections?

The CHAIRMAN. These amendments are printed in the bill.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read the following committee amendment:

Page 6, line 8, strike out the figure "13" and insert the figure "6."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read the following committee amendment:

Page 6, line 8, after the word "appropriation," strike out the words "the bill which passed the House on January 22, 1918," and insert "act approved June 30, 1919 (Public, No. 3)."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma, a member of the committee, offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. CARTER: Page 6, line 6, after the word "of" the first time in the line, strike out down to "(numbered 3)," in line 10, and insert "applicable amounts carried hereafter by any annual Indian appropriation act."

Mr. WALSH. I reserve a point of order on that. We have already agreed to the committee amendment. I doubt if we now can come in with an amendment striking out an amendment which we have already agreed to.

Mr. SNYDER. Why does the gentleman offer that amendment?

Mr. CARTER. It was developed before the committee, as the gentleman from New York will recall, and in the House that taking this entire amount would perhaps be too much of a drain on the $135,000, but that a larger amount could be more appropriately taken from other applicable items in the bill. That was the reason of it.

Mr. WALSH. I withdraw the reservation of the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAWLEY. I should like to inquire of the chairman of the committee if the salary of $2,500 per annum and expenses provided in line 4, page 6, are to be paid only when they are serving, or are the salary and expenses for the entire year?

Mr. SNYDER. I suppose it is a per annum amount.

Mr. HAWLEY. Then there ought to be a comma after the words "per annum."

Mr. SNYDER. It was supposed by the committee that these men would be employed the year round, and they undoubtedly will be.

Mr. CARTER. I think the best inducement we could put in the bill to keep them employed the year round would be to leave the comma out and make the salary, as well as the expenses, dependent upon actual service.

Mr. HAWLEY. That was the purpose of it?

Mr. CARTER. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. That is the best way to make them work the year round.

Mr. TILSON. I move to strike out the last word. I wish to ask the chairman of the committee some questions in regard to the personnel of these commissions. It is provided that there shall be three commissions, and that each commission shall be composed of three persons, one of whom shall be a competent member of an Indian tribe, another a member of the Board of Indian Commissioners, and another to be designated from the Indian Service. How many members are there on the Board of Indian Commissioners?

Mr. SNYDER. Ten, I believe.

Mr. TILSON. Is it certain that of those 10 men there are 3 who will be willing to serve upon these three competency commissions?

Mr. SNYDER. It is not certain, so far as the knowledge of the chairman of the committee goes.

Mr. TILSON. You are limiting the appointment to these 10 men?

Mr. SNYDER. It is believed that the members of the Board of Indian Commissioners are so imbued with the idea that the Indians should be made competent and become citizens that they may be induced to serve as commissioners, especially as they have no salaries now.

Mr. CARTER. I have talked with several members of the Board of Indian Commissioners concerning the bill, and I do not think there will be very much doubt about their very strong desire to take a part in doing this work.

Mr. SNYDER. I know they want to do it.

Mr. TILSON. It will be in line with the work that they are already doing voluntarily?

Mr. CARTER. No; not in line with the work that they are already doing voluntarily, but in line with the work that they think should be done.

Mr. SNYDER. The gentleman does not mean exactly that. If there is one thing that the commission is in existence for it is to make Indians competent, and that is the intent of this whole act.

Mr. TILSON. I understand that they are largely students of the Indian question, and surely this will give them an opportunity for pursuing their studies of the Indian.

Mr. SNYDER. Yes.

Mr. CARTER. What I wanted to say was that they are not now serving upon any competency commission.

Mr. SNYDER. No; but if any body of men should understand what are the requisites of Indian competency, they are the ones.

Mr. CARTER. And if anyone will see to it that the Indian is properly protected, they will be the ones.

Mr. TILSON. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 8. That it shall be the duty of such commission to visit in person each Indian reservation and other community in the United States where Indians have been or may hereafter be allotted lands and whenever practicable the home of each such Indian of one-half or more Indian blood with a view to establishing the capabilities of each, removing restrictions from upon his lands and other property, and delivering to him a patent in fee if he is adjudged to be competent by such commission.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 6, line 20, strike out the word "removing" and insert "and such commission is authorized to remove."

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the chairman in reference to the provision of this section, "That it shall be the duty of the commission to visit in person each Indian reservation and other community in the United States where Indians have been or may hereafter be allotted lands, and whenever practicable the home of each such Indian of one-half or more Indian blood," and so forth. May I ask the gentleman how many Indians that would include? It seems to me that it must be a tremendous number, and to pay a visit to every home would be a tremendous task.

Mr. SNYDER. It does not mean that the commission must necessarily go to every Indian home. It means that where a question is raised as to the competency of the Indian, and they wish to make a further investigation, they are required to go to his home and see whether his condition is one which meets the requirements laid down to make a competent Indian.

Mr. HICKS. Has the gentleman made any estimate as to the number of Indians that this will probably refer to?

Mr. SNYDER. Yes; we think it ought to mean a matter of 50,000 or 60,000 Indians.

Mr. HICKS. And this work is to be done by how many men?

Mr. SNYDER. Several commissions in addition to the commission now at work. There are competency commissions in operation all the time, but they are not particularly directed by law as to how they shall work or where.

Mr. HICKS. With the facilities of travel in the western country, in Arizona and New Mexico, where I judge the larger number of Indians are located, and the means of travel not well developed, it seems to me that it would entail a tremendous burden.

Mr. SNYDER. There are 22 States in the Union where competency commissions would have to go.

Mr. HICKS. The large bulk of them are in the southwestern country.

Mr. SNYDER. In the West and Southwest.

Mr. HICKS. It seems to me that this would impose on the commission an almost impossible task.

Mr. SNYDER. No; it is not impossible that they may do it in one year. We took it up with the Secretary of the Interior and he suggested we make it two years, thinking that it could be finished in less than that time.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I ask recognition for an amendment which I wish to offer before action is taken on the committee amendment, because it may involve a change of language later on in the bill. I move to amend, on page 6, lines 15 and 16, by striking out the words "that it shall be the duty of such commission to visit in person"; and, in line 19, after the word "blood," insert "shall be visited by one of the commission herein provided."

So that part of the section will read as follows:

Each Indian reservation and other community in the United States where Indians have been or may hereafter be allotted lands, and whenever practicable the home of each such Indian of one-half or more Indian blood, shall be visited by one of the commission herein provided with a view to establishing the capabilities of each—

And so forth.

As it is now phrased it says that it shall be the duty of such commission to visit in person each Indian reservation. It is rather hard to determine what you mean by a commission visiting in person. My amendment makes clear what is intended.

Mr. SNYDER. I see no objection to the gentleman's amendment, and I am willing to have it inserted in the bill.

Mr. WALSH. As I understand, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from New York is willing to accept the amendment, and I ask to modify the amendment by inserting before the word "each," in line 16, the word "That," beginning with a capital.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts modifies his amendment in the way stated, and the question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts as modified.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, as to the last part of the gentleman's amendment I did not gather what it provided.

Mr. WALSH. If the gentleman will yield I will read the language as it will be as amended:

That each Indian reservation and other community in the United States where Indians have been or may hereafter be allotted lands, and whenever practicable the home of each such Indian of one-half or more Indian blood, shall be visited by one of the commissions herein provided with a view to establishing the capabilities of each.

Mr. RAKER. The way the bill stands now there are three commissions appointed consisting of three members each. The language, as it is on page 6, lines 15 and 16, would clearly make it the duty, and it might be a question whether it did not require, all the commissions to visit each one of the reservations and each Indian on the reservations. The amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts leaves it specific so that only one commission will visit each one of the reservations.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment, in lines 20 and 21, page 6.

The question was taken, and the committee amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 6, line 22, strike out the word "upon."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 6, line 22, after the word "and," strike out the words "delivering to him a patent in fee if he is adjudged competent by such commission" and insert the words "the Secretary of the Interior is authorized and directed to deliver to the Indians so adjudged to be competent a patent in fee."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the amendment, to insert the words "issue and" before the word "deliver" in line 1 on page 7.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from California.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 7, line 1, before the word "deliver," insert the words "issue and."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. There is one other amendment changing the number of the section, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 6, line 16, strike out the figure "8" and insert in lieu thereof the figure "7."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 9. That each commission shall make a detailed report to Congress annually on the first Monday in December setting forth the progress of the work, shewing the number of applications received, those favorably acted upon, and those rejected on each Indian reservation and in each community where lands have been or may hereafter be allotted to Indians, and shall further report the number of reservations and communities where lands have been, or may hereafter be, allotted to Indians but not reached by their investigations, and any other data that may assist Congress to deal intelligently with the question of competency and incompetency of Indians.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Just what is meant by the language "showing the number of applications received"? Does that mean that the individual Indians are to make applications to be adjudged competent? If so, there will probably not be many applications made.

Mr. SNYDER. That is the reason for the insertion of the language at that point. We want to find out how many Indians actually want to be adjudged competent.

Mr. TILSON. Is it not expected that these commissions will upon their own motions go among the Indians and investigate as to whether or not there are some who should be declared competent who do not apply?

Mr. SNYDER. That is the intent of this bill, that the commission shall find the Indian that ought to be declared competent and will declare him competent; but the committee thought, in view of the fact that there has been so much debate as to whether Indians desire to become competent, that the Congress might want to know the number of those Indians who actually made applications.

Mr. TILSON. Is there any provision in the bill requiring an application or calling for an application on the part of the Indian himself?

Mr. SNYDER. That is unnecessary, because that is the rule now. Where an Indian desires to become competent, he has to make application to the superintendent of the reservation, or some one in authority.

Mr. TILSON. Then it is not intended in anywise to negative the proposition the gentleman stated earlier in the day, that it is the intention of these commissions to enter aggressively upon the task of finding competent Indians and declaring those competent who ought to be declared competent, whether they make application or not?

Mr. SNYDER. If I thought the language carried the suggestion the gentleman speaks of, I would favor striking it out.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 7, line 3, strike out the figure "9" and insert the figure "8."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee a question. In this new section 7 it is required that these commissions should go to these reservations and visit the Indians individually, with a view to establishing the capabilities of each. I suppose that means the capacity of the Indian in order to see whether he should be declared competent to do business and whether a patent should issue to him. In the old section 9, now 8, on page 7, certain things are required in the report, and I am wondering whether or not the committee did not intend the commission shall report each Indian who has been declared competent and also the capability of each.

Mr. SNYDER. Certainly. Each commission will have to make a full report to Congress on or before the 1st of next December, and of their activities.

Mr. RAKER. While the language is not specific, I wanted to know whether it was the intention of the committee in reporting this to Congress the commission should present the name of each Indian declared competent and each Indian declared incompetent.

Mr. SNYDER. I call the gentleman's attention to the last three lines of section 8—

And any other data that may assist Congress to deal intelligently with the question of competency and incompetency of Indians.

Mr. RAKER. I have read that. That is a general clause. Under the statement of the chairman of the committee in respect to the meaning of the language, I deem it that there will be no question in presenting to Congress the names of these allottees that they find are competent and capable of handling their own business.

Mr. SNYDER. I do not think we went as far as to feel that we would have the names of each one. I think it was more the number. I will ask the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER] whether he understands that language to mean that it shall embody the name?

Mr. RAKER. The commission goes to a reservation. It makes a long trip. The commission investigates with a view of establishing the capabilities of each Indian. What the Congress wants to know, what the people at home want to know, is just which one of these Indians is competent.

Mr. CARTER. What else would they report under that language?

Mr. RAKER. It seems to me that they should so report.

Mr. CARTER. That is the only thing they should report.

Mr. RAKER. But you do not require it in section 8.

Mr. CARTER. Section 8 requires the report.

Mr. RAKER. It simply says that they shall make a report in regard to the land, but it does not say a word in regard to the Indian himself; that is the very gist of this bill.

Mr. CARTER. What is the gentleman's inquiry? What is the gentleman's point?

Mr. SNYDER. As I understand, the gentleman wants the name of each Indian declared competent reported to Congress. Has not that been done in the report?

Mr. RAKER. I would think any man making that report would make it that way, although specific legislation requires him to do another thing; and I was just wondering whether or not the desire of the committee and one of the things they are after is to have a report made and an adjudication of each Indian who is competent and each Indian who is not competent.

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. Will the gentleman yield? I will ask that the gentleman's time be extended three minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nebraska? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I think under this language there would be no doubt but what the names would be furnished to Congress if any indication was given by the committee in its investigations or anything else that the names were needed. There might be some reason for that, but I am frank to admit I do not see any very urgent reason why the names of the Indians should be presented to Congress. The intention was that Congress should know something of the amount of work that has been done and was being done and what progress the commissions were making in the discharge of their duties and the actual disposition of the Indian proposition. That is the object of the committee.

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. If I understand what the gentleman desires, the names of the Indians, their location, and so forth, all to be given in the report to the Indian Department and can be subsequently furnished, if it is desired, while to give each Indian's name, and so forth, will so encumber the report that no person would be interested in it.

Mr. RAKER. Let me ask this question, Is it not a fact that the whole gist of the purpose of this bill is to locate and discover the names, after an inquiry, of an Indian who is competent, and after you do that, and not before, you issue him a patent? That is all there is in this bill.

Mr. CARTER. Certainly; and that will be done when the Secretary of the Interior issues him a patent.

Mr. RAKER. I just raised the point, but in deference to the suggestion of the present chairman and past chairman I hope the section is sufficient to get the results I have suggested and the report will be made accordingly.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. JUUL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, if in order. I would like to discuss it.

The CHAIRMAN. There is no last word.

Mr. JUUL. How many words will it take to get me the floor for five minutes?

Mr. RAKER. Move to strike out the section.

Mr. JUUL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the section. Now, Mr. Chairman, if this was a bill seeking to regulate the property of a white man we would know all about it and we know the property had to make good its title through purchase, descent, or somehow. Here is the property of Indians who have held property in common with a number of other Indians, and the fact of the matter is I do not suppose there are a half dozen men on this floor who would know the legal status of the lands in the hands of the Indian after he takes title to a patent issued to him by the United States Government after he has become a citizen of this Nation.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JUUL. In just a moment.

Mr. RAKER. That is not a very fair statement the gentleman has made.

Mr. JUUL. Let me work out my statement, I will not take any more time than that to which I am entitled. We all know the status of the thing if white men own property, but here is a class of men who have been under the protection of the United States Government for ages and they have held their property in common and as Indians. This bill contained, when it was first introduced, a system of protection of the Indians so that in case a mistake was made in allotting to him, if he was omitted from the roster, if he in any way should not take that which the law entitles him to take, there was a way in this bill for protecting these men. Now, if this Indian was a white man I would tell him I would go into any court in the country and defend his title to the land, but if I understand this bill correctly now it means to deprive him not alone of his legal rights but of his equitable rights if he forgets to register or a fraud is perpetrated upon him, and you have stricken out the only language in this bill that protects him. I sat here and looked at the bill and thought surely after page 5 we would come to something between page 5 and page 8.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield right there? We will get more time. Now, will the gentleman put his finger on just that part of the bill wherein the Indian is not protected but is literally robbed, as the gentleman says?

Mr. JUUL. Yes; I will be glad to do that. I do not know who were the original drafters of this bill but I take it that they were deuced sight better lawyers than the men who moved to strike out section 5. They were better lawyers. They knew at some time or another that mistakes would be made, that frauds would be perpetrated, and that when the Indian came in to get his rights he could not get the same protection under the same laws that white men are entitled to, and so in section 5 they gave these Indians a specific line of protection that no white man has. I mean participation in tribal funds if he secured no lands.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield for a question right there?

Mr. JUUL. You gentlemen have sat here and stricken that out, and you have not provided anything else in the bill to look after the men who may be wronged. I do not say it is intended by anybody——

Mr. RAKER and Mr. HAYDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JUUL. Now, let me tell you this: This bill, all the way through, to me, looks like an honest piece of legislation. It looks like a piece of legislation that intended to take care of people who for a couple of centuries have been unable to take care of themselves.

Mr. CARTER. What people in two centuries have not been able to take care of themselves?

Mr. JUUL. The people you deprive by striking out section 5.

Mr. CARTER. That is not any answer at all. I want the gentleman to be specific. I want to find out what he is driving at.

Mr. JUUL. The Indians you failed to take care of in the allotment.

Mr. CARTER. Let me find out what the gentleman is talking about. Does he mean the Indians who are on the roll?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Illinois may have five additional minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. CARTER. Does the gentleman mean the Indians who are not on the Indian roll? I am trying to nail something down and get something specific. These general charges about somebody neglecting to do things and not doing their duty and statements that somebody knows a better lawyer would do so-and-so is not getting any place.

Mr. JUUL. I will answer the gentleman in the language of the bill. Those who drafted the original bill, I take it, were good lawyers.

They say:

That where allotments of land have been made to any tribe of Indians and there remain certain members of such tribe who at the time such allotments were made were legally entitled and did not receive an allotment by reason of there being an insufficiency of tribal land—

That is a good reason. The reason they did not get land enough was that there was not enough of it.

Then this bill comes in and says:

The Secretary of the Interior may determine the equities in such cases—

And this is where the Indian comes in on the white man's legislation; if he can not be protected by law he may be protected in equity:

The Secretary of the Interior may determine the equities in such cases and may credit such individual members with an equitable share of the tribal funds in lieu of the land—

Meaning money.

Mr. HAYDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JUUL. I will.

Mr. HAYDEN. My recollection is that when section 5 was discussed in the Committee on Indian Affairs it was pointed out that to omit it from the bill left the existing law exactly as it is. Where allotments and the division of tribal moneys are provided for under existing law, this bill should permit such provisions of law as provided in the different reservations. Therefore, to remain silent on the subject took no right away from the Indians and section 5 was unnecessary.

Mr. JUUL. I will tell the gentleman the difference between an Indian and a white man in this: As a white man I would not give straws whether you put me in the bill or not. I would have my equitable rights and nobody could take them away from me. You are making him a white man now and you rob him of the rights that this bill gave him as an Indian.

Mr. HAYDEN. If you make a white man of the Indian and a white man does not need this legislation, it follows that section 5 is not necessary to this bill.

Mr. JUUL. The gentleman is splitting hairs. You took his property away before you made him a white man.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired. The Clerk will read.

Mr. JUUL. I think this is important. I think these gentlemen made a mistake, and I think I ought to be permitted to call particular attention to it. I ask for a few moments.

The CHAIRMAN. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. JUUL. I want time enough to discuss this matter with these gentlemen.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will have to be specific.

Mr. JUUL. Five more minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent for five minutes more. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. RAKER. Suppose there are 1,600 acres of Indian land and there are 200 Indians. If you allot the first hundred 160 acres apiece, you take up the entire 1,600 acres, and the others will get nothing. There would still be 100 Indians on that reservation who would be deprived entirely of their rights in the land. Would that be proper?

Mr. JUUL. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. RAKER. Yes.

Mr. JUUL. I asked the gentleman the same question when the oil-leasing bill was up. Is the gentleman speaking in my time or in his own?

Mr. RAKER. I am asking you that as a question.

Mr. JUUL. My contention on this floor ought to be quite plain to the gentleman.

Mr. RAKER. It is.

Mr. JUUL. You had a remedy for a certain evil in here in this transfer from an Indian status to a white man's status. You had a remedy in this bill, in section 5, to provide that if there was any wrong done this man, that he not alone would have his legal rights but he would have his equitable rights. You specifically strike that out; and I do not think that a Member of the Congress of the United States is doing much wrong by asking the gentlemen who come in here and ask for the striking out of this section if we are legislating for or against the Indian when we strike it out. I will say this, that I am standing here not knowing an Indian anywhere. I have no interest in this matter; but if we did sit here and see these things from time to time and did not call attention to them we would be unworthy of sitting here. I see a "negro in the woodpile," and I am against the "negro in the woodpile."

Mr. SNYDER. The gentleman, of course, is talking out of order.

Mr. JUUL. Will the gentleman point out where I am out of order?

Mr. SNYDER. The gentleman should have discussed it before the section was passed, and when it was under consideration.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add a new section, as follows:

"SEC. 9. That any Indian allottee entitled to a patent in fee under the provisions of this act who owes money to the Government from reimbursable funds or other sources must make final settlement of his indebtedness, and on his neglect or refusal to do so the amount of such indebtedness shall be deducted from any tribal or other funds that may be due him. In the event that the tribal or other fund is insufficient to cancel the indebtedness, the amount remaining unpaid shall be a first lien on his allotment, and the fact of such lien shall be recited on the face of each patent in fee issued and the amount of the lien set forth thereon; and the receipt of the Secretary of the Interior or of the officer, agent, or employee duly authorized by him for that purpose, for the payment of the amount assessed against any allotment as herein provided shall, when duly recorded by the recorder of deeds in the county where the land is located, operate as a satisfaction of such lien."

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the committee amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oregon offers an amendment to the committee amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HAWLEY to the committee amendment: Page 7, line 25, after the word "thereon," insert the following: "and the Secretary of the Interior, in the event proceedings at law become necessary to collect any amount due, shall ask for the sale only of such portion of the land transferred as may be deemed necessary to liquidate the indebtedness, and any surplus remaining after the indebtedness is paid shall be paid to the patentee or his grantee or grantees."

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, unless there is some question, I do not care to discuss the amendment.

Mr. SNYDER. The committee is agreeable to that amendment.

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman proposing the amendment a question. Would it not in many cases bring the Indian to the point where he would lose money? For instance, I have a quarter section. That might be valuable if used together, but split up it might sell for much less than if sold together. Why not make his amendment so that the Indian, the defendant in the proceedings, may, if he desires, ask for the sale of a part, and of a particular part? In that way the Indian could, if he wished, have a particular part sold or he could have it all sold together.

Mr. HAWLEY. In answer to the inquiry of the gentleman, the purpose was that if the Indian was allotted 200 acres of land and it required the sale of only 40 acres to satisfy the debt on his part to the Government, not to sell the entire tract but only sufficient to pay the debt and to leave him his home. The idea is to leave the Indian a sufficient amount of land to maintain himself on and not to encourage the sale of the entire Indian allotment. In my judgment they are better in my country on the land than with the money in their pockets.

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. The gentleman is undoubtedly right about that; but why not leave it with the Indian to select his order rather than to the Secretary of the Interior?

Mr. HAWLEY. I think the Secretary of the Interior will have at heart the interest of the Indian.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oregon to the committee amendment.

The amendment to the committee amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on agreeing to the committee amendment as amended.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CARTER: Page 8, after the Hawley amendment, insert as a new section——

The CHAIRMAN. This committee amendment has not been disposed of yet. The gentleman's amendment will come in afterwards. The question now is on agreeing to the committee amendment as amended by the Hawley amendment.

The committee amendment as amended was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Now the Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER].

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 8, after the committee amendment, insert as a new section:
"SEC. 10. That lands to which these patents may be issued and other properties as to which restrictions as to alienation are, or may be, removed shall not be subjected to or held liable to any form of personal claim or demand against the owners thereof, existing prior to the issuing of such fee patent or removal of such restriction."

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, if the Chair will permit, I will state that the condition is just this: Under the present conditions, before restrictions are removed and before a fee patent is issued, all of the lands and other property of the Indians are not subject to process of law. That is what the restriction on the property means. Now, the purpose of this amendment is to prevent any one who now has a claim against an Indian from asserting that claim and getting a process against the property restricted at the time the claim was originated.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT. If a claim arises in the future, it will not be barred?

Mr. CARTER. If the claim arises after the removal of restriction, it will not be barred. If it arose prior to that time, it is barred.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER].

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment as a new section, following the amendment just adopted, offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California offers an amendment as a new section. The Clerk will report it. The Chair understands that this is a new section, section 11?

Mr. RAKER. Yes.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. RAKER: Page 8, after the amendment offered by Mr. CARTER, insert as a new section:
"SEC. 11. That where allotments of land have been made to any Indians of a tribe provided for in this act and there remain certain members of that tribe who, at the time such allotments were made, were legally entitled, and did not receive an allotment by reason of there being an insufficiency of tribal land, the Secretary of the Interior may determine the equities in such cases and may credit such individual members with an equitable share of the tribal funds in lieu of land before making the pro rata division of such funds to the members of the tribe entitled thereto as provided in section 3 of this act."

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. RAKER. Just a moment. It is not identically the same.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order on the ground that this is a reenactment of section 5, and not germane at this point of the bill, and not necessary.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 10.——

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will be authorized to renumber the section as 11 instead of 10.

There was no objection.

Mr. JUUL. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. JUUL. I want to ask the Chair at what stage of the proceedings a motion to recommit will be in order.

The CHAIRMAN. After the third reading of the bill in the House.

Mr. CRAMTON. If the gentleman will yield, he can secure what he desires by asking for a separate vote in the House, and he can ask for a roll call if necessary.

Mr. SNYDER. If the gentleman will ask to return to that section, if he desires to offer an amendment, I have no objection.

Mr. RAKER. The gentleman has made the suggestion that we return to section 5.

Mr. SNYDER. If the committee desires it, it is agreeable to me.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will finish the reading of section 11.

Mr. RAKER. Before we get through with the section I ask unanimous consent to return to section 5.

Mr. WALSH. I object, now. Let us wait until we finish the reading of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 11. That the provisions of this act shall not apply to the Five Civilized Tribes nor to the Osage Tribe of Indians in Oklahoma.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HAWLEY. Why is that called section 11 instead of 10?

The CHAIRMAN. There was another section agreed to as an amendment.

Mr. HAWLEY. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER] offered a new section?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, on page 8, line 9, after the word "Oklahoma," to strike out the period and insert "nor to the Seneca Nation of Indians of the Allegheny, Cattaraugus, and Oil Springs Reservation in New York.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CARTER: Page 8, line 9, after the word "Oklahoma," strike out the period and insert a comma and the following: "nor to the Seneca Nation of Indians of the Allegheny, Cattaraugus, and Oil Springs Reservation in New York."

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I suppose there is some reason for this amendment. A few years ago I was told that one of the Indian tribes still in existence in the State of New York had an anomalous government. I was told that whereas at that time women generally throughout the United States were not permitted to vote, yet in this Indian tribe in New York men were not permitted to vote, that the women did all the voting, held the offices, determined the policy of the tribe, and that it was a very successful government. Now, I do not know whether these men up there are citizens and are allowed to vote at elections for State officers or for Representatives in Congress. I was told that they were not permitted to vote in elections relating to tribal affairs. Now, we propose to grant to the women of the country suffrage generally, but here is a proposition, as I understand it, to deny the right of suffrage to these poor men up there. If we are going to give everybody, including Indians, the right of suffrage, why should we restrict it as to the Indian tribes in New York? Are they too far removed from civilization, so that it is impossible for the influences of the modern day to reach them? I hope somebody will give us some reason for this proposed amendment.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, I am very glad to offer an explanation. These three tribes of Indians in New York State are very far advanced in civilization. A great many of their young people have gone to Carlisle or to the Haskell School. Most of the younger people are very anxious to better their condition under the provisions of this bill; but the fact remains that there is an old land claim hanging over these tribes. The land was deeded to the Indians under a provision in the grant that if the tribal relations were broken up their land should revert to the Ogden Land Co. This matter has been up in the Federal courts and in the courts of the State of New York, but it has never been decided on the merits of the case. It has always been dismissed on technicalities. Now, the Indians of the Seneca Nation are anxious to come under the provisions of this bill when this Ogden Land Co. matter has been settled in the courts so that they will not endanger the title to their property by submitting to the provisions contained in this legislation. That is the only reason why they are asking to be excepted from the provisions of this act at the present time. Eventually the title to their property, as between them and the Ogden Land Co., will be settled, then you will find them anxious to come in under the provisions of this act. That is the reason for this amendment.

Mr. WALSH. Do they permit the women of the tribe to vote and exclude the men from voting?

Mr. REED of New York. Not that I know of.

Mr. WALSH. That does not involve the tribe which the gentleman from Illinois refers to?

Mr. REED of New York. No.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I think it does.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to section 5.

Mr. WALSH. We discussed section 5, and the amendment proposed by the committee was adopted on a division, by a vote of 27 to 3. I do not think we ought to return to it. I object.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill to the House with the amendments thereto, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to, and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. CRAMTON. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has recognized the gentleman from New York. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New York.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. MADDEN, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 288) for the purpose of conferring citizenship upon Indians, segregation of Indian tribal property, and for other purposes, had directed him to report the same to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. SNYDER. I move the previous question on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment?

Mr. JUUL. I demand a separate vote on the amendment striking out section 5.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any other amendment? If not, the Chair will put the other amendments in gross.

The other amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment to strike out section 5.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. WALSH) there were 6 ayes and 33 noes.

So the amendment was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BLANTON) there were 63 ayes and 9 noes.

So the bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. SNYDER, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take up the bill H. R. 2264 for consideration, a bill for the relief of the St. Croix Chippewa Indians of Wisconsin.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I do not think any one bill ought to come up by unanimous consent, and I object.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take up the bill S. 2890. In connection with that I wish to say that we are really entitled to this day, but in making the original request to take up the bill just passed, unfortunately I asked unanimous consent instead of making the proper request. Now, I desire to call up the bill S. 2890.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not think the gentleman is entitled to call it up without permission of the House. The Chair thinks—and it may have been the fault of the Chair—that when the Chair put the unanimous-consent request it was not to give the day to the Indian Committee, but it was for the consideration of that particular bill.

Mr. WALSH. A parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WALSH. I would like to inquire how upon Calendar Wednesday a committee which was not entitled to the call was permitted to have considered a measure by unanimous consent when it did not have the right to call up the bill on the calendar from that committee?

The SPEAKER. Because unanimous consent was given on the ground of the absence of the gentleman from Oklahoma on the last Calendar Wednesday, when the committee could not consider it. It was given the right to call up this one bill.

Mr. SNYDER. The Speaker is correct about that, but really under the situation the Committee on Indian Affairs is entitled to the day.

The SPEAKER. There is a very short time left to-day, and the Chair will submit the question for unanimous consent.

Mr. GARNER. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker. What committee had the call on this Calendar Wednesday?

The SPEAKER. The Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. GARNER. Was that committee called this morning?

The SPEAKER. It was, and the Committee on Patents comes next.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the Indian Committee got consent to take up only one bill on this Calendar Wednesday for a specific purpose, I object to the further consideration of any of these bills.

THE VIRGIN ISLANDS.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I present the following resolution, and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That a joint commission to consist of three Members of the Senate and three Members of the House of Representatives, to be appointed by the Vice President of the United States, and the Speaker of the House, respectively, is hereby created to visit the Virgin Islands and to report fully to Congress as to existing conditions in the said islands, and particularly to report and recommend action by Congress, if need there be therefor, with reference to whether the present government under Executive direction should be superseded by civil government provided by Congress as contemplated by act of March 3, 1917 (39 Stat., p. 1132), said government being now only temporary in character and by order of the President being now vested in officers of the Navy; also, as to whether Congress should at this time provide for a civil government of the island by an organic act; also what, if any, legislation is necessary pending the formation and adoption of an organic act, and as to the general conditions existing in the islands. Said report to be filed at the earliest date practicable, and during the Sixty-sixth Congress. That the expenses of said commission in carrying out the provisions of this resolution shall be paid in equal proportions from the contingent funds of the Senate and the House of Representatives, upon the audit and order, respectively, of the ranking Senate and House members of said commission, the total amount not to exceed the sum of $2,500.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this resolution is to correct and enable the Senate Clerk to make a proper record of its proceedings. On yesterday the House passed this resolution in the exact words that have just been read from the Clerk's desk.

The Senate has passed a joint resolution. The House changed that to a concurrent resolution, and the Senate clerks are unable to make their records tally with the action of the House and the Senate in the premises. It is for the purpose of enabling the Senate clerks to keep their records properly that we pass this resolution and make it a House concurrent resolution.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to call the attention of the gentleman from Illinois to this apparent inefficiency in the organization of the Senate and the House under Republican administration. I recall distinctly some criticisms made in the last Congress and the Congress previous to that in respect to some inefficiencies on the Democratic side. I merely want to direct his attention to this particular resolution and some others of a similar nature.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, it is true that during the Democratic administration of the House and the Senate these sloppy, untechnical, unbusinesslike methods of amending joint resolutions were several times referred to. I regretted when the matter came up before the House the other day, and I called attention to the situation. The employees of the House and the Senate now, some of them the same employees, recognizing the difference between the sloppy methods of the Democratic administration and the businesslike methods of Republican administration, have called attention to the fact that the sloppy methods ought not to prevail. Thereupon we seek to correct them, something which our Democratic friends never attempted to do.

Mr. GARNER. May I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the House is following the same procedure now that the Democrats followed in correcting the mistakes they made. This resolution is for the same purpose.

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SEARS. In order that we may not get too sloppy, I would inquire under what rule we are now proceeding?

The SPEAKER. We are proceeding under the rules of the House. Unanimous consent has been given for the consideration of the resolution. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following privileged resolution, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate be respectfully requested to return to the House of Representatives Senate joint resolution 69, with amendments of the House thereto, adopted January 13, 1920.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, just one moment. The gentleman offered a privileged resolution. Under what rule of the House does this become a privileged resolution?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Then I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution. Is there objection?

Mr. GARD. Let us have the resolution again reported.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the resolution.

There being no objection, the Clerk again reported the resolution.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, in view of the fact that the last two "privileged" resolutions offered by the gentleman from Kansas were in fact not privileged, I want to know whether it will be necessary to reserve points of order hereafter on whether they are privileged?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I did not offer them as privileged resolutions.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman offered this as a privileged resolution.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I am inclined to think that it is privileged.

Mr. BLANTON. And the one offered the other day as privileged turned out not to be privileged.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. But the gentleman did not offer it as a privileged resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. RIDDICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the railroad bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, are they the gentleman's own remarks?

Mr. RIDDICK. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. If they are his own remarks, without any newspaper reports, I shall not object.

Mr. RIDDICK. They are.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend and revise my remarks made to-day.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may revise my remarks on the Indian bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. DUPRÉ, for 10 days, on account of important business.

To Mr. EAGLE (at the request of Mr. WINGO), on account of illness.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee, as indicated below:

S. 3385. An act to authorize the War Department to restore the Chickamauga and Chattanooga National Park to its condition prior to use for military purposes during the war with Germany and to appropriate the necessary funds therefor; to the Committee on Appropriations.

ENROLLED BILL PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. RAMSEY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States, for his approval, the following bill:

H. R. 3175. An act authorizing local drainage districts to drain certain public lands in the State of Arkansas, counties of Mississippi and Poinsett, and subjecting said lands to taxation.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, January 15, 1920, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting supplemental estimate of appropriations required by the National Park Service for the fiscal year 1920 (H. Doc. No. 603); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

2. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting estimate of appropriation required for the protection and improvement of Zion National Park, Utah, fiscal year 1920, and for construction of buildings at Hot Springs, Ark. (H. Doc. No. 604); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

3. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting supplemental estimate of appropriation required by the Interior Department for printing and binding, fiscal year 1920 (H. Doc. No. 605); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

4. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting schedules of claims allowed by the several accounting officers of the Treasury Department under appropriations the balances of which have been exhausted or carried to the surplus fund under the provisions of section 5 of the act of June 20, 1874, and for the services of certain departments and independent offices (H. Doc. No. 606); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

5. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a report of The Adjutant General of the Army relative to the financial and other affairs of the United States Disciplinary Barracks at Fort Leavenworth, Kans., and of the Pacific and Atlantic branches thereof (H. Doc. No. 607); to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (S. 3317) to prohibit and punish certain seditious acts against the Government of the United States and to prohibit the use of the mails for the purpose of promoting such acts, reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 542), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. ROSE, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 10115) for the relief of Harvey R. Butcher, reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 543), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

883. By Mr. LUFKIN: Petition of the Gloucester Lodge, No. 892, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, relative to the deportation of certain aliens, etc.; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

884. By Mr. MICHENER: Petition of members of the Golden Rule Class of the Presbyterian Church of Adrian, Mich., regarding the treatment of Americans in Turkey; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

885. By Mr. THOMPSON: Petition of Local Union No. 89, of Philadelphia, Pa., National Federation of Postal Employees, for the erection of a new post-office building, owing to the congested condition of the present building; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, January 15, 1920.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, the light which shines upon our path emanates from Thy face. Thou art the light of the world, and we look to Thee as we face all the darkened places, all the unrest of our time, all the difficult problems that confront us. We pray that the light of Thy countenance may shine away all the darkness and gloom, that Thy presence may be made manifest in all the work of this Government, that the Government may be an evangel of truth and light and life among men. Hear us as we lift our hearts to Thee this morning in prayer. Forgive us our sins. Guide us to the honor and glory of Thine own name. For Christ's sake. Amen.

On request of Mr. CURTIS, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of yesterday's proceedings was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

EUROPE AND THE LEAGUE.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD the leading editorial in the Washington Post of this morning, entitled "Europe and the league."

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

EUROPE AND THE LEAGUE.

"Doubtless there will be little criticism of President Wilson for issuing the formal call for the first meeting of the council of the League of Nations. It is an empty formality, which might as well be performed by the head of a Nation which has declined to accept the 'covenant' as by anybody else. The matter of interest is the manner in which Europe is working its way out from under the incubus of the Paris treaty, and particularly the League of Nations.

"It will be noticed that at the first meeting of the council Japan will be represented, and the United States and Greece will be absent. There are volumes of meaning in these two facts. It is quite possible, if the United States had been a true friend of China at the Paris conference, Japan might not have been represented in the council and the United States might have been. That is a most interesting 'might have been,' whose history is not all in the past. There are other chapters to be written, and perhaps they will be written in the blood of Americans. Sufficient unto that day, however, is the evil thereof, and it need not be discussed here.

"But why is not Greece in the council, as the Paris synod had arranged? Ask the Greeks who heard from the lips of Americans that they need not expect to retain their own lands, but must surrender them to their enemy, the Bulgars. Nobody can produce any authority for this notice from the Americans. They had no jurisdiction over the Balkan regions, so far as the American voters are aware. The declarations of war against Germany and Austria-Hungary did not authorize President Wilson or any other American to sit in judgment between Greece and Bulgaria. The United States was not an ally of one or an enemy of the other, although Bulgaria was an enemy of the United States and an ally of Germany.

"The influence of the United States in the negotiation of the treaty with Bulgaria was thrown in favor of Bulgaria and against Greece. The Americans were interlopers. The Greeks have just as much right to interfere in the quarrel between the United States and Carranza, and to allot a portion of Texas to Carranza, as the Americans at Paris had to allot a portion of Thrace to Bulgaria.

"The Americans at Paris not only assumed an authority they did not possess in regard to territorial adjustments in Europe but they joined in the coercion of the small nations by insisting upon provisions in the treaties with Austria and Hungary, requiring the new nations to admit the overlordship of the 'principal allied and associated Governments' in securing the rights of minorities. This was nothing but a denial of the equality of nations, an encroachment upon the sovereignty of the small nations, and, of course, a 'nullification' of all the high-sounding pretenses of the League of Nations. Bear in mind that the 'big five' are to be the overlords of Roumania, Greece, Jugo-Slavia, Hungary, Bulgaria, and Austria—not the League of Nations, but the allied and associated Governments.

"What a commentary upon the league by its own creators! They do not trust it to do justice or enforce peace in Europe. If they did, they would have placed it in control of the reparations work, the collection of the indemnity from Germany, the 'protection of minorities,' the reduction of fleets, etc. But no! In the realities of Europe and Asia the League of Nations has no part. France, England, Japan, and the others have seen to that. It is only in the realm of fancy, of poesy, and romance that the League of Nations is all-powerful. The nations have turned over to the league all kinds of control, except control over the German indemnity, the control of the seas, the control over small nations, and a few little items of that nature.

"Think of the United States being one of five nations to step into Roumania to enforce the rights of the Magyars. What a fine chance of ratifying such a treaty in the United States Senate! Think, also, of the United States as a member of the League of Nations solemnly discovering that it had violated its own obligation by entering into treaties encroaching upon the political independence of small nations! What a spectacle it would be to witness the struggle of the United States v. the United States, one of them the Dr. Jekyll of the League of Nations, defender of the feeble, etc., and the other the Mr. Hyde of the Austrian treaty, brutally trampling upon the sovereignty of Roumania and scoffing at the League of Nations as a humbug and a hypocrite!

"It is small wonder that the victorious nations have continued the interallied military command under Marshal Foch, with amplified powers sufficient to enable it to throttle Germany, ward off bolshevism, and vitalize the victory which the Paris conference emasculated by setting up the League of Nations.

"The larger allied nations are in a military alliance for their own self-preservation. Good! They can now survive even the League of Nations."

RETURN OF SOLDIER DEAD FROM FRANCE.

Mr. LODGE. I present certain resolutions adopted by the Bring-Home-the-Soldier-Dead League, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

There being no objection, the resolutions were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolutions adopted January 14, 1920, at a meeting held in Washington, D. C., of the delegates from the branches of the Bring-Home-the-Soldier-Dead League of the United States, the membership of which consists of the next of kin of the soldiers and sailors buried in foreign countries.

Whereas it has been officially represented to us that the French Government is opposing the removal from the war areas of France of the bodies of our soldier and sailor dead; and

Whereas there is an overwhelming sentiment in the United States, growing stronger daily, in favor of complying immediately with the wishes of the next of kin of over 40,000 of those who gave their lives for their country; and

Whereas to thwart those wishes can serve only to imperil the continuance of our friendly relations with France; and

Whereas we can not believe, and do not believe, that the people of France would countenance the violation of our solemn agreement with their country made on August 28, 1918, to permit the return of our dead;

Resolved, That we take this means of representing to the people of France our confidence in their friendship and our belief that they will not approve any action that will cause unnecessary grief to thousands of their recent allies, whose sorrows they have shared and do share;

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to the Secretary of State of the United States with a request that he transmit a copy thereof to the minister of foreign affairs of the French Republic;

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the President of the United States, the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate, and to the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House of Representatives.

BRING-HOME-THE-SOLDIER-DEAD LEAGUE OF THE UNITED STATES,
By A. B. POUCH, President.
Attested by:
J. D. FOSTER, Secretary.

LOSSES BY FOREST FIRES.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I present resolutions adopted by the Public Domain Commission of Michigan, which I ask may be referred to the Commiteee on Appropriations and printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the resolutions were referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolutions adopted by the Public Domain Commission at a regular meeting January 9, 1920.

INDORSEMENT OF WEEKS LAW.

[By Mr. Vaughan.]

Whereas the so-called Weeks law of March 1, 1911, provided a policy and appropriation for the acquirement of land located on the headwaters of navigable streams; and

Whereas we believe such legislation is wise and commendable and for the general good: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Public Domain Commission of Michigan indorses the policy of land acquirement for the purposes set forth in said law and hopes that Congress will safeguard and continue said policy; and

Whereas another feature of said Weeks law provides for a policy of cooperation between the National Government and the States with relation to a system of protection against losses by forest fires; and

Whereas forest-fire losses during 1919 occurred in Michigan and many other States, causing losses that reached enormous figures, and that similar losses are bound to occur unless the National Government and the States enlarge the plan and scope of prevention and control: Therefore,

Resolved, That this commission implores Congress to greatly increase the appropriation for cooperation against the menace of forest fires, that the States affected may by such policy be better equipped to avoid the deplorable results of the past arising from forest-fire menace;

Resolved further, That a copy of these resolutions be transmitted to all Members of the Congress from Michigan.

Unanimously adopted.

GEO. L. LUSK, Secretary.

WATER-POWER DEVELOPMENT.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning business is closed.

Mr. NELSON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the unfinished business—House bill 3184.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 3184) to create a Federal power commission and to define its powers and duties, to provide for the improvement of navigation, for the development of water power, for the use of lands of the United States in relation thereto, to repeal section 18 of "An act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes," approved August 8, 1917, and for other purposes.

RECESS.

Mr. NELSON. I move that the Senate take a recess until 1 o'clock this day.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 12 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until 1 o'clock p. m., at which hour it reassembled.

GEORGETOWN BARGE, DOCK, ELEVATOR & RAILWAY CO.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the annual report of the Georgetown Barge, Dock, Elevator & Railway Co. for the year ended December 31, 1919, which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, requested the Senate to return to the House of Representatives Senate joint resolution 69, with amendments of the House thereto, adopted January 13, 1920.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (H. R. 288) for the purpose of conferring citizenship upon Indians, segregation of Indian tribal property, and for other purposes, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House had passed a concurrent resolution appointing a commission to report on conditions in the Virgin Islands, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. TOWNSEND presented a petition of the Women's Progressive League, of Niles, Mich., praying for the enactment of legislation to establish a department of education, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented memorials of Local Lodge No. 150, Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen, of Marquette; of Local Lodge No. 997, Brotherhood of Railway Carmen of America, of Detroit; and of Local Lodge No. 1, Bricklayers' International Union, of Grand Rapids, all in the State of Michigan, remonstrating against the passage of the so-called Cummins-Esch railroad bill, which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Battle Creek, Mich., praying for the enactment of legislation providing for the retirement of superannuated Government employees, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented petitions of the Rotary Club, of Kalamazoo, the Adult Bible Class of the Congregational Sunday School, of Three Oaks, and of the faculty of the Central Michigan Normal School, Mount Pleasant, all in the State of Michigan, praying for the ratification of the League of Nations, which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. PHELAN presented a petition of Local Lodge No. 672, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, of Pasadena, Calif., praying for the enactment of legislation providing for the suppression of bolshevism and the deportation of undesirable aliens, which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. SMOOT:

A bill (S. 3720) to amend section 10 of the act entitled "An act to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes," approved October 15, 1914, as amended; to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

A bill (S. 3721) granting a pension to Olive R. Grow; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SMITH of Georgia:

A bill (S. 3722) to grant the consent of Congress to the Alfords Bridge Co. to construct a bridge across the Savannah River; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. STERLING:

A bill (S. 3723) to repeal the act prohibiting increased pay under lump-sum appropriations to employees transferred within one year; to the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment.

A bill (S. 3724) granting an increase of pension to Ludwig N. Anderson (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SHEPPARD:

A bill (S. 3725) authorizing the Court of Claims to adjudicate the claim of Capt. David McD. Shearer for compensation for the adoption and use and acquisiton by the United States Government of his patented inventions (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. REED:

A bill (S. 3726) to provide for the acquiring of a site and the erection of a United States Hospital in the city of St. Louis, Mo.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

A bill (S. 3727) granting an increase of pension to William H. Hayes (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 3728) granting an increase of pension to Frank Morgan;

A bill (S. 3729) granting an increase of pension to William G. Pellow;

A bill (S. 3730) granting a pension to John H. Isiley;

A bill (S. 3731) granting an increase of pension to Elizabeth Commons;

A bill (S. 3732) granting a pension to Thomas Burke; and

A bill (S. 3733) granting a pension to Nannie Martin; to the Committee on Pensions.

CONDITIONS IN THE VIRGIN ISLANDS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the request of the House of Representatives to return to the House Senate joint resolution No. 69, with amendments of the House thereto, adopted January 13, 1920.

Mr. KENYON. I move to reconsider the vote by which the Senate agreed to the amendments of the House to Senate joint resolution No. 69.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. KENYON. I ask that the joint resolution, with the amendments of the House thereto, be returned to the House in compliance with its request.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the request of the House will be complied with.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives, which was read:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That a joint commission to consist of three Members of the Senate and three Members of the House of Representatives, to be appointed by the Vice President of the United States and the Speaker of the House, respectively, is hereby created to visit the Virgin Islands and to report fully to Congress as to existing conditions in the said islands, and particularly to report and recommend action by Congress, if need there be therefor, with reference to whether the present government under Executive direction should be superseded by civil government provided by Congress as contemplated by act of March 3, 1917 (39 Stat., p. 1132), said government being now only temporary in character and by order of the President being now vested in officers of the Navy; also as to whether Congress should at this time provide for a civil government of the islands by an organic act; also what, if any, legislation is necessary pending the formation and adoption of an organic act, and as to the general conditions existing in the islands. Said report to be filed at the earliest date practicable, and during the Sixty-sixth Congress. That the expenses of said commission in carrying out the provisions of this resolution shall be paid in equal proportions from the contingent funds of the Senate and the House of Representatives, upon the audit and order, respectively, of the ranking Senate and House members of said commission, the total amount not to exceed the sum of $2,500.

Mr. KENYON. On yesterday the House passed a concurrent resolution on this subject as an amendment to the joint resolution which had been passed by the Senate. As a parliamentary matter the House can not do that; it can not change a Senate joint resolution to a Senate concurrent resolution. The Senate concurred in the action of the House, however, which made it necessary for the House to ask that the papers be returned, which has been done. The House passed this concurrent resolution as a resolution originating in the House. It is exactly the same as the resolution which the Senate concurred in, but it requires the action of the Senate upon it as a new resolution. I ask unanimous consent that the House resolution as now brought to the Senate may be considered and agreed to.

The concurrent resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

MISSION TO POLAND (S. DOC. NO. 177).

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate:

I transmit herewith a report from the Secretary of State, with accompanying papers, in response to a resolution of the Senate requesting him to furnish that body, if not incompatible with the public interest, with the reports made by the mission of the United States to Poland, headed by the Hon. Henry Morgenthau.

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE,
15 January, 1920.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

H. R. 288. An act for the purpose of conferring citizenship upon Indians, segregation of Indian tribal property, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

WATER-POWER DEVELOPMENT.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 3184) to create a Federal power commission and to define its powers and duties, to provide for the improvement of navigation, for the development of water power, for the use of lands of the United States in relation thereto, to repeal section 18 of "An act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes," approved August 8, 1917, and for other purposes.

Mr. NELSON. On yesterday, through an inadvertence, the Senate adopted an amendment offered by the Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER]. I find on examination that the very purpose of the amendment and the very language of it is already included in the original bill as passed by the House. It is found on page 33. In view of that fact, it is wholly improper to have a duplicate of the matter in the bill, and I move to reconsider the vote by which that amendment was adopted on yesterday. It is found at the top of page 1552 of the RECORD of yesterday's proceedings.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is advised that the question now before the Senate is upon the motion of the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] to reconsider the vote by which the so-called Nugent amendment was adopted. If that be true, it will be necessary to dispose of that motion first.

Mr. NELSON. I ask unanimous consent to take this up before the other proposition.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. It will be entirely agreeable to me that the motion to reconsider made by the Senator from Minnesota shall be considered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Minnesota asks unanimous consent to reconsider the vote by which the amendment submitted by the Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER] on yesterday was adopted.

Mr. GRONNA. May I ask what was the amendment in question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state it.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 31, after line 14, the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER], inserting the following clause, was agreed to:

In any valuation of the property of any licensee hereunder for the purposes of rate making no value shall be claimed by the licensee or allowed for any project or projects under license in excess of the value or values prescribed in section 14 hereof for the purposes of purchase by the United States, and no value shall be claimed or allowed for the rights granted by the commission or by this act.

Mr. NELSON. The exact provision is in the bill as passed by the House, so that this amendment is wholly unnecessary. It is simply a duplication, and I have moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to with a view to having it rejected.

Mr. CALDER. Of course, I have no objection to that course.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER].

The amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the motion of the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] to reconsider the vote by which the amendment of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. NUGENT] was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. Let it be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. The Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] moves to reconsider the vote by which two amendments offered by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. NUGENT] were agreed to on yesterday. The first amendment is as follows:

On page 9, after the word "reservation," in line 8, strike out the colon and insert a semicolon and the following words: "and in case of tribal lands embraced within an Indian reservation, which said lands were ceded to the Indians by the United States by treaty, no license shall be authorized except by and with the consent of the council of the tribe."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion to reconsider the amendment which has just been read.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, as I stated on yesterday, I am very deeply interested in the amendment which affects two great water powers in an Indian reservation in my State. When the matter came up on yesterday I was, at the very earnest solicitation of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS], attending a session of the subcommittee of the Committee on the Judiciary. The Senator from Kansas knows my deep interest in the subject. I hope that the vote will be reconsidered. I desire to speak briefly upon it.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I hope that the Senator in charge of the bill will consent to a reconsideration of the vote by which the amendment was agreed to, so that we may have another vote on it. I know the Senator from Montana was absent when the amendment was adopted yesterday.

Mr. NELSON. I have no objection to its reconsideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the vote whereby the amendment was agreed to is reconsidered. The question is now on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. NUGENT].

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, the amendment makes the bill read as follows:

That licenses shall be issued within any reservation only after a finding by the commission that the license will not interfere or be inconsistent with the purpose for which such reservation was created or acquired, and shall be subject to and contain such conditions as the Secretary of the department under whose supervision such reservation falls shall deem necessary for the adequate protection and utilization of such reservation—

Then it is provided by the amendment—

And in case of tribal lands embraced within an Indian reservation, which said lands were ceded to the Indians by the United States by treaty, no license shall be authorized except by and with the consent of the council of the tribe.

That is to say, when an application is made for a license to construct a dam within an Indian reservation, the matter goes before the commission, which consists of the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Interior, and the Secretary of Agriculture. They all agree that it is in the public interest that the license should be granted, or a majority of them so agree. Furthermore, the head of the department must agree; that is to say, the Secretary of the Interior in the case of an Indian reservation must agree that the license shall be issued. But the amendment proposes that although all three, or a majority of the three, of the commission and the Secretary of the Interior agree that the license should issue, the Secretary of the Interior being charged with the conservation of the interests of the Indians, yet it can not be issued until the matter is submitted to the council of the tribe of Indians.

There are some of those Indian tribes that have councils and some that have not a council. How it is in the State of the Senator from Idaho, who offers the amendment, I do not know. It does affect, however, as I said, two great powers in our State.

Mr. President, I think it would be most unfortunate to submit so important a matter as that to the determination of the council of Indian tribes after the officers charged with looking after their interest consider that it is wise to issue the license. We exercise control over the affairs of the Indians because it is assumed that the Indians do not know enough to manage their own affairs. Then, why should we submit to a council of Indians the question as to whether a license should be issued or should not be issued?

More than that, what I am afraid of is that this will result in every single instance in a corrupt campaign to get the support of the council for the proposition of one of the rival claimants to the license. The matter has been tried out in connection with the leasing of oil lands in Kansas and Oklahoma, and the unfortunate result every member of the Committee on Indian Affairs knows about. In one particular instance, as I recall, in the case of the Osages, I think, it has resulted in the organization of two separate councils, each contending that it is the correct council of the Indians, and all depending upon the question as to the persons who should have the oil leases.

It occurs to me that the want of reason in this thing is so perfectly obvious that it is not really open to serious discussion. The matter was considered by the Committee on Indian Affairs in connection with a bill for the opening of the Crow Reservation, in my State, and the committee saw fit to put a provision on to the effect that licenses were not to be issued without the consent of the council. The bill is now in the House and that feature of the bill has the positive and insistent objection of the Secretary of the Interior, who recognizes the evil in it just exactly as I have stated.

I trust very sincerely that the amendment will be rejected. I desire to quote from a letter from the Secretary with reference to the bill, addressed to the chairman of the House committee, as follows:

Section 10 of H. R. 9709, as well as the bill passed by the Senate, reserves from other disposition lands in the reservation chiefly valuable for the development of water power, which I think it a wise thing to do. The section, however, has a proviso to the effect that "such lands shall not be leased or otherwise disposed of without the consent of the tribal council." I recommend that this proviso be eliminated from the bill. The interests of the Indians are carefully looked after by this department, and in a matter like water-power development, involving complicated and technical questions, and involving, as it will in this case, a use of both Indian and public lands in the largest and best water-power development possible, it should not be necessary that the matter be submitted to the approval of the Indians before water-power development can be secured.

The general water-power bill, H. R. 3481, which has passed the House of Representatives and been favorably reported by the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce, provides a general and comprehensive plan for the leasing and development of water-power sites upon public lands, Indian reservations, and navigable streams to be controlled by a commission composed of the Secretaries of War, Agriculture, and Interior. The proceeds received from such developments on Indian reservations are, under that measure, to go to the benefit of the Indians concerned. That measure amply takes care of the matter of leasing and use of such sites in Indian reservations, and in my opinion this bill should go no further than to reserve the sites and should impose no restrictions or conditions upon the leasing thereof.

Mr. President, there are obstacles enough in the way of the development of these power sites without submitting the question to a vote of the council of an Indian tribe.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I hope the amendment offered by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. NUGENT] will be adopted. The amendment applies only to lands which the Indians hold by virtue of treaties. In all such treaties it was agreed that no disposition should be made of the lands without the consent of the Indians. It is true that the Secretary of the Interior has charge of their property; it is true that the Supreme Court has decided that the Congress has a right to pass laws disposing of their property without their consent if it is thought for the best interest of the Indians; but I do not think that the Congress would be justified in taking such action until the Indians had been consulted as to whether or not they desired to dispose of their water rights.

We are not having trouble in Kansas, as indicated by the Senator from Montana, over oil leases.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Will the Senator pardon me before he passes from that matter?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. CURTIS. Yes.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. An amendment has been adopted to this bill under which it would be impossible to grant the right until the Indians are consulted. There is a specific provision that no lease can be granted upon an Indian reservation without notice to the Indians, to the council of the tribe; and the council of the tribe has a perfect right to come down here before the commission and to be heard upon the wisdom of granting the license. That amendment was adopted, and I have not the slightest objection to it. So they are consulted, but they can not block a project. They can not veto it; that is all.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I do not think that amendment goes far enough. If the Indians feel that circumstances are such that they are justified in opposing a lease, I think they should be given an opportunity to oppose it. I think no lease should be made unless they consent to it.

However, as I said a moment ago, the Senator from Montana referred to the situation in Oklahoma, and he inadvertently included Kansas. We are having no trouble in our State in reference to oil leasing, because there are no Indian lands in that State embracing oil territory. There is much trouble in the country of the Osages, but I think the Senator will agree that the trouble in the Osage country is more a fight between half bloods and full bloods than it is a question of the leasing of the lands. The fight in that reservation has been all the time as to who should control—whether it should be the full bloods or the half bloods. Of course, charges of corruption have been made against members of the council in years gone by, yet the leases are not made there without the consent of the council, and then they are approved by the Secretary of the Interior. I recall that the great Pottawatomie Tribe of Indians has had a business council or committee, I think, since 1859; anyway, for many years. There has never been any trouble in transacting business with the business committee of the Pottawatomie Indians; there is no trouble in transacting business if you desire to be fair and treat the Indians justly. I think the amendment of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. NUGENT] ought to be adopted for that reason. The Indians ought to be first consulted. Of course, if they try to hold up a proposition, if they are corrupt in any way, a special act of Congress could be passed at any time granting the authority to the Secretary of the Interior to make the lease.

As I have stated, the Senator from Idaho has drawn his amendment so that it applies only to treaty lands; it does not apply to Executive orders, and it does not apply to lands purchased and held in any other way except under treaty. I hope the amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I was a little late in entering the Chamber, but I understand the amendment offered yesterday afternoon by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. NUGENT] as to which my colleague [Mr. WALSH] moved a reconsideration has been reconsidered and that the pending question is whether or not the amendment shall be adopted. I heard a portion of the remarks of my colleague on the subject, and I desire to say that I am very heartily and earnestly in accord with his attitude in the matter. I think this amendment would be a most unfortunate, unfair, and unjust provision of law. I do not desire to be unfair to the Indians; I am sure the Government does not want to be, that the Secretary of the Interior does not want to be, that the Secretary of Agriculture does not want to be, that the Secretary of War does not want, to be, and that nobody who will ever be called upon to fill any of those high positions will want to be unfair to any tribe of Indians. Neither do I think Indians should be allowed to be unfair to other people; I do not think they should be intrusted with arbitrary and absolute power to be unfair and unreasonable to other people. This amendment, in my opinion, would give them that power.

An amendment of this character was adopted by the Senate to the bill introduced by my colleague for the allotment of the lands of the Crow Indian Reservation in Montana; but I understand the House Committee on Indian Affairs almost unanimously, if not with entire unanimity, rejected it; would not accept it; would not stand for it at all. The amendment proposed to this bill, I think, is of far greater moment and significance and much more serious than was the like amendment to the bill for allotment of the lands of the Crow Tribe of Indians in Montana. I do not believe Indians should have any greater or less rights in these matters than white people—American citizens.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President——

Mr. MYERS. I yield, with pleasure, to the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. CURTIS. We do not take property away from white persons without giving them a chance to be heard and to say whether or not they consent.

Mr. MYERS. I was coming to that. Here is the difference: In undertaking to construct a dam and to use private land for the construction of a plant for the development of water power, the land of a white man, of an American citizen, may be condemned if he objects to its use. He is not allowed to stand with a club or a shotgun in his hand and say, "Under no circumstances and for no price can this land be taken away from me." I call the attention of the Senator from Kansas to the fact that the land of a white man may be condemned for a public use; its value may be appraised by a court; the consideration that the court says is just may be given to him, and he is bound to take it; he is compelled by law to take it and to yield his land for the public use. He can not stand there as an immovable rock and say, "The public shall not have my land for public use under any circumstances nor for any price or consideration; I do not care what they offer me, they shall never have this land." An American citizen under the law is not entitled to take that stand; he can not do it; his land can be taken away from him by condemnation under the law of eminent domain. But, as I understand this provision, no right of condemnation would apply to Indian lands which had been ceded to the Indians by treaty with the United States Government; as I understand this amendment, the right of eminent domain, the right of condemnation by the courts, could not apply. A tribe of Indians could say: "Nobody shall touch this land; neither the courts of the country nor anybody else may put a price on it, and nobody can have it for any use whatsoever. I will not reason about it; I will not listen to any offer; I will not take any compensation; it can not be had for any public use upon any terms." I do not think it right to give Indians that power, above the law of the land, which is not given to white people.

I believe in treating all alike, according to reason, right, and justice. I think that such a provision as this amendment contemplates would be very unjust and unfair discrimination. I do not think it in accordance with right or justice or reason at all. The law gives a superior power of eminent domain to the public over private property of American citizens, and there should be a similar power lodged somewhere over Indian lands.

If this amendment becomes a law, it would be in the power of a tribe of Indians, arbitrarily and without any reason whatever, to block a project for water-power development so that it could never be established at all. They would have an absolute power of veto. That is a right that is not given to an American citizen over his own land. The Indians do not own lands by treaty any more than an American citizen owns his land when he has a fee-simple title to it. A man who owns a farm in fee simple has an absolute title to it, but it may be taken away from him by the courts by the process of condemnation for public use. Indians who hold land by treaty do not hold it by any more sacred right or any more absolute title than does an American citizen who owns his land in fee simple.

I think this amendment would draw a line of discrimination and would be very unfair and most unfortunate. If there be on an Indian reservation where the land was ceded to Indians by treaty a site suitable for the development of water power which, if developed, would result in vast and untold good to the public, and if a little land be required for putting in the dam and erecting the plant, and for transmission lines, involving only a very small part of the Indian reservation—perhaps only a few acres out of millions of acres—according to this amendment it would be in the power of the tribe of Indians to block forever the undertaking. I think it unreasonable.

The Senator from Kansas says that if the Indians should take an arbitrary and unreasonable stand we could secure the passage through Congress of a special bill to take the needed land and give just compensation; but we all know how difficult it is to get through Congress a special bill to confer upon anybody a special right or to take anything away from anybody. We are immediately met with the cry that Members of Congress do not believe in special legislation; that there should be general legislation to accomplish all such purposes; and my observation is that it is much more difficult to get through Congress special legislation of that character than it is to get through general legislation. If the general legislation is right it should be enacted, but if the principle is not right it should not be enacted in a special bill any more than in a general bill. If it is right it should apply alike to all who will be or may be affected by it. That is fair and impartial. There is nothing discriminatory about that. If it is not right, then it should not be enacted in either a special or general law.

The Secretary of the Interior is made the guardian of the Indians in tribal relations. He will always hear the views of Indians about any matter affecting them. He will not only hear them but I dare say he always seeks the view of the Indians in all such matters. It is his sworn duty to seek the views of the Indians and to consider them and to give them great weight and to take the views of the Indians into consideration in determining a matter affecting their welfare, along with all other factors that are entitled to consideration.

I do not believe there ever has been a man appointed to the position of Secretary of the Interior who did not seek the views of Indians about their matters, or that one ever will be appointed who will not seek and take into consideration the views of the Indians in all matters affecting them. The Secretary of the Interior will always be a member of the Federal power commission, and if he thinks an application for a permit which affects land owned by Indians is not fair and right and reasonable I have no doubt he will resist it; and if he thinks it intended for a use to which the public is entitled, I have no doubt that any Secretary of the Interior would consent that it be granted only upon the payment of just compensation. The Secretary of the Interior, the Secretary of Agriculture, and the Secretary of War are to compose the Federal power commission, and I think all would be fair to Indians.

I ask you to bear in mind that a project on an Indian reservation might involve only a few acres of land. It might require only 4 or 5, 10 or 20, 30 or 40, or a hundred acres out of millions of acres of land; and under those circumstances I do not think a tribe of Indians should be allowed absolutely to block forever and veto a project that might be of great use to the public, including the Indians. I do not think they should have a greater power than American citizens have. When we can take the land of an American citizen away from him by process of condemnation, upon payment of just compensation, for a beneficial public use, I do not believe Indians should be absolutely exempted from the operation of that rule of law and given rights which are not conferred upon other people. I am opposed to class legislation, even in favor of Indians.

I think the amendment is most unfortunate and unfair, and I hope it may be defeated. I appeal to the sense of fairness and justice of Senators to look fairly at this matter and to weigh the facts and arguments which I have presented to them, and to vote against the amendment. The courts have the power to take private land for public use, upon payment of just compensation, and the Federal power commission should be given the same power over the lands of tribal Indians. It would be a court which could be trusted to guard thoroughly the rights of the Indians.

Mr. NUGENT. Mr. President, the pending measure provides that the water-power commission shall have power to issue licenses for the development of water-power sites within Indian reservations, including tribal lands within Indian reservations that were ceded to the Indians by the Government by treaty. It also necessarily authorizes the commission to issue such licenses within Indian reservations generally—that is, Indian reservations that were granted to the Indians by act of Congress.

It will be observed that the amendment I have presented is confined to those lands that were ceded to the Indians by the United States by treaty. So far as I am personally concerned, I do not see any distinction with respect to the ownership of the Indians in lands ceded to them by treaty and in lands granted to them by act of Congress; but for reasons that it is unnecessary to go into at this time this amendment is confined to treaty lands.

The water-power commission under the terms of the pending measure is empowered to issue these licenses, which in effect means that it will have authority to take from these Indians the lands ceded to them by the United States by treaty without their consent and without just compensation or other compensation, save and except such reasonable charge as may be fixed by the commission for the use of the lands. Now, I have no personal interest in this matter one way or the other; but it is my judgment that the Congress has no authority, either in law or in morals, to take from these Indians such lands as I have described without their consent and without just compensation.

I have been advised that there are in the neighborhood of 30 water-power sites on Indian reservations throughout the country that will be affected by this bill. I do not know how many of those water-power sites are on lands held by the Indians by virtue of a treaty; neither do I know how many of them are held under an act of Congress. I have not made any investigation for the purpose of ascertaining the precise provisions contained in the treaties between the Government and the different tribes. I have some knowledge, however, in respect of one of the reservations, and that is the reservation referred to by the Senators from Montana, namely, the Crow Reservation; and I know something with respect of that reservation for the reason that the matter was brought out and considered at a hearing held some time since by the Committee on Indian Affairs, of which I am a member. I have investigated concerning that reservation, and I find that the first treaty that was entered into between the Government and the Crows was in 1825. It related principally to trade and intercourse, the protection of life and property, and the continuance of friendly relations between the Crows and our people.

In 1851 another treaty was entered into by the United States with the Crow Tribe and with a number of other Indian tribes, under the terms of which the Indians agreed to live on terms of peace with each other and with the Americans, and they agreed that the United States could build roads and military posts within their respective territories; and the exterior boundaries to be set apart to the various tribes were described, and so far as the Crows are concerned, judging from those exterior boundaries, they included a very large area of territory. I shall not read the description, because I do not consider that it is material to the matter I am discussing; but in 1868 the United States negotiated another treaty with the Crows, and that treaty was ratified by the United States Senate on July 25, 1868, and I desire to read into the RECORD certain of the provisions contained in that treaty. I am reading from Senate Document No. 319, volume 39, Fifty-eighth Congress, second session:

ART. 2. The United States agrees that the following district of country, to wit—

And then follows the description—

shall be, and the same is, set apart for the absolute and undisturbed use and occupation of the Indians herein named, and for such other friendly tribes or individual Indians as from time to time they may be willing, with the consent of the United States, to admit amongst them; and the United States now solemnly agrees that no persons, except those herein designated and authorized so to do, and except such officers, agents, and employees of the Government as may be authorized to enter upon Indian reservations in discharge of duties enjoined by law, shall ever be permitted to pass over, settle upon, or reside in the territory described in this article for the use of said Indians, and henceforth they will, and do hereby, relinquish all title, claims, or rights in and to any portion of the territory of the United States, except such as is embraced within the limits aforesaid.

Article 11 of that treaty reads as follows:

No treaty for the cession of any portion of the reservation herein described which may be held in common shall be of any force or validity as against the said Indians unless executed and signed by at least a majority of all the adult male Indians occupying or interested in the same, and no cession by the tribe shall be understood or construed in such a manner as to deprive, without his consent, any individual member of the tribe of his right to any tract of land selected by him as provided in article 6 of this treaty.

Mr. President, I call attention to the fact that this treaty was negotiated by certain very distinguished men who acted as the representatives of this Government, among them Gens. W. T. Sherman, William S. Harney, and Alfred H. Terry. Those gentlemen were all men of prominence and distinction in the United States. As a matter of course, everybody is familiar with the career of Gen. Sherman, and the same thing is true so far as Gen. Harney and Gen. Terry are concerned; and I apprehend that it will not be disputed that those gentlemen, acting as the representatives of the United States, entered into this treaty with the Crows in absolute good faith.

I also apprehend that it will not be disputed that the Senate of the United States, in the ratification of that treaty, acted in absolute good faith, and I do not believe that any possible question can arise but that the Crow Indians are the owners of the lands described in this treaty.

On March 3, 1871, and about three years after the treaty was ratified, the Congress enacted section 2079 of the Revised Statutes, which reads as follows:

No Indian nation or tribe within the territory of the United States shall be acknowledged or recognized as an independent nation, tribe, or power with whom the United States may contract by treaty; but no obligation of any treaty lawfully made and ratified with any such Indian nation or tribe prior to March 3, 1871, shall be hereby invalidated or impaired.

Prior to March 3, 1871, the Government transferred and set apart lands and reservations to Indians by treaty. The Government recognized the Indian tribes to be independent nations. But the act of Congress to which I have just called attention provided that after the date of its enactment no treaty should be entered into with an Indian tribe. But that section also provided that no treaty theretofore entered into between the Government and an Indian tribe should in any way or sense be impaired.

Mr. President, in 1882 the Congress passed an act, which is found at page 42, Twenty-second United States Statutes at Large, from which I quote the following:

Whereas certain individual Indians and heads of families representing a majority of all the adult male members of the Crow Tribe of Indians occupying or interested in the Crow Reservation in the Territory of Montana have agreed upon, executed, and submitted to the Secretary of the Interior an agreement for the sale to the United States of a portion of their said reservation, and for their settlement upon lands in severalty, and for other purposes.

I call particular attention to the fact that the preamble recites that the Indians had executed and agreed upon and submitted to the Secretary of the Interior an agreement to sell certain of their lands to the Government. As a matter of course, the right to sell implies the right of ownership.

The act continues:

Therefore, be it enacted, etc., That said agreement be, and the same is hereby, accepted, ratified, and confirmed. Said agreement is executed by a majority of all the adult male members of said tribe in conformity with the provisions of article 11 of the treaty with the Crow Indians of May 7, 1868, and is in words and figures as follows, namely.

Then follows the description.

The second paragraph in that act of Congress reads as follows:

We, the undersigned individual Indians and heads of families of the Crow Tribe of Indians now residing upon the Crow Reservation, in the Territory of Montana, do, this 12th day of June, A. D. 1880, hereby agree to dispose of and sell to the Government of the United States, for certain considerations to be hereinafter mentioned, all that part of the present Crow Reservation, in the Territory of Montana, described as follows, to wit.

Quoting from the statute.

In other words, these Indians, as it was recognized by Congress, had not only the right to sell this property, they being the owners of it, but the Government, in addition to other considerations, agreed to pay, and I doubt not did pay, the sum of $750,000, the payments extending over a period of 25 years.

I do not believe, Mr. President, that there can be the slightest doubt in any unprejudiced mind that the Indians are the owners of the lands now included within the boundaries of the Crow Reservation; that they acquired title to those lands through a treaty ratified by the Senate of the United States; and, Mr. President, while, as I said before, I have no interest in this matter from a personal standpoint, at the same time I have a deep and an abiding conviction, the unalterable conviction, that the United States, acting through this Congress, should not under any circumstances deprive those Indians of the lands ceded to them by the Government by treaty without their consent or without just compensation.

It appeared at the hearing to which I have referred, held by the Committee on Indian Affairs, which was attended by a delegation representing the Crow Tribe, that they would be entirely satisfied if they had something to say in respect to the disposition of their lands, more particularly this power site, which, evidently, judging from the statement of the Senator from Montana, is a valuable site. That delegation agreed that if the matter could be so arranged that those lands would not be disposed of without the consent of the council of the tribe it would be entirely satisfactory to them. It was for that reason that I incorporated in this amendment the statement that licenses shall not be issued within tribal lands ceded by a treaty without the consent of the council of the tribe.

The question has been raised as to whether or not a similar body is in existence on other Indian reservations. I am frank enough to say that I have no information in respect to that matter.

But granting, for the sake of the argument, that it is only on the Crow Reservation that there is now in existence a council of the tribe, so called, it must follow as a matter of course, in my judgment, that similar councils will be organized on the various other reservations affected by this bill in the event my amendment is adopted and the bill is enacted into law.

Mr. President, I know of no reason why Indians should be treated any differently than any other class of people in this country. Under the Constitution of the United States you can not take private property without just compensation, and I do not understand why the property of these Indians should be taken for such compensation as is expressed in the words included in the bill, a reasonable charge fixed by the water-power commission for the use of the land. To put it another way, these Indians, under this bill, can be stripped of everything except the mere naked title to the land, and they may be deprived of all rights of ownership; they may be deprived of the right of possession, and such deprivation may continue for all time, and all that they will receive in return will be, as I said, such reasonable price as this commission may fix for the use of the land.

Mr. President, it appears to me that this is the situation: Suppose I went into your house and told you that while I admitted your title to the property, at the same time I was going to take it out of your possession, and regardless of whatever you might deem that property to be worth, that I was going to pay you $5 a month. That certainly would not be right or fair or just or legal; and I contend that that very aptly illustrates the condition, so far as the water-power sites on Indian reservations will be concerned, in the event this bill passes without my amendment.

Mr. President, I merely desire to call attention to the fact that the Indians of the country demonstrated during the late war that they are as loyal as any others of our people. Notwithstanding their comparative small number, I have been advised that between nine and ten thousand of them were enrolled in the service of the Government during the war. Large numbers of them were sent to France, where they served with bravery and fidelity and with honor and distinction.

So far as the Indian women are concerned, they did all that lay within their power, according to my information, to assist in the successful prosecution of the war. They did splendid service in Red Cross work, they knitted sweaters, shirts, socks, helmets, and so forth, for our soldiers, and did all that they could do in behalf of their country. About $25,000,000 of Indian money was invested in Liberty bonds.

So why should they be deprived of their property without their consent or without reasonable or just compensation?

Mr. MYERS. Does the Senator consider that Indian land held by virtue of a treaty is held by any higher or better title than an American citizen's land is held in fee simple, under the Constitution of the United States?

Mr. NUGENT. Certainly not.

Mr. MYERS. The American citizen's land may be taken by right of eminent domain.

Mr. NUGENT. You must condemn.

Mr. MYERS. Yes.

Mr. NUGENT. And you must pay just compensation for the property.

Mr. MYERS. But this provision, as I understand it, would not permit of any condemnation. It would vest an absolute veto in an Indian tribe.

Mr. NUGENT. It simply provides, Mr. President, that the property shall not be taken without the consent of the council of the tribe, and I assume that that consent will not be given until such time as the council of the tribe is given to understand that the compensation to be paid for the use of the land will be a just and a reasonable and a fair compensation for the use of their property.

Mr. MYERS. If the Senator will permit another interruption, I will say that no American citizen who has title in fee simple to his land can say that land can not be taken away from him for any compensation which may be offered when it is acquired for a public use. Yet it appears that this amendment would vest the right in the Indians to say that "Unless we consent you can not take this land at all." But a white man can not say, "Unless I consent you shall never take this land for public use."

Mr. NUGENT. I think, Mr. President, that my friend from Montana is mistaken in respect to that matter, in so far as he refers to the constitutional provision. The Constitution provides that private property may be taken for public use, but that it can not be taken for such use without just compensation, and this bill as it is drawn, in my opinion, does not provide for just compensation for the property, but merely provides that the water-power commission shall fix what in its judgment is a reasonable charge for the mere use of the land, which, in my opinion, is an entirely different proposition from the one just advanced by my friend from Montana.

Mr. President, in conclusion let me say this, that all the world knows that the curses of an overwhelming majority of the peoples of the earth were heaped upon the heads of the men who made up the Imperial German Government when Chancellor von Bethmann Hollweg declared that the German treaty guaranteeing the neutrality of Belgium was a mere scrap of paper. I am firmly convinced that if this bill, as written, becomes a law it will signify that the Congress of the United States has declared that the pledged word of this Government is not worth the paper on which it is written, and that a treaty of the United States is a mere scrap of paper. Believing, as I do, that the honor of the country is not only involved but compromised in in this bill, I have proposed this amendment for the purpose of preventing what, in my opinion, would be a stain on that honor.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, there is scarcely any use in discussing this question at any length, but something ought to be said for the sake of the RECORD in view of the argument made by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. NUGENT].

The whole subject that he has been discussing has been before the Supreme Court of the United States, which is as solicitous about preserving the honor of the Government of the United States as the Senator can be or as any Senator upon the floor can be. The Senator has called attention to the provisions of the Crow treaty of 1868, in which this property was set aside as their permanent home, and particularly to article 11 of the treaty, which provided that no treaty for the cession of any portion of the reservation should ever be valid unless it was ratified by the written signatures of a majority of the adult members of the tribe.

Mr. President, the Supreme Court of the United States held a long time ago, regardless of any provision of that character in any alleged treaty with the Indians, and Congress long ago reached the conclusion, that the Indians were not a proper subject with which treaties could be made, that the Congress of the United States is the guardian of the Indians, constituted so by the statute and by immemorial practice, and that the Congress of the United States is vested with entire power and authority to dispose of the lands of the Indians as in its judgment it may care to do, any treaty to the contrary notwithstanding. I should like to put the case in the RECORD.

Accordingly, Mr. President, since that decision of the Supreme Court, Congress has acted on it and has disposed of lands within Indian reservations as in its wisdom seemed best. Of course, in doing so it always hears the Indians. They come down here almost every year to be heard upon these questions. They are always heard by the committees and their views are taken, and then Congress does exactly what it sees fit to do. That is just what we did the other day in the hearing to which the Senator referred, in which he secured such enlightenment upon the subject as he has upon it.

The Senator referred to the matter of the Crow Reservation, not in the State of Idaho but in the State of Montana. I venture to say, and I speak for myself as well as for my colleague, that the welfare of the Indians in the State of Montana is as dear to our hearts as it can possibly be to that of the Senator from Idaho. It is a mere matter of difference of opinion between us as to what ought to be done. The Senator from Idaho thinks the matter ought to be put up to the council of the tribe to veto it, if they see fit to veto it, and we think otherwise. The Secretary of the Interior, who is constituted by law the guardian of the interests of the Indians, thinks it is unwise, in their interest as well as in the public interest, to submit matters to the determination of the council.

I am now going to address myself to the question of the honor of the United States.

We disposed of those lands. We passed that bill, certainly not more than six weeks ago, without a protest from the Senator from Idaho upon the matter, totally disregarding all those provisions of the treaty of 1868 to which he calls attention.

Mr. NUGENT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. NORRIS in the chair). Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. NUGENT. I ask the Senator if it is not true that the provisions of the bill to which he has just referred were not agreed to by the Indians?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. They were not agreed to by the signatures of the majority of the adult Indians, as required by the provisions of section 11 of the treaty.

Mr. NUGENT. A further inquiry: Is it not true that the provisions of the bill to which the Senator just referred were agreed to by the delegation representing the Crow Tribe, which was in attendance at that hearing?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. It is true that certain representatives of the Crow Tribe were here. We counseled and conferred with them. We took their advice about all the matters, and we finally worked out a bill that was entirely satisfactory to them. That is neither here nor there. I read again the provisions of article 11, to which the Senator refers:

ART. 11. No treaty for the cession of any portion of the reservation herein described, which may be held in common, shall be of any force or validity as against the said Indians unless executed and signed by at least a majority of all the adult male Indians occupying or interested in the same, and no cession by the tribe shall be understood or construed in such a manner as to deprive without his consent any individual member of the tribe of his right to any tract of land selected by him, as provided in article 6 of this treaty.

I assert that we did not even stop to consider whether we should observe that provision of the treaty at all, because the Supreme Court of the United States long ago said it was not necessary for Congress so to do. It is a matter of no consequence that there was a delegation down here who assented to the bill as it was finally framed. That does not comply with the treaty. Nobody pretends that it complies with the treaty.

Moreover, the provision which the Senator endeavors to insert in the bill does not comply with the treaty. The treaty does not say that no portion of a reservation shall be disposed of except by consent of the council of the tribe. It says no portion of a reservation shall be disposed of by treaty unless the instrument is signed by a majority of the adult Indians of the tribe. So if we are to make a scrap of paper of it by declining to put the amendment in, we have already made a scrap of paper of that treaty by passing the bill to which the Senator has referred. We did not pay any attention to that. I have sent for the decision of the Supreme Court touching the subject, and would like to present it for the RECORD. So much for the treaty proposition.

If we can not take private property without due compensation, how can we take the property of the Indians without their consent when we could not take the property of white men without their consent? The Congress of the United States represents the Indians. The Congress of the United States is the guardian of the Indians. The Congress of the United States is the guardian of the Indians because they are unable to take care of their own affairs. If they are able, we have no reason to legislate concerning their business at all. It is because they do not know enough to handle their own affairs that Congress is excused at all for acting for the Indians.

So, Mr. President, the Congress of the United States represents the people of the entire country owning the remainder of the public land, and we are going to take their property and give the disposition of that property to the commission which is created by the bill, with power to issue a license which shall permit occupancy of the property; but the matter of the Indians whose lands we are also charged with the disposition of is put in the hands of the commission, too. We treat them just exactly as we treat the entire people of the United States. What reason have they for insisting upon a different treatment? They do not insist upon any different treatment. There is no matter of just compensation involved in the proposition at all. The lands are subject to disposition by the Government of the United States, indisputably subject to disposition by the Government of the United States through the Congress as guardian of these Indians.

The Senator says he knows of no reason why the Indians should not be treated just the same as any other of the people within the United States. There is abundant reason for not treating them the same as other people in the United States, and that is because they are so unable to take care of their own affairs that we are compelled to constitute ourselves guardians over them. Take any other person who is under guardianship. You do not consult an infant concerning the taking of his property. You do not consult an insane person concerning the taking of his property. The guardian speaks for everybody under guardianship or under tutelage, and the Congress of the United States speaks for those Indians.

It is a simple matter of policy; it is a simple matter of wisdom; it is a simple matter of how best to reach the matter. Upon what consideration can it be urged, when a question arises whether a license should be given to create a power plant on an Indian reservation and, the Indians being recognized as unable to handle their own affairs and transact their own business, that the commission created by the bill, consisting of the three Secretaries, shall not determine that it ought to be done?

Bear in mind the bill further provides that it must have the approval of the head of the department within which the particular reservation is, and that means the Secretary of the Interior. The Secretary of the Interior, no matter what the other members may say, may put his veto on it. He is looking out for the interests of the Indians. He is giving their consent, and that is all the consent that the law requires.

The Senator from Idaho [Mr. NUGENT] has indicated that the only case he knows of to which this principle would be applicable is the case of a power site on the Crow Reservation. He has not indicated that it covers power sites in his State at all. I can tell of another case. There are two power sites in our State that are involved. There is one on the Crow Reservation and a still larger one on the Flathead Reservation. There is a council on the Flathead Reservation. So far as I am aware those are the only reservations in the country that would be affected by the provision.

In other words, it is a provision applicable to two reservations in the State of Montana, and that is all it is—two reservations in the State of Montana, in connection with one of which the scandals have been national in their character in connection with the leasing of the lands for grazing purposes. Echoes of it are heard every time the Crow Reservation proposition comes up. As a usual thing, a general campaign is carried on upon the reservation in favor of applicants who desire to have leases upon the reservation and other privileges and concessions of that character.

Not only that, but here is a proposition to place the disposition of this power in the hands of a council of seven members chosen from the different districts within the Crow Reservation. Upon what theory can we put it up to them to say whether the lease shall be granted or not? If we are going to let them handle their own affairs, let us distribute this property among them and let us not undertake to exercise any further guardianship over the thing at all.

I have no interest whatever in the matter, except that I know just exactly how the thing will work. There will be an application made by some one who wants to get a license to build a dam upon the Crow Reservation or upon the Flathead Reservation, as the case may be, and the applicant will come down here and the commission will be satisfied to grant a license upon terms which they indicate. The Secretary of the Interior, considering all the circumstances and considering the interest of the Indians, will also be willing that the license should be granted upon the terms fixed by the commission. But that is not enough. Then the man who desires the license, or the corporation which desires the license, as the case may be, must go upon the Indian reservation and get the consent of the tribal council. Of course there will be a rival who seeks to get a license, and he will endeavor to balk the other man in any way he can. Immediately a campaign will be conducted for the votes of those seven members of the tribal council for and against it. The corruption that sometimes attended in the old days the election of a United States Senator by the legislature of the State would not be a marker to that which would attend the reference of a proposition of that character to the tribal council of the Crow Tribe of Indians, and that without any imputation against these men at all. There are great big interests involved, and they ought not to be subjected to the temptation. I am perfectly certain that it would be a most unfortunate thing to have the amendment made a part of the bill.

Mr. NUGENT. Mr. President, the Senator from Montana has referred to a bill which was reported by the Indian Affairs Committee of the Senate some time since relative to the disposition of certain lands in the Crow Indian Reservation. As I have heretofore stated, a delegation representing the Crow Indians came here for the particular purpose of conferring with the Committee on Indian Affairs with regard to the provisions of that bill. They came here with credentials showing their authority to speak for the tribe. Not only the members of that tribe and the members of that delegation but the members of the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs were well aware of the fact that the Supreme Court of the United States had on a number of occasions decided that a treaty may be superseded by an act of Congress, and that an act of Congress may be superseded by a treaty. and that the Congress had authority to administer Indian affairs and to enact laws relative to Indian matters generally in the exercise of its right of guardianship over Indian interests. In view of what had transpired theretofore, as a matter of course, the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS], I, and others were of the opinion that it would be utterly impossible for us to do the thing which many of us desired to do, and that we should do all that we could under the circumstances in the interest of the Indians. In furtherance of that view, it was agreed that no further action should be taken than that the power sites should not be disposed of without the consent of the council of the tribe. That is all that this amendment provides for. It was impossible for us to do anything else, in view of the decisions to which I have had reference, particularly in so far as they related to Indians generally; but certain of us were then of the opinion, and are now of the opinion, that the property which was ceded to the Indians by treaty passed out of Government ownership; that it became under the treaty the private property of the Indians themselves, and therefore it could not be taken under the fifth amendment to the Constitution without just compensation. That has been our contention at all times.

I am frank enough, as a matter of course, to admit that Congress has complete jurisdiction over public lands, and can make such disposition of those lands as in its judgment is advisable and proper. I do not agree with the provisions of this bill so far as that disposition is concerned, and I am anxious that there shall be no disposition under the terms of this bill of the lands which the Indians hold under a treaty.

The Senator from Montana has referred to the fact that, so far as his knowledge is concerned, the amendment will affect but two reservations throughout the country, and that both of those reservations are located in the State of Montana. As I said in the beginning, I know nothing whatever in respect of that matter, but I assumed that there were a number of power sites on other reservations which would be affected by the bill, and I did not know but that certain of those sites might be located on Indian reservations in my own State. However, I state here and now very truthfully that if there were 20 power sites to be affected by the amendment lying within the State of Idaho, it would not change my attitude one iota with respect to the matter. I should maintain the same position that I now maintain.

It may be of interest to Senators to know that heretofore, on some occasions at least, the Government has recognized the right of the Indians to have a voice in the disposition of their lands, even by lease. If I remember correctly, some time in 1918, during the progress of the war, when it became vitally necessary that the United States produce all the foodstuffs possible in order to supply not only our people but our allies in Europe with food and other supplies, the Secretary of the Interior entered into a lease with a gentleman by the name of Campbell for the lease of a very considerable area of land within the Crow Reservation in Montana.

After the terms of that lease had been agreed upon a representative of the department was sent to Montana for the purpose of securing the consent of the Indians to the lease, and the business committee of the tribe, if my recollection serves me right, gave its assent to the leasing of the land. No different situation prevails here now than prevailed then; no more valid reason exists for the taking of power sites from those Indians without their consent than existed for the leasing of those thousands of acres of their land to the Montana Farm Corporation without their consent.

I will say that I am somewhat familiar with the decisions of the Supreme Court to which my friend from Montana referred yesterday. I have examined a number of those decisions, among them the Cherokee Tobacco case, the case of Thomas against Gay, and, I apprehend, the case to which the Senator has particular reference, the case of Lone Wolf against Hitchcock. I call attention to the fact that, so far as my investigation was conducted and so far as the information which I have is concerned, no precisely similar state of facts has ever been presented to the Supreme Court as is presented under this bill as now drawn. If my recollection serves me right, the case of Lone Wolf against Hitchcock involved the taking of lands. An agreement had been arrived at between the Indians and the United States for the disposal by the Indians of certain of their lands to the Government. It later appeared that the Indians sought to avoid the agreement by the statement that their assent to it had been fraudulently secured because of certain representations made by the interpreter as to the contents of the instrument. It also appeared that there was not a sufficient quantity of agricultural land within the reservation to give to the Indians in severalty more than 30 acres of agricultural land in lieu of the acreage agreed upon; but, Mr. President, the Indians had agreed that the fair value of the land which was to be released to the Government was $2,000,000. The Supreme Court held that the act of Congress, passed for the purpose of carrying the agreement into effect after it had been changed in certain particulars by the Congress, without, however, the consent of the Indians, was a constitutional act, and the $2,000,000, which the Indians themselves fixed for the lands released, was undoubtedly paid. In other words, the distinction between that case and the one that we are discussing lies in the fact, then, the money compensation agreed upon was paid, while in this case there is no compensation to be paid to the Indians for the land. It is to be taken from them not only without their consent but the only compensation they will receive will be such a reasonable charge as the water-power commission sees fit to fix for the use of the land.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I offer for the RECORD a statement by one of the ex-Commissioners of Indian Affairs concerning the decision to which reference has been made. I ask unanimous consent that it may be inserted in the RECORD; but I read from his report in the Lone Wolf case the following:

A notable instance in point occurred in 1901 in an act ratifying an agreement with the Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache Tribes, who occupied a large reservation in Oklahoma. To the ratification was attached an item providing for the allotment of lands in severalty to the members of the occupant tribes and the opening of the unallotted surplus of the reservation to public sale and settlement. Some of the features of this legislation differed so radically from the terms of the original agreement with the Indians that the Indian Right Association resolved to make a test case of the question of the authority of Congress in the premises. It brought suit, therefore, in the name of Lone Wolf, a prominent Kiowa, to enjoin the Secretary of the Interior from carrying the law into execution. The case finally reached the Supreme Court of the United States, which not only affirmed the right of Congress to do what it had done, but laid down the general principle that the fee in Indian reservations is vested in the Government; that the Indians have nothing more than a right of occupancy; that the power of Congress to work its will with such reservations is practically limited only by its own sense of justice in dealing with a weaker and dependent people.

* * * * * * *

From the 5th of January, 1903, the date of Lone Wolf decision, to the present day no more agreements have been made or sought with the Indians preliminary to the opening of a reservation.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I yield.

Mr. CURTIS. I have heard that report read a number of times and have had to take occasion to deny it and point out that it is not so. Mr. Leupp, or whoever wrote it, had forgotten the facts, because the truth is that we entered into an agreement with the Osage Indians in 1906, and there are other Indians with whom agreements have been made. So the Indians have been consulted. I merely wanted that to go in the RECORD with the report. I think Commissioner Leupp had overlooked the fact; but it is true that agreements were made with the Osages in 1906.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I take the official statement for it that we do not consult the Indians any longer; that is to say, consult them in the sense that they may put a veto upon the legislation of Congress.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the absence of objection, the matter referred to by the Senator from Montana will be printed in the RECORD.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Until 1903 the prevalent assumption among our people at large was the same as among the Indians themselves, that the reservations belonged absolutely to the tribes which inhabited them in pursuance of so-called "treaties" or by authority of presidential proclamations. Although not a few of the treaties contained figurative language designed to convey to the tribes concerned the idea of perpetuity of physical possession, every allotment law and every moral argument made in behalf of allotment as a remedy for some of the more crying evils of the reservation system plainly recognized that system as but a passing phase of the history of Indian development, and to such extent discredited the notion of a permanent tribal title. It has often been said to me by ultraconservative old Indians that if they had ever conceived of the changes in store for their people as the result of accepting reservations they would have died fighting the Government rather than submit to being placed there.

It is declarations like this which form the basis of much of what we hear and read about the deceptions practiced on the Indians by the Government. I have had a part in the negotiations of one Indian treaty and in the interpretation and explanation of several others, and I am confident that most of the sins of the Government in this respect went to no greater depth than its omission to volunteer to the Indians suggestions which it would never have thought of volunteering in a similar transaction with people of any other race of some of the less obvious consequences which might flow from the business then in hand; that the rest of the trouble has resulted from the limited range of the Indian's mind, due equally to his inherited peculiarities and his narrow environment, but rarely appreciated by the members of treaty-making commissions; and that what has been so sweepingly denounced as a century of dishonor might better be described, as far as the Government's operations are concerned, as an era of mutual misunderstandings.

Every treaty had to be ratified by an act of Congress before it became of force, and again and again the lawmaking body took what looked to the general public like unwarrantable liberties with vital provisions which had received the approval of the Indians.

A notable instance in point occurred in 1901 in an act ratifying an agreement with the Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache Tribes, who occupied a large reservation in Oklahoma. To the ratification was attached an item providing for the allotment of lands in severalty to the members of the occupant tribes and the opening of the unallotted surplus of the reservation to public sale and settlement. Some of the features of this legislation differed so radically from the terms of the original agreement with the Indians that the Indian Rights Association resolved to make a test case of the question of the authority of Congress in the premises. It brought suit, therefore, in the name of Lone Wolf, a prominent Kiowa, to enjoin the Secretary of the Interior from carrying the law into execution. The case finally reached the Supreme Court of the United States, which not only affirmed the right of Congress to do what it had done, but laid down the general principle that the fee in Indian reservations is vested in the Government; that the Indians have nothing more than a right of occupancy; that the power of Congress to work its will with such reservations is practically limited only by its own sense of justice in dealing with a weaker and dependent people.

This broad pronouncement carried dismay to the hearts of many excellent persons whose benevolent interest in the Indians had led them to share the Indian view of unqualified ownership and who could hardly reconcile themselves to the discovery that their long-cherished notion was a delusion. But to one who had been studying the subject in a quite unemotional way it brought no great surprise. Nay, it furnished a key to a problem which had given most of us anxious thought, for it had been intolerable to believe that the highest legislative body in this Republic would go on year after year cutting out essential features of agreements with the Indians entered into with the utmost solemnity of form, substituting therefor provisions never contemplated by the immediate parties to these instruments and forcing the unrecognizable resultant down the throats of the weaker party merely because the latter was too feeble to resent the affront. When the Supreme Court gave to the apparent aggressions of Congress the sanction of legal righteousness it at any rate cleared the air and simplified the future duty of the friends of the Indians.

From the 5th of January, 1903, the date of Lone Wolf decision, to the present day no more agreements have been made or sought with the Indians preliminary to the opening of a reservation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I should like to call attention for a moment to one clause in the decision to which I referred in a brief statement heretofore made:

The power exists to abrogate the provisions of an Indian treaty, though presumably such power will be exercised only when circumstances arise which will not only justify the Government in disregarding the stipulations of the treaty, but may demand, in the interest of the country and the Indians themselves, that it should do so.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. NUGENT].

On a division, the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CURTIS. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Gore	Moses	Simmons
Bankhead	Gronna	Myers	Smith, Ga.
Borah	Hale	Nelson	Smith, Md.
Brandegee	Harding	New	Smith, S. C.
Calder	Harris	Newberry	Spencer
Colt	Hitchcock	Norris	Sterling
Culberson	Kenyon	Nugent	Sutherland
Curtis	Kirby	Overman	Trammell
Dial	Lenroot	Owen	Wadsworth
Dillingham	Lodge	Page	Walsh, Mass.
Fernald	McCormick	Phipps	Warren
France	McCumber	Reed	Watson
Frelinghuysen	McKellar	Sheppard	Wolcott
Gay	McLean	Shields

Mr. GRONNA. I wish to announce that the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] is absent from the Senate on account of illness.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. FLETCHER] on account of illness.

Mr. NUGENT. I wish to announce the absence of the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] on official business.

Mr. BANKHEAD. My colleague [Mr. UNDERWOOD] is detained from the Senate on official business.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have been requested to announce that the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] is detained by illness in his family. The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE], and the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] are absent on official business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-five Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, in the absence of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON], who has already submitted an amendment to the pending bill, I offer it in his behalf.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 15, at the end of section 8, or at the end of line 7, it is proposed to insert the following:

Provided further, That the United States may have the option to redeem such site or sites by payment to the proper persons holding such title under and by virtue of said mortgage, trust deed, judicial sale, or tax certificate of the entire amount due at the time such option applies for a period of one year from the date such right or title is secured, and if said option is acted upon, all rights to said lease or license shall revert to the United States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina for the Senator from South Dakota.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, I should like to ask the chairman of the committee whether or not this bill changes the law as to the ownership of the bed of a navigable stream where there is a difference in the law in different States? My recollection is—I have not looked into it very thoroughly—that the law on navigable streams in the thirteen original States differs from the law in the newer States. In other words, in the thirteen original States, on navigable streams, the title to the bed of the river is in the State, and on nonnavigable streams in those States the title to the bed of the river is owned by the riparian owners to the center of the stream. Where a navigable stream is the dividing line between two States, each State owns to the center of the stream, in the absence of anything to the contrary; and where, as I say, it is not navigable, my understanding is that in my State the bed of the river belongs to the riparian owners to the middle of the stream, in the absence of a plat or a deed to the contrary. I have heard—I have not looked into the matter very thoroughly—that the United States Government owns the bed of the stream of navigable rivers, at least in the Senator's part of the United States.

The object of my inquiry is this: I do not want to give away any of the rights we have. I recognize the right of the National Government to use these streams for purposes of navigation, but I do not want us to have to come here to Washington to get the right to dam up the streams that really belong to us, if they do belong to us.

I should like to ask the chairman of the committee whether or not that proposition is correct as a matter of law; and if so, whether this bill changes it?

Mr. NELSON. That has always been my view of the case—that the Federal Government has no interest either in navigable or nonnavigable streams other than the purposes of conserving and protecting navigation; and outside of that the bed of the streams and the water in the streams belongs either to the States or to the riparian owners, as the case may be, and not to the Federal Government.

We have in this country two systems in regard to the rights of riparian owners. In most of the States, the older States, they have the common-law system, with some modifications. However, that part of the common law which held that a stream was not navigable except where the tide ebbed and flowed has never been applied in this country. Out West, in the mountain and mining and arid States, they have the doctrine of prior appropriation. That is, in a rough and short way it can be said that the man who first appropriates the water to a beneficial use has the right to it; but that applies only to those States in the West, mainly in the mountain and Pacific Coast States and in the arid States. There is some modification of that rule; but I think in most of the States east of the Mississippi—in fact, all of them—the common-law doctrine of the rights of riparian owners prevails, only modified so far as the Constitution of the United States is concerned by the interest of the Federal Government in the matter of navigation.

Mr. President, if there are no further amendments to be offered as in Committee of the Whole, I ask that the bill may be reported to the Senate.

Mr. NUGENT. Mr. President, I offer the following amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Idaho proposes an amendment, which the Secretary will report.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. Add at the end of the bill a new section, as follows:

SEC. 30. That this act shall not take effect until the expiration of three years from and after its approval by the President.

Mr. NUGENT. Mr. President, I offer the amendment for reasons which I shall briefly state.

I am very strongly of the opinion that the States and the counties, municipalities, and other political subdivisions of the States in which these water-power sites are situated should have the right to develop them for the use of the people of those States, counties, or municipalities, as the case may be. According to my understanding of this bill, it contains a provision to the effect that municipalities, counties, and so on, may make application for licenses. But it occurred to me that if this bill is enacted and becomes effective within a short time, shortly thereafter practically all of the desirable sites will have been applied for by private interests.

I am not familiar with the provisions of the constitutions in the different States with respect to the limitations on indebtedness to be incurred by the State or the county or a municipality. I do know, however, that under the constitution of the State of Idaho the legislature can not incur an indebtedness in excess of the sum of $2,000,000, except for a specific purpose; and before that can be done, the legislature must enact a bill, which must be submitted to the people of the State at the next general election and approved by them.

I do not know what the outstanding indebtedness of Idaho is at this juncture, but I apprehend that no action can be taken with respect to the development by the State of one of these power sites until such time as legislation has been enacted for that purpose.

The legislature will not convene in Idaho until next year, January, 1921. The general election would not be held until November, 1922. So that it appears to me that if this bill becomes effective within a few months the State of Idaho would be deprived of all possible opportunity to acquire one or more than one of the sites within her boundaries.

So far as the counties and the municipalities in Idaho are concerned, I doubt very much, although I have no definite information on the subject, whether there is one among them that can now take out a license for the development of a water-power site. The people are not only laboring under a tremendous burden of taxation occasioned by the war, but the different counties have during the past year voted bonds to the extent of hundreds of thousands of dollars for good roads purposes. It may be two or three years before the people will feel that they can afford to incur the necessary indebtedness to develop one of these power sites. I think that for the reasons given my amendment should be adopted.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, this amendment ought not to be adopted. The country has been suffering for 8 or 10 years for the lack of water-power legislation. All water-power development has been at a standstill, and this amendment would postpone it for another three years, leaving it as though no law had been enacted. It would stay water-power development in Idaho, just as well as in every other State, for men who seek to develop water power want to be assured that the Government will give them permission, and without that there will be an absolute stay of all development. The amendment amounts simply to postponing the work of water-power development in this country for another three years, and it ought to be rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. NUGENT].

On a division, the amendment was rejected.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I ask that a vote be had in the Senate on the amendment of the committee in paragraph (e) of section 10. It commences on page 17.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Reading Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Harris	Moses	Smith, Md.
Bankhead	Henderson	Myers	Smoot
Borah	Hitchcock	Nelson	Spencer
Brandegee	Jones, N. Mex.	New	Stanley
Calder	Kellogg	Newberry	Sterling
Chamberlain	Kenyon	Norris	Sutherland
Curtis	Kirby	Nugent	Trammell
Dial	Lenroot	Page	Underwood
Dillingham	Lodge	Phipps	Walsh, Mass.
Fernald	McCormick	Pittman	Walsh, Mont.
Frelinghuysen	McCumber	Ransdell	Warren
Gay	McKellar	Reed	Watson
Gerry	McLean	Sheppard	Wolcott
Gore	McNary	Simmons

Mr. DIAL. I desire to announce that the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] is absent on official business. He has a general pair with the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING].

Mr. MOSES. I wish to announce the absence of my colleague, the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. KEYES], on account of illness in his family. I ask that this announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. NUGENT. I desire to announce the absence on official business of the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], and I ask that this announcement may stand for the day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-five Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present.

Mr. NELSON. I suppose before a vote is taken on the amendment of the committee which was rejected in Committee of the Whole the usual course should be followed, which is to concur in the amendments made in Committee of the Whole in gross, except those which were reserved for a separate vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the amendments agreed to in Committee of the Whole will be concurred in, excepting those that have been reserved for a separate vote. The Chair hears no objection, and those amendments are concurred in.

Mr. NELSON. I now offer an amendment of the committee that was not agreed to in Committee of the Whole. It is the amendment commencing at the foot of page 17, paragraph (e), and extending throughout pages 18 and 19. It relates to the compensation for the use of water powers built by private capital and not by the Government. The amendment should be adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 17, after line 23, strike out:

(e) That the licensee shall pay to the United States reasonable annual charges in an amount to be fixed by the commission. When licenses are issued that contemplate the use of Government dams or other structures owned by the United States, in the discretion of the commission, the charges to be paid by the licensee may be readjusted at the end of 20 years after the beginning of operations and at periods of not less than 10 years thereafter, in a manner to be described in each license.

And in lieu thereof insert:

That the licensee shall pay for the license herein granted such reasonable annual charges as may be fixed by the commission for the purpose of reimbursing the United States for the cost of administration of the act in relation to water powers developed under its jurisdiction, in the proportion that the water power developed by the project covered by said license bears to the total water power developed by all projects licensed under the act, and for that purpose such charges may be readjusted from time to time, not oftener than once in two years; the licensee shall also pay for the use and occupation of any public lands and lands in reservations, except tribal lands embraced within Indian reservations, necessary for the development of the project covered by the license such reasonable annual charges based upon the actual value of the Government lands used as may be fixed by the commission; but in no event shall the annual charge for the foregoing exceed 25 cents per developed horsepower: Provided, That when licenses are issued involving the use of Government dams or other structures owned by the United States or tribal lands embraced within Indian reservations the commission shall fix a reasonable annual charge for the use thereof, and such charges may be readjusted at the end of 20 years after the beginning of operations and at periods of not less than 10 years thereafter in a manner to be described in each license.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I stated that I would ask for a vote on the amendment in the Senate. I made some remarks upon it while the bill was in Committee of the Whole. I trust that the Senate of the United States will agree to the committee amendment.

I desire to call attention to the fact that about 10 or 12 years ago, when the question of the right of the Government of the United States to control and regulate the production of electric power and the production of coal and other minerals developed in public lands was under consideration, the statement was then made by every official of the Government of the United States that the Government had no interest whatever in the control or the management of those natural resources other than to prevent waste and would charge only enough from the production therefrom to pay the administrative cost. That has been the statement made every year since until about three years ago. Now, the theory is that they should charge all they possibly can get. The result will be the passing on to the ultimate consumer of whatever charges may be imposed over and above the actual cost of administration. The Senate in the bill has followed the policy that has been adopted by the Senate in reference to all such bills in the past. I trust that the limitation of 25 cents per horsepower will be agreed to by the Senate. Remember that this is 25 cents per horsepower for every horsepower that is generated, no matter whether the company is making any money or not. The charge must be paid to the Government of the United States from the first day of operation. If it is unlimited and any charge can be made the result will be that the people living in those sparsely-settled districts of the West will be compelled to pay every dollar of the charge that the commission can impose. It is rather burdensome on the people to have these natural resources taken entirely away from them without receiving the usual taxation, but it will be more burdensome if they are to be administered in a way that would place an extra burden upon all industries developed. In some of the Western States the taxes imposed run as high as 4 per cent per annum. Is it possible that in those States with that rate of taxation manufacturing concerns can be established and compete with institutions that have the great body of people as customers at their very doors and at a rate of taxation of 1½ per cent? It is impossible, and I know that if the Senate of the United States will give the subject consideration it will adopt the amendment offered by the committee. I sincerely hope so, at least.

Mr. NELSON. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I too am very heartily in favor of the adoption of the committee amendment. I do not believe this measure should be intended to be a revenue producer. I do not believe the object of it should be to produce revenue. I believe that all the Federal Government should have out of it is enough to pay administrative expenses. As has been well said by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], whatever charge is made will certainly be passed on to the consumer. There is absolutely no avenue of escape from that conclusion. It must go to the consumer, whether it be much or little. I believe some reasonable limitation should be put upon the charge to be made by the Government. I would be willing to see the charge increased from 25 cents to 50 cents per developed horsepower, but I think there ought to be some limitation. However, I greatly prefer the provision as it is. I hope the committee amendment may be adopted just as it is.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I am not going to repeat at very great length the argument I have heretofore made upon the amendment. I understand there has been very great activity since the Senate refused to agree to the amendment a few days ago, and that now it is going to be agreed to by a very substantial majority.

I understand very well that if the amendment is adopted there are certain interests which will very greatly profit by it. The stock of the Utah Light & Power Co., in the State of the Senator from Utah, will be worth a great deal more with the amendment agreed to than without it, but the people of Utah will get no benefit from the amendment. If the amendment is agreed to it will be worth several million dollars to the Niagara Falls Power Co., but it will not in the least benefit the people who utilize the power.

Inasmuch as the Senate has already agreed that there shall be a perpetual franchise I do not feel quite so much concerned about this amendment as I otherwise would because if, in addition to that outrage, this amendment shall be agreed to, it will a little better insure that if the bill does go to the President of the United States in this form it will be vetoed, as it ought to be. As the bill now stands it is a surrender of the public interest to special privilege. The Senate may make this record if it chooses.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Assistant Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX]. He is absent, but I understand if present he would vote as I am about to vote, and I therefore vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. CURTIS (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. FERNALD (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS] and vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. OWEN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE]. In his absence I withhold my vote. If I were at liberty to vote, I would vote "nay."

Mr. DIAL (when the name of Mr. SMITH of South Carolina was called). I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. SMITH of South Carolina] is absent on official business. He is paired with the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING].

Mr. STERLING (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. MCCUMBER (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. STERLING. I transfer my pair with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] to the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX] and vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. GERRY. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON]. He is paired with the Senator from Maine [Mr. FERNALD]. If present, the Senator from South Dakota would vote "nay."

I wish also to announce that the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] and the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] are detained from the Senate at a conference on the railroad bill.

The Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] is detained by illness in his family.

The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN], the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL], and the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK] are absent on official business.

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK];

The Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON];

The Senator from Delaware [Mr. BALL] with the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER];

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. KEYES] with the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING]; and

The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS].

The result was announced—yeas 44, nays 20, as follows:

YEAS—44.

Ashurst	Gay	Myers	Smith, Ga.
Bankhead	Gerry	Nelson	Smith, Md.
Beckham	Hale	New	Smoot
Borah	Harding	Newberry	Spencer
Brandegee	Jones, N. Mex.	Page	Sterling

Curtis	Kendrick	Poindexter	Townsend
Edge	Keyes	Pomerene	Williams
Elkins	King	Robinson

So the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The present occupant of the chair has been informed at the Secretary's desk that the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] reserved the amendment on page 29.

Mr. LENROOT. I did reserve the committee amendment on page 29, with reference to the disposition of compensation for licenses, dependent upon the final disposition of that amendment, but inasmuch as the action thereon has been different from what I apprehended it would be, I withdraw my reservation.

The amendment was concurred in.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I have not had an opportunity to discuss this measure. Though it has been debated for a number of days, I have taken no time of the Senate in the discussion. I do not say that the views of the writer of the letter which I am going to ask to have read have at all times and in all respects met with my approval, but I wish to say that in his fight against the monopoly of water power and for the conservation of the natural resources he has been consistent.

While I am on my feet I wish to say that I apprehend there will be no roll call on the bill; judging from the last vote, I take it that it will be passed without a roll call. I wish, therefore, to state that I have been requested to announce that the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] is absent on account of illness, and if he were present he would vote against the bill.

Now, Mr. President, I ask that the letter which I send to the Secretary's desk may be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read as requested.

The letter was read, as follows:

NATIONAL CONSERVATION ASSOCIATION,
Washington, D. C., January 5, 1920.

Hon. ASLE J. GRONNA,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I am writing to call your special attention to the water-power bill (H. R. 3184), now in a preferred position on the Senate Calendar. This bill will settle the disposition of all our remaining public water powers. It is, therefore, one of the most important domestic measures with which this or any other Congress has had to deal.

In it there are five provisions which are antipublic and altogether indefensible. Without them this measure would be sound; with them its effect is bad. Every one of them would be a surrender of the public right.

1. Section 10 (e) gives the public water powers away for practically nothing by relieving licensees from paying the reasonable value of what they get from the public. It limits the possible charge to the reimbursement of the Government for the expenses of administering the act, plus a small charge based on the value of Government lands occupied, irrespective of their water-power possibilities. Thus it prevents any charge being made for the enormously valuable water-power rights to be granted under the bill. When a municipality is to develop and use the power for its citizens a nominal charge is right and just, but when a corporation or individual is to be given publicly owned rights and make a profit from them it is clear beyond question that a reasonable charge, based on the value given, should be made.

The right to make such a charge is clear. To abandon it for the profit of the corporations would be wholly unjustifiable. The water-power commission should be given a free hand to charge what the rights granted are actually worth. This grave defect in the bill can be remedied by striking out the Senate committee amendment.

2. Section 22 gives the public-service commission of a State the power to decide alone that a contract may extend beyond the end of a license, apparently with the intention that the National Government, or its new licensee, shall be saddled with obligations, as to the making of which it will have had no voice, no matter how unfair, disadvantageous, or costly to the public interest they may be.

This provision is absurd on its face. Merely to set forth its apparent intention condemns it. Again the fault can be cured by eliminating the Senate committee amendment.

3. The provision for "severance damages" in section 14, page 25, lines 1 to 5, is without justification and should be omitted from the bill. The taking over of the property after 50 years of notice has nothing analogous to that in which an owner is suddenly deprived of a part of his property against his will, and in justice requires no severance damages at all. No valid argument can be made for damages based upon anything more than the loss of use for some short period of not more than three years while necessary changes are being made.

4. At the end of section 15 the bill contains provisions which are calculated to make a license perpetual. These are contained in the words "on reasonable terms" and "which is accepted," line 20, all of which should be stricken out. The word "shall" in line 20 should be changed to "may." The rights of a licensee will then surely and automatically terminate at the end of 50 years, as they should, and no collusion or other device will avail to make them indefinite. Of course, the typographical error in line 20 must be corrected by changing "license" to "licensee."

5. The bill provides that certain items, if any, shall be deducted from the legitimate original cost of a project in order to determine the price to be paid therefor when taken over by the United States or another licensee. But it fails to provide that these proper and necessary reserves shall be made at all. This omission would mean the unjustifiable loss of millions of dollars to the Government. It can be cured by striking out the words "reserves for such purposes" in line 3, page 17, and substituting therefor the words "amortization, sinking fund, and other similar reserves, if and as required by the commission, but such reserves shall not be so made as to prevent a fair return upon the net investment."

I bring these matters to your attention because the changes suggested should be made to protect the public interests and the bill should then be passed. Amended as here suggested it would, on the whole, be sound and wise. But unless such amendments are made it will contain a plain surrender to the special interests and should not be allowed to pass.

Yours, very truly,

GIFFORD PINCHOT.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, in connection with the letter that has just been read, I wish to state that the only recommendations it contains which have been adopted by the Senate are the one striking out the Senate committee amendment relating to the joint approval of contracts, leaving the language as contained in the House bill, and the one limiting, to some degree, the amount of severance damages. In no other respect, however, has the bill been changed in the particulars named in the letter.

I ask for the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill has not reached that parliamentary stage as yet, the Chair will say to the Senator.

Mr. LENROOT. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is still in the Senate and open to amendment. If there be no further amendments, the question is, Shall the amendments be ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read the third time?

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill having been read the third time, the question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. REED. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Reading Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX]. I am in doubt as to how he would vote on this question. I therefore transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania to the junior Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH] and vote "yea."

Mr. FERNALD (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS] and vote "yea."

Mr. KENDRICK (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL], but I understand that he is in favor of this legislation. Therefore, I feel at liberty to vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. GRONNA (when Mr. LA FOLLETTE's name was called). I have been requested to announce that the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] is absent on account of illness. If he were present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. STERLING (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] to the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] and vote "yea."

Mr. BANKHEAD (when Mr. UNDERWOOD's name was called). My colleague [Mr. UNDERWOOD] is unavoidably absent. If present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] and vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. HARDING. Has the junior Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He has not.

Mr. HARDING. I have a general pair with that Senator. I am informed by competent authority, however, that if he were present he would vote as I shall vote. Therefore, I am at liberty to vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. OWEN. I have a pair with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE], who is absent, and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. CURTIS. I wish to announce the absence of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER] on official business.

I wish also to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from Delaware [Mr. BALL] with the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER].

The Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON]; and

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. KEYES] with the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING].

Mr. GERRY. I have been requested to announce that the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON] is necessarily absent. If present, he would vote "nay."

The Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] is detained by illness in his family.

The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN], the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], and the Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH], are detained on official business.

Mr. TRAMMELL. My colleague, the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER], is detained from the Senate by illness.

The result was announced—yeas 52, nays 18, as follows:

YEAS—52.

So the bill was passed.

Mr. NELSON. I move that the Senate request a conference with the House of Representatives upon the bill and amendments, and that the Chair appoint six conferees upon the part of the Senate, three from the Committee on Commerce and three from the Committee on Public Lands.

The motion was agreed to; and the President pro tempore appointed Mr. JONES of Washington, Mr. NELSON, Mr. BANKHEAD, Mr. SMOOT, Mr. FALL, and Mr. MYERS conferees on the part of the Senate.

AMERICANIZATION OF ALIENS.

Mr. KENYON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 3315, the bill to promote Americanization.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3315) to promote Americanization by providing for cooperation with the several States in the education of non-English-speaking persons and the assimilation of foreign-born residents, and for other purposes.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. KENYON. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I did not realize at first what motion was being put. The Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] was called away this afternoon on business of the Senate to South Carolina, I believe. He told me before leaving that he had an understanding with the Senator from Iowa——

Mr. KENYON. I will say that I have a complete understanding to protect the Senator from Utah.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. That no vote would be taken on the bill until after his return.

Mr. KENYON. Until after his return, provided he returns within the time he indicated he would.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Yes.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I do not know whether or not the Senate desires to proceed with the bill this afternoon. Personally I should much prefer to have it go over until to-morrow.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, there are a large number of nominations to be considered, and if the Senator will move an executive session we can transact executive business.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. KENYON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After eight minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 3 o'clock and 48 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, January 16, 1920, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, January 15, 1920.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Thou Grace Divine, encircling all,
A shoreless, soundless sea,
Wherein at last our souls must fall—
O love of God most free!

We thank Thee that the devout men of Christendom no longer worship Thee in servile fear, as an implacable judge, nor as a king seated upon a throne, ruling his subjects with a rod of iron; but that they look up to Thee with faith, hope, and confidence, and worship Thee in spirit and in truth, as a loving Father who doeth all things well.

Wealth, power, position have their sway. Big guns, great armies led by expert military men flourish for a time; but right is might, justice, liberty, truth, righteousness, and will at last prevail, since love is king and rules in the purest homes, purest governments, and will at last rule the world in equity, right, and justice.

The mob crucified the Christ, but He lives and will establish Thy kingdom upon the earth, under Thy divine rule. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

RESIGNATION FROM COMMITTEE.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication.

The Clerk read as follows:

Hon. F. H. GILLETT,
Speaker of the House:

I hereby tender my resignation as a member of the Committee on Revision of the Laws, effective at once.

ED. B. ALMON.

CORRECTION OF THE RECORD.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I wish to make an inquiry as to a matter of a correction of the RECORD, not to-day's RECORD but of several days ago, and it is this. On the vote on the Berger resolution a few days ago there were no pairs published in the RECORD either that day or since. On the former vote on the resolution denying Mr. Berger his seat the pairs were published in the RECORD, and I do not understand why they did not appear in the RECORD in the last resolution vote, as has always been the case.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has no information on the subject. Has the gentleman inquired of the pair clerk?

Mr. SIMS. Yes; and I have examined the RECORD, and I do not find the pairs, and I want to ask that the permanent RECORD be corrected so as to show the pairs just as they would have been shown if presented in the usual way at the time the vote was taken. One of the pair clerks whom I asked why it was not done, said that upon the suggestion of certain Members it was not done. I do not undertake to state the details, but we have pair clerks, and they have a function, and I feel satisfied they are ready to discharge their functions, and I ask that the permanent RECORD be corrected by placing the pairs that the clerks prepared in the permanent RECORD, following the yea-and-nay vote.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIMS. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. That was a subject, Mr. Speaker, upon which it was impossible to find a pair on the opposite side of that question.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, that cuts no sort of figure at all. It made it extremely conspicuous to leave the pairs out entirely on that one question and on that particular vote, when our custom is to put them in on all votes and which were published as on the former vote of the same character when the House acted before. I think that has been the universal practice. I have no personal interest in it, but I do not know why this was done. It looks exceedingly conspicuous for——

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIMS. I do.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The right way to regulate this pair business is absolutely to prohibit them.

Mr. SIMS. I am willing to vote to abolish it, but as long as we have it let us have some uniformity about it.

The SPEAKER. The pairing, of course, is done for the convenience of Members. It occurs to the Chair very likely the men who had regular pairs would have preferred not to have them appear on that vote.

Mr. SIMS. That would have to be left to each Member himself.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GARNER. A good many pairs which appear in the RECORD having been made by Members are never so made, and the parliamentary inquiry is this: Is the pair clerk to make it appear in the RECORD that two gentlemen are paired when the pairs have not been read from the desk?

The SPEAKER. The Chair was not aware there was any such practice. The Chair thinks that strictly, of course, the pairs should be formally made.

Mr. GARNER. Then if a gentleman arises on the floor of the House in the morning and undertakes to correct the RECORD by calling attention to the fact that when two or three pairs were read from the desk where some 30 or 40 appear in the RECORD, the RECORD should be corrected so as to coincide with the fact?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks so.

Mr. GARNER. I hope some gentleman may undertake to do that, and to that degree do away with pairs. I call that to the attention of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH].

Mr. WALSH. I am in favor of it. I think it is rather unusual to permit several days to go by before asking that pairs upon a resolution which has been passed may now be put in the RECORD, and I object.

Mr. SIMS. I have no personal interest except——

Mr. WALSH. Anyone having a personal interest should have risen long since, and I object.

Mr. SIMS. I had asked the Clerk to tell me if the pairs appeared in the usual way, and I was advised as I have stated. I am not reflecting on the clerks. I think the clerks did exactly what they thought was right.

Mr. MONDELL. I think it very wise not to have the pairs appear on that question.

Mr. SIMS. Very well, then let us abolish the rule. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, that the pairs made up by the Clerk be placed in the RECORD——

The SPEAKER. But objection has been made.

Mr. SIMS. Who made it?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. SIMS. Very well; then I will introduce a resolution and let us have the whole thing investigated.

ELECTIONS TO COMMITTEES.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I move the election of Mr. ALMON, of Alabama, to fill a vacancy on the Committee on the Territories.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina offers a motion, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. KITCHIN moves that Mr. ALMON be elected a member of the Committee on the Territories.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. KITCHIN. Now, Mr. Speaker, I move that Mr. HOEY, of North Carolina, be elected a member of the Committee on Labor and the Committee on the Revision of the Laws.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. KITCHIN moves that Mr. HOEY be elected a member of the Committee on Labor and also a member of the Committee on the Revision of the Laws.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from North Carolina.

The motion was agreed to.

POST OFFICE APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 11578, the Post Office appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 11578, with Mr. WALSH in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 11578) making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read as follows:

OFFICE OF THE SECOND ASSISTANT POSTMASTER GENERAL.

For inland transportation by star routes in Alaska, including increases hereinafter provided, $255,000: Provided, That out of this appropriation the Postmaster General is authorized to provide difficult or emergency mail service in Alaska, including the establishment and equipment of relay stations, in such manner as he may think advisable, without advertising therefor.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on the subject of this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, on what subject?

Mr. STEENERSON. On post-office affairs.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

For inland transportation by railroad routes, including increases hereinafter provided, $60,000,000: Provided, That not to exceed $1,250,000 of this appropriation may be expended for pay of freight and incidental charges for the transportation of mails conveyed under special arrangement in freight trains or otherwise: Provided further, That out of this appropriation the Postmaster General is authorized to expend not exceeding $850,500 for the purchase of aeroplanes and the operation and maintenance of aeroplane mail service between such points, including service to and between points in Alaska, as he may determine.

Mr. WATSON, Mr. CRAMTON, Mr. MADDEN, Mr. MONDELL, and Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee rose.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word in order to make an inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. A point of order has been reserved.

Mr. WATSON. I understand it is reserved. Have I a right to ask questions?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WATSON. Has there been an aeroplane service established yet in Alaska?

Mr. STEENERSON. I think not.

Mr. WATSON. Between what two points is it the purpose to establish an aeroplane service in Alaska?

Mr. STEENERSON. Aeroplane service has already been established between New York and Washington.

Mr. WATSON. But this appropriation is for an aeroplane service in Alaska.

Mr. STEENERSON. We have no information on that subject. The paragraph is identically the same as it was in the last year's appropriation bill, and when it passed the House that provision in regard to Alaska was not in, but it was inserted in the Senate, and we inserted it this year in the identical language in which it was carried in the last year's law. I have only secondhand information now in regard to it.

Mr. WATSON. Then you have no information?

Mr. STEENERSON. I have some information. I have information derived from a hearing on another bill, where it is advocated that we should carry mail to Seattle.

Mr. WATSON. From where?

Mr. STEENERSON. From New York.

Mr. WATSON. From New York to Seattle?

Mr. STEENERSON. And thence to Alaska. There was some reference to Alaska made by Representative MILLER in a hearing upon a separate bill, and I think it was suggested that in some places in Alaska it was desirable to have mail carried by aeroplane; but I do not think they have carried any there yet.

Mr. WATSON. The committee has no definite information in regard to this appropriation?

Mr. STEENERSON. In regard to carrying mail to Alaska; no.

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield to me to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill a question?

Mr. WATSON. I will.

Mr. DYER. The appropriation that is provided in this bill, as I understand it, is the same as carried in last year's act, for the present fiscal year; that the same amount is carried for the air service as was carried in the last bill; is that correct?

Mr. STEENERSON. Well, the appropriation for the fiscal year 1919 was $100,000, and was in 1918. The appropriation for the current fiscal year is $850,500. This represents an increase of 800 per cent over what it was in the previous year. They have not expended $800,000 yet.

Mr. DYER. It is the same amount in this bill as was provided in the last act of Congress, is it not?

Mr. STEENERSON. In the act for the fiscal year 1920.

Mr. DYER. Now, will the gentleman state whether or not, from the hearings had by the committee, this amount will permit the extension of the service in any place other than carrying out the present program?

Mr. STEENERSON. Yes; I believe it will permit the extension of the service, especially if they would quit building these expensive aeroplanes and contract with private contractors. We had a Maj. Burnell before the committee a day or two on another proposition, and he stated that there was a corporation—I forget the name of it—composed of some of the leading capitalists of the country, amply responsible, that will contract for 100 miles back and forth in a day for $100 a day, being a dollar a mile. Now, with $850,000 you could carry mail a thousand miles once a day for 300 days in the year for $300,000. You can carry at that same rate 3,000 miles. They have got only about 900 in operation now; so this would permit of an extension of at least 200 per cent. Instead of wasting the money, as they have, on building and experimenting with various kinds of aeroplanes——

Mr. DYER. But, if the gentleman will permit, this appropriation will not permit the further extension of the service.

Mr. STEENERSON. It will permit it.

Mr. DYER. How much did the Postmaster General ask the committee for, $2,000,000?

Mr. STEENERSON. The Postmaster General had a separate item that he recommended as a distinct proposition, and that was for $3,000,000.

Mr. DYER. Yes; he wanted enough to operate a route from Pittsburgh to Kansas City by way of Indianapolis and St. Louis, and to San Francisco.

Mr. STEENERSON. The Assistant Postmaster General went before the committee and recommended the taking away of the unexpended balance for railway inland transportation for the present year, which is $7,000,000, to be used for the establishment of air mail service to San Francisco, and at the same time the bill was pending two other propositions were introduced, one to carry the mail to Los Angeles and the other to Seattle. So that the bills pending would take about $10,000,000.

Mr. DYER. Well, the gentleman is aware, is he not, that the service has been very beneficial and very effective?

Mr. STEENERSON. No, sir; "the gentleman is aware" of no such thing.

Mr. DYER. The report of the Postmaster General shows that it has been very successful. He gives figures as to the amount of mail carried.

Mr. STEENERSON. Who gives figures?

Mr. DYER. The Postmaster General.

Mr. STEENERSON. Oh, no; he does not. Not that proves anything to one who studies the subject.

Mr. DYER. I have them here in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of January 6.

Mr. STEENERSON. Oh, he has not succeeded in expediting the mail even between here and New York.

Mr. DYER. The gentleman is mistaken about that.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, perhaps I can give an answer to the question propounded by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WATSON]. After reading the hearings the gentleman from St. Louis [Mr. DYER] need not cherish any hope as to an extension of the service to his city under this item of the bill, and absolutely there is no idea whatever on the part of the Post Office Department that the service should be extended to Alaska. I looked into that a little because it seems to me, if the Post Office Department is justified in taking up the matter of aviation anywhere, it should be in these places where by reason of the natural conditions, by reason of mountains and bodies of water, and so forth, there do not exist now satisfactory methods of transporting the mail. That does not seem to be the policy of the Post Office Department. They appear to be taking no steps whatever for experiments in such cases as that, but are attempting to carry the mail from New York to Washington, and if they have good luck they get the mail from New York to Washington about as quickly as it would be carried by train, already existing, and at less expense if it goes on the train.

Let me call to the attention of the gentleman that the estimate of the Post Office Department on the subject was a request for $3,000,000. They asked to have this whole item of $850,000 stricken out, and in another place in the bill $3,000,000 put in. That $3,000,000, if they could have it, would have provided approximately $2,000,000 for operation of the service and leave $1,000,000 for the purchase of equipment, and so forth. That $2,000,000 would have provided certain extensions in this country in competition with existing satisfactory rail routes. Not one penny of it was asked for any extension to Alaska, and I assume that if given the $2,000,000 they would not extend it to Alaska or make any experiments in that direction. With $850,000, the same amount they had before, they certainly would not do it.

Mr. WATSON. Would all this $850,000 be applied to Alaska?

Mr. CRAMTON. It seems to be the policy of the committee on this item to give the Post Office Department free discretion to expend it anywhere they want to, and the word "Alaska" has been put in here apparently to raise the hope somewhere that something would be done for Alaska. But the item itself and the hearings upon it show that nobody in the Post Office Department has any idea of extending the service to Alaska or trying any experiments over the Rocky Mountains or any place else where existing railroad transportation does not give practical service.

Mr. WATSON. What was the object of the committee in putting this in?

Mr. CRAMTON. I think it is from that conservative point of view, perhaps, of allowing things to be as they are. Personally, I hope the point of order will be made by the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL]. If not, I am inclined to think I shall make it myself, because to my mind the Post Office Department is not justified in fooling with this proposition for the establishment of service where satisfactory service can be secured by rail. The use of that $850,000 means nothing in the way of military preparedness, but at this time when we have got to cut corners it is the best place I know of to cut off $850,000.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. RAMSEYER. I think the gentleman is correct, that there is no purpose on the part of the Post Office Department in the near future to extend this service to Alaska. But if the Post Office Department should get $3,000,000, as they asked for originally, it was their purpose to extend the service on from Chicago, where it now goes, through Omaha and on to San Francisco, across the Rocky Mountains, as the gentleman states. In addition to that, they were going to establish a service between Minneapolis through Chicago to St. Louis, also a service from Pittsburgh to St. Louis, and also one south to Atlanta. But, of course, with the $850,000 provided in this bill they can not extend the service; at least they say they can not extend the service across the Rocky Mountains. If they could extend the service across the Rocky Mountains to San Francisco, they claim they would save two days' time in transporting the mail from New York to San Francisco.

Mr. CRAMTON. I can not yield further to the gentleman to make that statement. I would like to call this to the gentleman's attention——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have one minute more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent to proceed for one minute more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CRAMTON. I would like to call attention, in view of the statement of the distinguished chairman of the committee [Mr. STEENERSON] with reference to what can be done in the way of contract service at a cost of $1 per mile per day, to the fact that the hearings do not indicate that the Post Office Department has any intention whatever of undertaking anything in the way of contract service. They want to go ahead with the same methods and with the same system with which they handled it in the past year, and which the chairman of the committee has so strongly criticized.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has again expired.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, while this proposition is pending on a reservation of a point of order I would like to say what I know about this thing. In the beginning the department was authorized to experiment with the aerial mail service and in the last year was authorized to expend $850,500. During the hearings, in the recommendation made by the department it was developed that they asked for $3,000,000 to extend the service. The committee did not think it wise to grant authority to expend that $3,000,000. The Second Assistant Postmaster General in his statement before the committee would lead the committee to believe that if they had the money with which to extend the air mail service they would be able to take all the mail off the trains in the United States in the next 30 days.

Of course, everybody knows that is not possible, and that whatever money you expend for air mail service will be in addition to the money expended for the transportation of mail by rail.

Mr. ROUSE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. No; I will not yield for the present. In a few minutes I will.

Mr. ROUSE. I just desire to correct the gentleman's statement about taking all the first-class mail off trains.

Mr. MADDEN. I am making my own conclusions.

Mr. ROUSE. I know the gentleman wants to be accurate.

Mr. MADDEN. Of course. The gentleman can make his statement in his own time. My own judgment is that the air mail service as it exists at present, except between New York and Chicago, is of no consequence whatever; that it accomplishes no good purpose. The service between Washington and New York has no right to exist. There is no business for it to perform. It accomplishes nothing.

Now, in my judgment the only reason why the air mail service between New York and Chicago is of any value is that the trains leaving New York at 8.45 every night reach Chicago in time to make the western connections there for all the western and northwestern territory. Any train that leaves New York later than 8.45 at night can not reach Chicago in time to make the western connection, and so the policy has been adopted by the Post Office Department of taking all the first-class mail coming into the New York post office after 8.45 every night until about 5 o'clock the next morning and forwarding it to the western connections at Chicago and getting it there as early as it would have arrived if it had left on the 8.45 p. m. train the night before. Any mail that does not leave on the 8.45 p. m. train, no matter what train it leaves on after that, would have to wait over at Chicago 24 hours, and to the extent that the department is able to advance the movement of the mail that comes into the New York post office after 8.45 p. m. up to 5 o'clock in the morning, the air mail service is advantageous; but, of course, nobody will claim that even that begins to pay for itself, and if we extend the air mail service to the points suggested by all the wild dreamers in the country we will not only have to expend $3,000,000 for this experimentation every year but we will have to expend $300,000,000, and the Post Office bill, instead of being a legitimate business bill, will be just as big a pork-barrel bill as the public buildings bill or the rivers and harbors bill.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Or both.

Mr. MADDEN. And I want to say to you that the time has come when somebody ought to have the courage to stand up here and prevent this great institution being pork-barrelized, if I may so express it. Why, you can see on the floor here now gentlemen who are anxious to have the air service sent to their towns. They do not know whether there is any merit in it or not. They have given it no study, they have no facts upon which to base their claims, and yet they say, "Our city ought to have it and every city ought to have it," and it will be a contest on the floor of the House to see how many Members can combine to get the air service into their cities, and not a question of merit or a question of proper expenditure or conservation of the public funds.

Mr. TREADWAY. Will the gentleman yield for one question?

Mr. MADDEN. In one moment. So I say that with $850,500 authorized in the bill to be deducted from the railway mail pay of $60,000,000, the department has all the money it ought to have, and there ought not to be any amendment to this section of the bill. Now I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. TREADWAY. The gentleman said mail could leave New York up to 8.45 p. m. by train. I want to ask the gentleman what percentage of the business mail of the city would not be in the post office in time for that train?

Mr. MADDEN. I do not know that. I can not tell.

Mr. TREADWAY. Is not that information available?

Mr. MADDEN. One would naturally suppose that all the mail of any consequence might be in the post office by that time.

Mr. TREADWAY. That is the point I had in mind.

Mr. MADDEN. One would think that all the mail that needed to be expedited would be in the post office and ready to be dispatched before 8.45 p. m.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. ROUSE. Mr. Chairman, in answer to my friend the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN], who said that the Second Assistant Postmaster General desired to divert all the first-class mail from the railways to the air service, I wish to quote the following statement of General Praeger:

> There are no statistics existent to show the total number of letters carried on the railroads, but the total number distributed on trains by the Railway Mail Service for the 12 months ended October 31, 1919, was approximately 7,689,350,968. Of these it is proposed to divert 382,000,000 to the air routes, or approximately 5 per cent. This is the character of mail known as "working mail" on the trains.

So, instead of diverting all the first-class mail, he proposes to divert only 5 per cent of it.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROUSE. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Is this appropriation large enough to permit further experimentation in the mail service?

Mr. ROUSE. I will say to the gentleman that the present appropriation will not provide for any extension of the present service, nor will it pay for the present mail service after the 1st day of next July.

Mr. LONGWORTH. In other words, an appropriation so small as this would forestall any further developments?

Mr. ROUSE. It will, and it will not pay for the present service.

Mr. MADDEN. There ought not to be any extension, and it ought to pay for the present service.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. DOWELL having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the following House concurrent resolution:

House concurrent resolution 45.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the time within which the joint special committee shall report, which committee was appointed under the provisions of the resolution (H. Con. Res. 14) of the present Congress authorizing the appointment of a joint special committee to confer with the officials of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts and others relative to the participation by the United States in the observance of the three hundredth anniversary of the landing of the Pilgrims, be, and the same is hereby, extended until March 1, 1920.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to return to the House of Representatives, in compliance with its request, the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 69) appointing a commission to report on conditions in the Virgin Islands.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills and concurrent resolution of the following titles:

H. R. 9089. An act releasing the claim of the United States Government to the block or square of land in the city of Fort Smith, in the State of Arkansas, upon which is situated the old Federal jail, to the city of Fort Smith for a site for a convention hall, community building, or other public purposes;

H. R. 9183. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to adjust the terms of the contract for the sale of the old post-office property in New Haven, Conn.; and House concurrent resolution 46.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That a joint commission to consist of three Members of the Senate and three Members of the House of Representatives, to be appointed by the Vice President of the United States and the Speaker of the House, respectively, is hereby created to visit the Virgin Islands and to report fully to Congress as to existing conditions in the said islands, and particularly to report and recommend action by Congress, if need there be therefor, with reference to whether the present government under executive direction should be superseded by civil government provided by Congress as contemplated by act of March 3, 1917 (39 Stat., p. 1132), said government being now only temporary in character and by order of the President being now vested in officers of the Navy; also, as to whether Congress should at this time provide for a civil government of the island by an organic act; also what, if any, legislation is necessary pending the formation and adoption of an organic act, and as to the general conditions existing in the islands. Said report to be filed at the earliest date practicable, and during the Sixty-sixth Congress. That the expenses of said commission in carrying out the provisions of this resolution shall be paid in equal proportions from the contingent funds of the Senate and the House of Representatives, upon the audit and order, respectively, of the ranking Senate and House members of said commission, the total amount not to exceed the sum of $2,500.

POST OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, I should like to have 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, a year ago last month we held hearings on this item. It was then carried at $100,000 for the year, and they asked for $850,500. Before it was granted we examined Mr. Praeger with regard to it, and I mention this simply to show the methods employed by the Post Office Department to increase this appropriation.

Now, we have announced here a policy of economy. Our leader, Mr. MONDELL, has said that we must cut appropriations as much as possible, that the burden of taxation upon the people is very heavy, and we must economize where it is possible to do so. We would not economize on postal salaries, because, by reason of the high cost of living, the personnel had to have more compensation or the service would break down and be demoralized. Here is a matter that they seek to increase from $850,000 to $3,000,000.

I want to call your attention to the fact that a year ago, when we granted the increase of 800 per cent, I asked Mr. Praeger if they were going to extend the service to St. Paul and Minneapolis. I said I did not believe in the service except as an experiment. I said, "If you are going to extend it, are you going to carry it to the Twin Cities?" I will read from page 54 of last year's hearings on the appropriation bill:

Mr. STEENERSON. You have not gotten to Chicago yet?

Mr. PRAEGER. Sunday week we will get there—on the 15th of December.

Mr. STEENERSON. And then what time will you get to Minneapolis and St. Paul.

Mr. PRAEGER. In the spring. That is the only promise we can make, because we have problems to solve connected with winter flying which we are going to solve on the New York-Chicago route. If that swings well and we have fairly reasonable weather, we will get into Minneapolis in March, 1919.

That, of course, got the Minnesota vote for the appropriation. He has never extended it to Minneapolis. But under his statement the people have purchased an aviation field for $25,000, and the board of trade are bombarding me with telegrams.

Again I examined Mr. Praeger in the hearings on this bill, and I said, "How about the extension to Minneapolis?" He said he was going to extend it to Minneapolis. He said that they had not been able to take care of the extension until they knew whether Congress wanted to extend the service or not. Later on, in response to a question in another hearing, he said he was going to extend it to Minneapolis. But here is a telegram I got from Minneapolis to-day:

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN., January 14.

Hon. HALVOR STEENERSON,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

Post Office Department has provided for Air Mail Service out of present funds. This service canceled July 1 unless additional funds are provided. We ask your support for appropriation asked for this service.

B. F. BENSON,
Vice President Chamber of Commerce.

Now, here is a holdup as plain as can be. We gave them $850,000 last year on his distinct promise to have the service extended to Minneapolis—they were already in Chicago—and now they telegraph me that unless they get the increased appropriation they will discontinue the service on the 1st of July.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEENERSON. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. I understand it is the position of the department that unless there is an increased appropriation for the service after the 1st of July they will discontinue it. If they can maintain the service from April to July under the present appropriation, why can not they maintain it after the 1st of July on the same amount of appropriation?

Mr. STEENERSON. They could; with due economy they could maintain the service and have an unexpended balance. In 1918 they figure that it cost $5.35 per ton-mile, and now they have reduced it; and one man testified that he would carry it for $1 a mile without regard to the load, and that the machine carries 500 pounds or more. If they had used economy they could have carried the air mail service to Minneapolis and St. Paul long ago. Perhaps they waited to get an aviation field ready for them.

Now they undertake to throw all the blame on me, saying that unless we give them the $3,000,000 the airplane service to Minneapolis will be discontinued July 1.

I have some respect for a highway robber, because he has some courage; but the idea of having people hold up Congress by a threat to discontinue the service that we have appropriated money for excels the performance of that individual. [Laughter.] They are not satisfied to leave Members to use their judgment, but must intimidate them.

Now, as to the merits of the air mail service: As stated by my colleague, Mr. MADDEN, between here and New York it is absolutely useless. We had Mr. Ryan, president of the Railway Mail Association, before the committee, and he testified that he had made experiments on 12 different days, and in most cases the letter mail by railroad got here before the aeroplane letters. Everybody can see that whether you get the mail here an hour or two in advance is insufficient to make any great difference. The Postmaster General's report, for instance, states that in 19 months the air mail service has expedited the delivery of 22,000,000 letters. Wonderful! Twenty-two million letters! At that rate it would take five years to get one letter to each inhabitant of the United States.

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEENERSON. I will.

Mr. DYER. The gentleman says that they have expedited 22,000,000 letters. How much time have they saved?

Mr. STEENERSON. I do not believe they have saved a minute.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. STEENERSON. I ask for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota asks that his time be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I regret exceedingly, but I must object.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, on this aeroplane item I think the House would be interested in understanding the present situation as to the existing service in order to pass judgment upon whether or not the service should be extended. As has been stated by the chairman of the committee, the original appropriation for the aeroplane service was $100,000, and for the present fiscal year that appropriation is $850,500. As we all understand, the first route established was the one from New York City to Washington. Then in the present fiscal year, with the increased appropriation, the department has been able to install a new route from New York to Cleveland and from Cleveland to Chicago. The statement is made by the chairman of the committee, Mr. STEENERSON, and also by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] that the route from New York to Washington serves no real practical purpose, for the reason that it leaves New York City at 8.45 a. m., and that practically all of the mail that is placed in the New York City post office the night before would go out on the night trains to Washington anyway, and therefore the mail is not expedited by the aeroplane delivery. Let it be noted that the route from New York to Washington does not carry New York City mail alone. Its most useful purpose is served in another way. The New England mail does not reach the New York connection until after the New York trains have left, and therefore unless it makes this aeroplane connection it does not get into Washington until a day late. The Postmaster General, in his anual report, explains the real reason, the real justification for the Washington-New York route, in this language:

The air distance on the New York-Washington route is 218 miles and the time of transit 2½ to 3 hours. The rail distance is 226 miles and the time of transit 5 hours to 6 hours and 20 minutes. On this route mail originating in New York City late at night and in the New England States up to 10 o'clock at night is delivered by planes in the city of Washington in ample time for all carrier deliveries that afternoon. The immediate result of this service has been the elimination of the constant complaints that it took two days for the night mail from Boston to be delivered in the city of Washington. These delays were beyond the control of the Post Office Department, having been due to uncertain train connections and to the transfer of the mail across New York City from one railroad station to another. Northbound the mail is taken from southern train connections at Washington and delivered in New York in time for the afternoon carriers. If this mail had remained on the trains, it would have reached New York City too late for carrier delivery on that day.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Does the gentleman know what time is required to take this mail from the post office over to the aerial stations at New York and also to take it from the landing place here to the post office?

Mr. BLACK. We had testimony on that matter in the hearings. I think it was about 30 minutes that it took to transport the mail from the city post office to points of flying by the department automobiles—a very short time. For instance, Belmont Field is the landing place at New York City, and it is only 15 miles from the city post office, and the waiting Government automobile can carry the mail to the post office in a very short while.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Oh, that is just the time that the automobile takes, but that does not include all of the time. If anyone will try to put a letter in the New York post office and arrange in some way if he can to get it by air mail here, he will find out about how much this service amounts to.

Mr. BLACK. Has the gentleman tried it, and is he in a position to give any expert testimony upon that topic?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I have not tried it myself, but I have been reliably informed by men who have tried it that there is nothing accomplished by aerial mail, and that was at the time when they used special stamps.

Mr. BLACK. We had a gentleman before the committee, and he did make some statements as to tests that he had made, but an investigation of the circumstances showed that he simply placed letters in the New York City post office on the night before and designated them to go by aeroplane. The truth of the matter is that the department sometime ago abandoned the regulation that will enable the patron to assure the delivery of his letter by aeroplane, because a system of that kind was found to be impracticable, and the department now uses its discretion to dispatch the mail that is deposited in the office in the most expeditious manner, whether by aeroplane or otherwise. So that a patron, when he deposits his letter in the New York City post office on the night before, has no assurance that it will go out by aeroplane. The information furnished our committee by the Post Office Department is that if you deposit a letter in the New York City post office at the heaviest hour of mailing, which is around 6 p. m., it will perhaps reach Washington sooner by train than it would by aeroplane, because of the service of the night trains which go out of New York City. But perhaps the most valuable purpose for the aeroplane service from New York to Washington is that it enables the New England mail to make connections in the city of New York for Washington that it could not possibly make by train. This is a very substantial and important reason and has greatly improved the mail service to the New England States.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK. Yes.

Mr. STEENERSON. The testimony of Mr. Ryan, the president of the Railway Mail Association, was that these experiments were made before the special aeroplane postage was abolished, and I know that to be the fact, because he brought them in to me long before that action was taken by the department. They had a particular box. Here is an expert on mail matters who said that he mailed them in the special box for aeroplane mail and that they went by aeroplane.

Mr. BLACK. Oh, no; I do not think the gentleman's recollection of Mr. Ryan's statement is correct. He said that he did not know whether they went by aeroplane or not. That he mailed the letters at the particular time he mentioned, and intended that they should go by aeroplane.

Mr. STEENERSON. That was before the abolition of the special postage.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK. Yes.

Mr. MONTAGUE. What is the cost of the mail service by aeroplane from Washington to New York, roughly?

Mr. BLACK. I think those figures are given in the report of the Postmaster General.

Mr. ROUSE. It is about $120,000.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The bill carries $850,000. What amount is carried for the New York-Washington service?

Mr. BLACK. The total appropriation is $850,000, and that pays the expenses of the New York-Washington route and also the expenses of the route from New York to Cleveland, Ohio, and from Cleveland, Ohio, to Chicago.

Mr. MONTAGUE. That includes all of the service of this character?

Mr. BLACK. Yes; at the present time; and the Second Assistant Postmaster General has stated to the committee that he would not be able to extend the service by the addition of any new routes with only the appropriation of $850,000.

Mr. MONTAGUE. How many routes is the department now experimenting with by this process?

Mr. BLACK. The ones I mentioned—New York to Washington, and New York to Cleveland, and Cleveland to Chicago. I wish that I had time to discuss the new routes projected, especially the one to the Pacific coast, but I see that I will not have the time.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has again expired.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I wish the gentleman's time was not up, as I want to know how many are contemplated.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, ordinarily I am not a champion and defender of the Postmaster General or of many of the doings of the Post Office Department. In this matter of carrying mail by airplane, however, I agree with him, at least as to his request for an additional appropriation. I think we shall make a great mistake if at this early stage in the development of aerial mail service we turn our backs upon it and discontinue it. I do not believe that we should be so exacting as to require at this stage of development that it shall be more economical than any other method of carrying the mail. If we do this and refuse to experiment, we practically shut ourselves out from the future development of this great invention for commercial purposes. [Applause.]

Mr. DOWELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TILSON. I am not thoroughly informed as to the figures given by the Postmaster General. They certainly make a good showing on their face, and nobody has produced figures to contradict them. Whether they are accurate or not, in my opinion we ought not at this time to discontinue this service, throw the whole scheme overboard, go back to the old methods exclusively, and shut ourselves out from the benefits of what may take place in the future development of this great invention. Now I yield.

Mr. DOWELL. According to the statement of the gentleman from Illinois, the airplanes are able to carry the mail from New York to Chicago at a gain of about nine hours to catch the trains. Is there any reason why there would not be a corresponding gain if extended from there to the coast? [Applause.]

Mr. TILSON. There would be even greater gain in time in proportion to the increase in distance. The trouble is that if we stop where we are, as the gentleman from Illinois would have us do, we shall have only two routes, one from New York to Washington, the other from New York to Chicago, which are not sufficient in extent to give a thorough test. Please observe that the gentleman from Illinois lives in Chicago and that he is the one to speak of a pork barrel. We are now giving this improved service to Chicago in addition to the best service that can be given otherwise.

Mr. MADDEN. If the gentleman will allow me, the gentleman wants to state what I said. I did not say this mail went to Chicago. I said it went there for the purpose of making western connections. That is what it goes there for, not for the purpose of Chicago at all.

Mr. TILSON. It goes to Chicago, at any rate.

Mr. MADDEN. What difference does that make?

Mr. TILSON. I call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that it is all mail that goes to the western people, and that it arrives in Chicago nine hours earlier than it would arrive by train. He has admitted this, so that upon the statement of the gentleman from Chicago alone, if it accomplishes only what the gentleman states, I submit that it ought to be continued and extended.

Mr. CRAMTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TILSON. I will.

Mr. CRAMTON. The gentleman lives in Connecticut and he has stated that the purpose of the New York to Washington service is for the benefit of New England. Has the gentleman any personal experience as to the expedition of mail delivered from Connecticut to Washington since the airplane service has been in operation?

Mr. TILSON. I have never made any experiments to show what the gain in time is by reason of the airplane service. About two years ago I recall distinctly that the service from New England to Washington was simply abominable. We could not as a rule get a letter here under 36 hours from any point in New England. I made a number of tests with this as a result. I complained to the Post Office Department and took the matter up with inspectors. Within the last year I have observed, and have so stated, that the service has been considerably better. I do not attribute it to the aerial service, for I have not the data to prove it, but I do know that the facts are as I now state them to be.

Mr. HUSTED. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TILSON. I will.

Mr. HUSTED. Does the gentleman contend this service should be extended irrespective of the question of expense?

Mr. TILSON. Not entirely so, but as an experimental matter it should be gradually extended. I think the showing has been good during the last year, and I think it justifies a gradual increase.

Mr. HUSTED. Well, the practicability of the service is the basis of its desirability?

Mr. TILSON. Certainly. That is all that is desired to be demonstrated.

Mr. HUSTED. If it is going to be so expensive that it is not practical, we certainly do not want it.

Mr. TILSON. It has not proved so thus far.

Mr. HUSTED. Can the gentleman give us an idea of the relative cost of the transportation of a letter from Washington to New York by airplane?

Mr. TILSON. No; I can not; and, more than that, I do not believe that anyone can do so at this time. That is one of the very reasons why we should continue it as an experiment further, because, regardless of what the Postmaster General says, I regard aerial mail service in many respects as still in the experimental stage. We should thoroughly test the matter to an extent and on a scale that will give such information as my friend from New York desires.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, in view of what the gentleman from Illinois had to say, I want to say at the outset that what I shall say on this particular subject is absolutely from an impersonal standpoint. The Post Office Department, so far as I know, has not at the present time any idea, if this appropriation is increased or if the $3,000,000 had been granted, of extending this service to any section of the State in which I live. The Postmaster General, in the letter which was referred to by the gentleman from Missouri and which was inserted in the Senate proceedings of January 6, has made a very clear and full statement as to the operation of this service during the past 19 months, and if gentlemen will read that statement it seems to me that there would be no objection made to a further extension of this service. This service, I will say to the gentleman from Michigan, has, in a certain sense, advanced beyond the experimental stage. It has advanced far enough for one to be able to judge as to its value and the advisability of its extension. Now, there are three routes, as has been stated, already in existence, Washington to New York, from New York to Cleveland, and from Cleveland to Chicago. This letter of the Postmaster General shows that these routes are paying for themselves in the way of revenue and saving in the distribution of mail, and there has been, as stated, 22,000,000 letters handled in the last 19 months. Now, it is not to be expected while this service was in the experimental stage that it could have been operated as economically as it will be as it develops. The Postmaster General states that he has this object in view. He proposes, if the money is given him to establish four additional routes, one from Chicago throughout the West to San Francisco, another from the Twin Cities in Minnesota to St. Louis, another from Pittsburgh to Indianapolis, Cincinnati, St. Louis, and Kansas City, and another, if I remember correctly, from New York to Atlanta. Such a service will save from 9 to 48 hours in the delivery of mail to these points, and will be in line with the progressive sentiment of our country, affording the very best opportunity for the commercial development of the air service. And I have no doubt but that the larger experience will result in its ultimate extension to all parts of the country, with little or no additional expense.

I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. CRAMTON. The gentleman, I think, perhaps did not mean to quite make the statement I understood. Does the gentleman mean to state that on any existing route the service results in a saving sufficient to make up for the cost of the service?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I will read to the gentleman the statement made by the Postmaster General on that very point.

Mr. CRAMTON. The figures that Mr. Praeger gives in the hearings——

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. On pages 1084–1089 of the RECORD of January 6 is the letter to which I referred a moment ago, and in which the Postmaster General shows that its operating cost to date, including overhead and interest on investment for three routes, amounts to something over $397,000.

Mr. MADDEN. On what date was that?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. On January 6.

Mr. MADDEN. Of this year?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. And he has had a million. What has become of the rest?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. He had $850,000, and part of that money, as I understand it, was used in the purchase of aeroplanes, necessary accessories and equipment, and the purchase of landing fields.

Mr. CRAMTON. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Let me read this for the benefit of the gentleman. The Postmaster General states:

> The revenue and savings from the air mail operations have been $194,831.50 from the sale of extra-rate airplane postage—$2,448 in car space from May 15, 1918, to June 30, 1919. The saving on train distribution from July 1 to December 31, 1919, was at the rate of $176,000 per year, and since January 1, 1920, by the use of large weight-carrying planes, the saving is at the rate of $593,000 per year.

That is on the three routes.

Mr. CRAMTON. May I quote this statement very briefly, made by Mr. Praeger in the hearings:

> To extend the New York-Washington route from Washington to Atlanta at a cash-operating cost of $461,929. The saving on that would be $248,921.

Leaving a net loss of something over $200,000 as a cost of the experiment.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. That is devoted to one particular item. I have read the gentlemen the statement which was made over the signature of the Postmaster General as to the saving by reason of this service on the three routes now in operation.

Now, to go further, if the Congress wishes to extend this service in the interest of the quick transmission of the mails, and also in the interest of developing the air service commercially, it seems to me that we not only ought to appropriate the $850,500 provided in this bill but that the entire estimate of the Postmaster General should have been allowed.

Gentlemen have said that this will result in a "pork-barrel" bill. I submit, gentlemen, if there is one official in the administration of our Government who has shown economy, if there is one official who has attempted to save the money of the people while attempting to render service to the people, it has been the Postmaster General. And I do not believe if we were to appropriate a sum greater than $3,000,000 for the development of this service, the Postmaster General would put it in or would establish a single route unless he was first assured that there would be proper returns to the Government for that service.

Now, what does this bill of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEENERSON] carry in the way of appropriations? It carries $25,000,000 more than the appropriations for the current year. It carries over $70,000,000 more than the Postmaster General asked for the expenses of the next fiscal year. It is true the gentleman from Minnesota has stated that the $70,000,000 represents an increase of salaries for Post Office employees, and I am not quarreling with the gentleman about that; but I do say, if we can increase the estimates for the next fiscal year by over $70,000,000 for the benefit of salaries in the Postal Service, certainly we can afford to spend $3,000,000 for the benefit of the people in order to insure the proper and quick dispatch of the mails of this country. [Applause.] It seems to me that, in the face of this showing made by the Postmaster General, it is very poor economy for us and shows a very poor conception of the demands of progress when we cut down the estimates which he has submitted in order to develop this particular service.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have unanimous consent that debate on this paragraph close in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. This is all proceeding by unanimous consent, the point of order having been reserved.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, I desire some time.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I desire five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman desires to ask unanimous consent, the discussion may proceed for——

Mr. STEENERSON. I do not wish to shut anybody off. I understood the Chair to say that the debate was proceeding by unanimous consent, and I stated that I did not feel like objecting as yet, but I soon will.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] reserved a point of order on the paragraph, and of course no amendment is in order or other disposition of the language until some action is taken, either by making the point of order or withdrawing it.

Mr. ROUSE. I suggest that the gentleman from Wyoming state his point of order and have it decided.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I thought I was recognized.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has recognized the gentleman from Wyoming.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I will modify my point of order and withhold the point of order as to lines 21 to 25, providing that out of the appropriation made for inland transportation the Postmaster General may expend not to exceed $850,500 for the purchase of aeroplanes and the operation and maintenance of aeroplane mail service between such points, including service to and between points in Alaska, as he may determine.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RAMSEYER. I am making the point of order that inasmuch as the gentleman reserved the point of order on the entire paragraph he can not now amend that reservation, but the point of order is pending on the entire paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order. The gentleman has not withdrawn his reservation.

Mr. RAMSEYER. He has modified his reservation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not so understand it.

Mr. RAMSEYER. That is what he stated.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the gentleman is stating something which he intended to do.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. DYER. I desire to ask the Chair whether, if the gentleman withdraws his point of order or modifies it, it will then be the time to make a point of order on the entire paragraph?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state it would be.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, when I first came to Congress provision was carried in the Post Office bill for the expedition of mails to certain points in the far West, South, and Southwest.

Those appropriations did really expedite the mail. There is no question about that. They did give a very considerable number of people their mail more quickly and expeditiously and satisfactorily than they would otherwise have received it. There is no doubt about that. But that expedition of mail to the South and Southwest became one of the scandals of Congress, and the House finally determined that it was not justified in going to the enormous additional expense entailed in those routes for the purpose of expediting mail to a certain few and privileged folks living somewhere within the confines of the Union.

Now, we have a proposition which simply alleges expedition of the mail, but as a matter of fact does not expedite the mail.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MONDELL. So far as the route between Washington and New York is concerned, and even as to the route between New York and Chicago, it is very doubtful whether any considerable portion of the mail is really expedited.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I yield.

Mr. DOWELL. Does the gentleman take issue with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] when he says that the mail is carried nine hours faster from New York to Chicago?

Mr. MONDELL. I think it is doubtful. The gentleman thinks and believes that certain mail is expedited. Possibly at times it may be. I will not contradict the gentleman's statement, but I think the expedition is doubtful. And what does it expedite? Three or four hundred pounds of mail—a mere handful—out of tons of first-class mail.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a single question?

Mr. MONDELL. A few individuals here and there—some favored person here and there—secure a letter a few hours earlier than they otherwise would, at a cost of from 25 to 50 times what it costs to send it by train, if there is any expedition at all. Now I yield to the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. TILSON. Does not the gentleman realize that the further these aerial mail routes are extended the more time will be gained? While not a great deal of time is saved between New York and Washington, it is because the distance is so short; but if you take it halfway across the continent there will be nearly a whole day saved.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask for one minute more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wyoming?

There was no objection.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, there is no man living who is capable of sound thinking that does not know that this Government can not afford—no people on earth can afford—to carry all first-class mail by airplane. Why, it would cost twice or three times the present total of the appropriations in this bill to do it. Yet gentlemen insist that their particular favored locality shall have this special expedition of a little handful of mail at the expense of all the people.

Why, talk about pork-barrel appropriations! There is nothing that has been before Congress that is quite as clear and definite a piece of pork-barrel legislation as this proposition to expedite the mail by airplane here, there, and elsewhere. It is no wonder that boards of trade and chambers of commerce favor this for the purpose of advertising their villages, large and small, important and unimportant, and send telegrams and letters to their Members to get behind this pork-barrel proposition to increase this service—not to give the people generally better mail service but to advertise their towns.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of experimenting in the carrying of mail by airplanes, not because we do to any considerable extent expedite the mail anywhere, but because I think we can perhaps afford to spend a little money in the interest of the science of aeronautics in connection with the dispatch of the mail. We are doing that to the extent of nearly a million dollars. Yet now, while we are trying to cut off all extraordinary expenditures and set our faces like flint against all new and unnecessary enterprises in the interest of the Public Treasury, gentlemen are proposing enlargement of this class of a service that is of no considerable practical value anywhere to anybody except as it may advertise a city and the department, and except as it may have some little value—doubtful value, in my opinion—in developing the science of aeronautics. It costs 6 cents per ton-mile to carry mail by train. It costs $5.25, according to the Post Office Department—and you may be assured that that is not too large—to carry the mail by airplane.

Mr. MADDEN. That is $5.25.

Mr. MONDELL. Yes; $5.25 per ton-mile by airplane, as against an average of 6 cents per ton-mile by train; and yet at a time when we are trying to economize, at a time when we are trying to keep within our present expenditures, gentlemen, urged by boards of trade and chambers of commerce and ambitious towns and cities, want to have this item increased.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Now, I am perfectly willing to withdraw the point of order if it can be understood that the Post Office Committee and all members of it are willing to stand by their bill as against any increase.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. But unless I have that assurance I am disposed to make the point of order.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Does the gentleman refer to the Post Office Committee or to the Committee of the Whole?

Mr. MONDELL. I refer to the Post Office Committee.

Mr. RAMSEYER. The Post Office Committee reported this bill out.

Mr. MONDELL. If the Post Office Committee is against any increase, I think that the Committee of the Whole will go with them; and unless it can be understood and agreed that the Post Office Committee is going to stand squarely and honestly by its effort to economize and oppose increases, I shall make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired.

Mr. DOWELL, Mr. DYER, and Mr. QUIN rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa is recognized.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, I want just a few moments, if I can have it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has been recognized. He can go on.

Mr. DOWELL. I recognize that. If the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL], who has just left the floor, had been here when we were carrying the mail by stage or by a mule team he would have opposed putting it upon the railroads. [Applause.] His argument is the best evidence I have heard that he is not in favor of any progress or anything that will get to the people of the country the quickest mail service possible.

Now, I want to say further that if his argument had prevailed years ago, out in the country where he now resides, they would be still carrying the mail in the same way that they were carrying it half a century ago.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOWELL. And the train service would not have run that far in the West.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Did we transfer from the stagecoach to the train when it cost twenty times as much on the train? Or have we made any transfer when the cost of the change was ten or twenty times as much?

Mr. DOWELL. But the gentleman will remember that the aerial mail service is very new. It is yet in the experimental stage. Yet the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] has produced the best evidence to the committee that can be produced that it will be efficient in the future, when they can now gain nine hours of time on the mail from New York to Chicago. What time are they to gain in the future in traveling across the continent?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOWELL. The gentleman has made an argument that the air service saves nine hours between New York and Chicago, and if we can convince everyone that this transportation will take a letter nine hours sooner to Chicago, he is estopped from arguing that it is not good between New York and San Francisco.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOWELL. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. I want to know if the gentleman would help us to let the people of the country know that our good Republicans on that side of the House have that kind of a nonprogressive man as their leader. [Laughter.]

Mr. DOWELL. I will let him answer that, but I do think his argument is not taking into consideration the real spirit of progress in the transportation of the mail. The people of this country desire expeditious service, the best service obtainable, and while it may cost a little more in the experimental stage, I want to say that if the gentleman from Wyoming lives and is in Congress 25 years from now, and he reads the argument that he made to-day, he will wonder what he was thinking of when he made it.

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOWELL. Yes.

Mr. DYER. The gentleman knows, and all the Members of the House know, that the Postal Service is now self-supporting and has turned a balance into the Treasury.

Mr. DOWELL. Yes; I never heard anyone say that the Post Office Department had squandered the money appropriated. I think the Post Office Department is trying to get every dollar of service that can be got out of the money appropriated. [Applause.] I believe that we ought to give it an opportunity not only to experiment, but I believe it can make the mail service efficient and productive, and I hope the argument made by the gentleman from Illinois, who is willing that the mail shall be sent from New York to Chicago but no farther—that the same argument will prove true between Chicago, St. Louis, and San Francisco, and the other central parts of this great country.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOWELL. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. I do not care whether they send it from New York to Chicago by aeroplane or not.

Mr. DOWELL. Whatever may be the desire of the gentleman from Illinois, he says that they save nine hours between New York and Chicago, and that shows that they would eventually save many hours between New York and San Francisco. That is what the people want—expedition and efficient service. [Applause.]

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Chairman, as far as I am concerned, I believe that the Postmaster General and the Post Office Department have run that department more economically and on a more businesslike basis than any other department is run by this Government. [Applause.] But I do not favor this fad of taking a shirt tail full of mail in an aeroplane that costs twenty times more than it would to transport tons of mail by railroad, steamboat, or otherwise. We have heard some talk on this floor about economy. I can not understand how men in private conversation, and in letters, in newspaper interviews, and in private speech, will talk economy and then come on the floor and favor every kind of a scheme that grabs down into the Treasury to take the money out of it which the taxpayers have put there.

I have no patience with this foolish talk about experimenting up in frozen Alaska, where nothing but dogs can stand the climate, where a fellow has to be wrapped up in a fur coat, with boots lined with fur, with a fur cap and fur eyelashes, to keep him from freezing to death, and yet this nonsense about sending aeroplanes up there to carry the mail; appropriating $850,000 for the experiment.

What I would like to see is for the Post Office Department to extend this splendid rural free delivery. Let us get this rural mail out to people who are not now receiving it. I will vote to put $850,000 to experiment further in carrying the rural mail out into the woods, so that the farmers can get their mail. Talk about some man not being satisfied with getting his mail where the trains run across the country at 50 and 75 miles an hour, when the man that lives out on Hominy Creek gets a paper three days old. Let us expend the money where it will do some good, where the great mass of the population of the country, the backbone of the country, live. The farmers only ask the Government to give them simple justice instead of wasting the money on this aeroplane business.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. QUIN. No; I haven't the time. I believe that the people of this country want us to do the sensible thing, and I hope that the gentleman from Wyoming will hold his point of order against this business. If you are going to vote for every chimerical scheme in every department like you propose here, stop and think of the $6,000,000,000 that we are advised Congress is called upon to appropriate. Where are you going to get all the money? Many people say let us reduce taxation. Are you going to decrease the taxes by this sort of business? If you follow this policy on this bill, you will have to on the Navy bill and the Army bill, and there will be increases everywhere. [Applause.]

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I ask for the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is demanded. Does the gentleman from Wyoming make the point of order?

Mr. STEENERSON. I would like to say that there is a proposition for withdrawing the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order has been demanded, and the Chair will request the gentleman from Wyoming to make the point of order or withdraw his reservation.

Mr. MONDELL. Why, Mr. Chairman, I stated that if the committee and all members of the committee would agree to oppose any increase of this item I would not make the point of order.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The gentleman from Wyoming refers to the committee; does he refer to the Post Office Committee or the members of the Committee of the Whole. I will say to the gentleman that I never in my experience knew a Member to hold up the entire membership of the House.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, I want to be heard against the point of order.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the entire paragraph.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I should like to be heard against the point of order.

Mr. STEENERSON. I should like to be heard against the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEENERSON], chairman of the committee, to discuss the point of order.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. To which point of order is the gentleman addressing himself? There have been two made.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not know until the gentleman states.

Mr. STEENERSON. Both of them. I will say that the first part of the paragraph is not subject to a point of order at all, but the point of order is good as against the whole paragraph, because the last proviso might be subject to the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. In order to save time the Chair will overrule the point of order to the language included in lines 15 and 16 down to and including the figures "$60,000,000," because that was made in order by the special rule.

Mr. STEENERSON. The Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads recommended this appropriation of $850,500 under this provision, which is exactly the same as was carried in last year's bill, and the reason why we contend that this is in order is that the service is authorized by law. Perhaps some of you will recollect that last spring, when the question of the right of the Postmaster General to send letters by airplane without any distinctive airplane stamp was raised, I addressed a resolution to him asking by what authority he carried these letters by airplane. He replied:

Second. The authority that exists for "transporting or attempting to transport mail by aeroplane without aeroplane stamps affixed" is given by the various appropriation bills for conveying mail by aeroplane and in the act of Congress of May 10, 1918, chapter 71, which provides: "That the Postmaster General, in his discretion, may require the payment of postage on mail carried by aeroplane at not exceeding 24 cents per ounce or fraction thereof." Under the authority of this statute the department promulgated a regulation which insured the carrying by aeroplane of certain mail intended for the post offices under certain conditions—namely, that it shall be first-class mail; that it shall be prepaid at the rate of 6 cents per ounce or fraction thereof; that it shall include sealed parcels not exceeding 30 inches in length and girth combined; and that the postage be prepaid with special aeroplane postage stamps or with ordinary postage stamps when such mail is indorsed "By aeroplane."

This regulation is designed to insure to senders transportation by the expeditious Air Service of their mail so prepared, with the special amount of postage. The dispatch of such mail by the aeroplane is assured. It developed that more load could be carried by the aeroplane than that offered of the specific aeroplane mail designated by special postage. It is necessary, from an operating standpoint, for the plane to carry a certain ballasting weight, and if no other load were available it would be advisable to fill out with ballast. This being the case, the specially paid aeroplane mail is supplemented sufficiently to make a reasonable load with mail on which the ordinary rate of postage was paid.

Then he goes on in another paragraph——

Mr. DYER. If the gentleman will yield, I will ask unanimous consent to withdraw the point of order which I made.

Mr. STEENERSON. I should like to finish my argument in spite of that.

The CHAIRMAN. It does not require unanimous consent to withdraw the gentleman's point of order.

Mr. DYER. If the gentleman will yield to me for that purpose, I will withdraw that.

The CHAIRMAN. That was overruled.

Mr. DYER. The point of order which the Chair overruled was to the last part of the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. To the first part.

Mr. STEENERSON. The Postmaster General's letter says further—

It always has been the practice, and has always been considered the duty, of the department to dispatch the mails as far as practicable by the most expeditious route, and in so expediting the mails the department is acting in accordance with section 3965 of the Revised Statutes, which provides that "the Postmaster General shall provide for carrying the mail on all post roads established by law, as often as he, having due regard to productiveness and other circumstances, may think proper."

Here is the law. The general law provides that the Postmaster General shall transport the mail by the most expeditious route. It is contended here that the aeroplane route is the most expeditious. It is further contended that Congress in 1919 passed an act authorizing the Postmaster General to prescribe airplane postage at not exceeding 24 cents an ounce, and he, acting under that authority, issued his orders prescribing first 12 cents, then 10 cents, then 6 cents, and finally 2 cents. That is what we are acting under now, and the fact that Congress saw fit to enact a law that authorized the Postmaster General to prescribe the rate of postage for aeroplanes certainly implies the necessary authority. Therefore this proviso, we contend, is not subject to the point of order.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I think all will admit that this bill can not carry an appropriation for the carriage of the mails except in a manner provided for by law. The Post Office Committee has authority only to appropriate for the carriage of the mail as provided by statute, and there is no statutory provision for the carrying of the mail by airplane. The chairman of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads curiously confuses effect with cause. He says because a provision was made for certain postage rates when mail was carried by aeroplane, therefore and thereby Congress authorized the carrying of mail in that way. Quite the contrary. The Congress did provide in this paragraph temporarily for the carrying of the mail by airplanes, and that having been done, it became necessary, of course, to make some provision, either by law or by regulation, whereby postage could be collected on mail so carried.

That legislation was not intended to authorize the carrying of mail by airplane. It did not authorize it. It simply provided that when it was carried under this temporary provision certain stamps might be used and certain charges made. There is no warrant of law for the carrying of mail in this way. The Congress has seen fit to allow a certain part of the appropriation to be used in that way, but it has made no provision whatever for the carrying of the mail in that way as a statutory provision, and therefore this language, which in the absence of a point of order simply authorizes the use of an appropriation for a certain purpose, is good law so long as it is not objected to and is approved by the Congress, but it falls immediately upon the point of order being made.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LONGWORTH. What portion of the paragraph did the Chair rule in order under the special rule?

The CHAIRMAN. The first two lines down to and including the figures "$60,000,000."

Mr. GARD. A further parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman. What was the point of order made by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. TINCHER]?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman did not particularly state the point of order, but the Chair understood——

Mr. LONGWORTH. Did I understand the Chair correctly to say that he had ruled the first two lines in order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would state that the point of order was made to the entire paragraph, and another point of order was made to that paragraph beginning in line 16 with the word "Provided."

Mr. MONDELL. Oh, no, Mr. Chairman; the point of order began with the words "Provided further" in line 20.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood that the point of order was made to all that portion of the paragraph after the word "Provided" in line 16.

Mr. STEENERSON. No.

Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Chairman, the point of order that I made was to the language following the words "Provided further" in line 20. Then the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DYER] made the point of order to the entire paragraph immediately after I made that point of order.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Under these circumstances, Mr. Chairman, what portion of the paragraph does the Chair decide now to be in order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair holds everything down to the second proviso as being in order.

Mr. LONGWORTH. That is lines 15 to 20, inclusive?

The CHAIRMAN. And the Chair is now hearing the point of order on the language contained in the second proviso.

Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Chairman, I do not think I can add anything to the presentation of this point of order by the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL]. I am surprised that the committee is contending that that proviso is in order. I anticipate that when the bill was prepared, because of the language used in the proviso, they did not consider it in order, because certainly if the Postmaster General needs authorization by this paragraph to expend this money, then the proviso is not in order. There certainly must be authority of law for the expenditure other than this appropriation bill. I do not think that the committee seriously thinks this proviso is in order. I think the point of order should be sustained.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, this is simply a limitation upon the appropriation of $60,000,000 for the Railway Mail Service. It authorizes $850,000 of that money to be appropriated for purposes of aeroplane service. It is exactly the same as it was last year, and the committee then believed that it was in order, and no one, as I now recall, raised any point of order. Because of the authority of the Postmaster General to prescribe air-mail postage and to transport the mail by the most expeditious route, it is clearly in the regular course of his duty to do this as is authorized by law. The committee believed and the chairman of the Post Office Committee believed that it was in order, otherwise he would have called on the Committee on Rules to make it in order, because it was agreed to by the Post Office Committee that $850,000 should be appropriated for the continuation of this service.

Mr. MONDELL. Oh, Mr. Chairman, I had some discussion with the chairman of the committee about that very matter. I suggested to the chairman that I certainly would oppose a rule making that in order because I wanted it to remain subject to the point of order in order to prevent its being increased.

Mr. STEENERSON. That is probably the reason why I did not ask for a rule on that point. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I want to suggest that if the argument of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEENERSON] is correct, and there is existing law as a basis for the proviso, then the proviso is entirely unnecessary, and even if stricken out the Post Office Department with its $60,000,000 could use any portion of it for the purchase of aeroplanes and for their operation, but the fact is that there is no legislation authorizing the expenditure for aeroplanes and that is the reason they want the proviso. The fact that there is no such legislation makes the proviso out of order.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Chairman, I believe that the provision is in order for this reason, that at the present time all mail which is handled by the United States Government is a public proposition. There is a law on the statute books, that Mr. STEENERSON has referred to, which provides that the Postmaster General in his discretion may require the payment of postage on mail carried by aeroplane and then prescribing the rate. I maintain it would be a physical impossibility at the present time to have that provision put into effect unless the Government also maintained aeroplanes for that service. If there is a law on the statute books, and there is, prescribing the amount of pay for the service, it must be clearly in order to provide money for the purchase of those planes by which mail is to be carried. I maintain that the provision is in order and not subject to the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is made to the language beginning "Provided further" in line 20 down to and including the word "determine" in line 25, on page 14. The Chair finds upon examination of the previous acts that in 1917 the Postmaster General was authorized to expend not exceeding $100,000 for the purchase, operation, and maintenance of aeroplanes, for experimental aeroplane mail service between such points as he may determine; and furthermore, in the act of May 10, 1918, the Postmaster General in his discretion was authorized to require the payment of postage on mail carried by aeroplane at not exceeding 24 cents per ounce or fraction thereof. The fact that the establishment of this particular class of service was provided for in an appropriation bill and may have been continued in another appropriation bill the succeeding year, would not, in the opinion of the Chair, be sufficient justification for the claim that it would not be subject to a point of order, if the point of order be made. In the view of the Chair, the Post Office Department is not authorized by any existing law to establish as a permanent class of service the carriage of mail by aeroplane. The section to which the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEENERSON] referred, section 3965 of the Revised Statutes, provides for the carrying of mail on all post roads, but that would not apply to the carrying of mail through the air.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, I call the attention of the Chair to the fact that the definition of "post roads" includes every road where the mail has been or may be carried, and the route between here and New York is a post road, within the meaning of the statute. The statute is broad enough to cover a road in the air. It may all be in the air, but it is a road.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is inclined to believe that the provision of this statute, enacted some 40 or 50 years ago, could hardly have been intended to comprehend the carriage of mail by air route, neither does the Chair believe that this appropriation can be justified on the ground that it is a continuation of a public work or a service heretofore authorized by law, and the Chair therefore sustains the point of order.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I do that for the purpose, if I may, of referring to the cost of railroad mail transportation. It is really perhaps not necessary now, but I think it might be enlightening to those present, because I was not able under discussion of the point of order to call the attention of the committee to the facts I now propose to relate. The section of this bill now under consideration and just passed carries $60,000,000 for railway mail pay. That is on the basis of 6 cents a ton-mile, substantially. The Post Office Department reports that the present cost of transportation by airplane is $5.25 a ton-mile.

Mr. STEENERSON. In 1918?

Mr. MADDEN. I do not want to yield until I make this statement. That is 90 times the cost of moving by rail, so that if it cost $60,000,000 to move the mail by rail on the basis of 6 cents a ton-mile it would cost $5,400,000,000 to move the mail by airplane. Now, the question is, Are we justified in making the change? The Post Office Department says that if we can carry 500 pounds of mail on an airplane the cost would be reduced to $2.40 a ton-mile. That would be 40 times what it costs now, or $2,400,000,000 per annum. They say that if we could build a plane to carry 500 pounds of mail they could reduce the cost to $1.25 a ton-mile. Even then—and that is conceded to be the minimum—it would be 20 times what it costs now, or $1,200,000,000 a year for the transportation of the mail. The total appropriation carried in this bill for all purposes is $461,000,000. That includes the payment of compensation to 300,000 men and women in the service. And do you want to add, at the very lowest, $1,200,000,000 for mail transportation or at the present rate of $5,400,000,000 for transportation by airplane?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. I do.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The gentleman does not mean to say, does he, that anybody in the Post Office Department has ever contemplated extending this air mail service to all the people or any points except those large cities where——

Mr. MADDEN. Then I maintain that if we do not contemplate the continuation of service to all the people we have no right to extend the service to a special class. [Applause.] That is democratic doctrine. I have heard the gentleman from Tennessee declaim that there shall be no special privileges granted—equality of opportunity for everyone and special privileges for none. Is not that Jeffersonian doctrine?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The point is it is not contemplated to extend this service to any point unless the Postmaster General feels and believes that it will pay for itself.

Mr. MADDEN. We do not want action based on feeling or belief, we want action based on facts. Now, we had quite an argument only two or three years ago as to the best method of transporting mail by rail, whether it should be transported and paid for by weight or by space, and I made quite an exhaustive study of the difference between the two methods, and I agreed with the Postmaster General that it would be much more economical to carry the mail by space, and to-day we are carrying it by space, though subject to revision by the Interstate Commerce Commission which is now investigating that question. It was said then by the Postmaster General that it would save the Government $10,000,000 a year, and that $10,000,000 a year was a fabulous sum of money to pay to a special class for a special service. Now, if $10,000,000 was so much then, how much more is $5,400,000,000 now? That is the question. Is there any stage in American development in the imagination of the wildest dreamer that should justify the change of expenditures from $60,000,000 a year to $5,400,000,000 for a fixed service?

Mr. RAMSEYER rose.

Mr. MADDEN. The answer to that statement, of course, as I know, is that we are not presumed to carry all the mail by air. The mail that is to be delivered to the ordinary man, the man who does nothing but create the wealth, the horny-handed son of toil, the man who works in the field and the mine and the factory, his mail is still to be continued to be sent by freight, and the mail of the plutocrat, the mail of the man who specially qualifies to receive favors at the hands of the Government, will be sent in a flying machine at one hundred times the present cost. I am in favor of expedition of the mail——

Mr. RAMSEYER. Does the plutocrat use any different stamp from that of the horny-handed son of toil?

Mr. MADDEN (continuing). By the quickest possible route. But I want the disposition of the mail and the cost of the transportation to have more regard for the already overloaded taxpayer of the country.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Missouri for a parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. STEENERSON. I do.

Mr. RUBEY. Has the point of order been passed upon?

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order was sustained.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, in regard to the record referred to by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS], I quoted from memory when I first discussed this subject to-day and I find it is absolutely correct. It says on page 1124 of the RECORD, January 6, in the letter from the Postmaster General:

> It is astounding how few people know that this epoch-making facility—the air mail—has been in daily operation for 19½ months, carrying to date more than 22,000,000 letters between Chicago, Cleveland, New York, and Washington, at better than twice the speed of the Congressional Limited or the Twentieth Century, and in this 19½ months the air mail has to its credit a performance of 91½ per cent.

Twenty-two million letters in 19 months. I figured that at that rate it will take 8 years to get one letter to each man, woman, and child in the United States by that means. Here is the testimony before the Post Office Committee regarding another mail facility which was not up in the air but under the ground. Mr. Murray testified as follows in regard to pneumatic-tube service. The chairman asked him:

> Do you know to what extent, how many million letters were expedited per day?
> Mr. MURRAY. Twenty-five million letters per day is the figure given by the Post Office Department of first-class mail matter handled through the pneumatic-tube service for city distribution and for railroad transportation.

All they paid for the tube service was $900,000 per year.

Why, in 19½ months they transported only 22,000,000 letters by aeroplane. In one day they transported 25,000,000 letters by a pneumatic tube and thereby expedited the delivery of those letters. Those tubes, by the order of the Postmaster General, were put out of use. It is a mail facility that was much desired in New York, as the gentleman from New York [Mr. DONOVAN] explained the other day, yet because of some unknown reason that facility was discarded. The reason given was that the tubes only carried first-class mail. Now they advocate air mail, which also carries only first-class mail, so the same reason they gave for discarding the tubes can be urged here.

Aeroplanes are too small as they are now built to permit of distribution en route. The great invention of modern times in the expedition of mail was the railway post-office car. There the mail is gathered in the cities and it is delivered to that mail car in a raw state, so to speak—with only the primary separation—and on the car the distribution goes on clear down to sorting the mail so as to have it ready for the carriers in the city of destination. That work is done while you and I sleep and while the railroad train is moving. They leave New York at half past 12 at night, and the mail is here in the morning at 6 o'clock. Now, if you deposit raw mail in the boxes in New York it is no use to put that on the aeroplane, because some of it is going to Boston and some of it to St. Paul, or some of it here and there all over the country. It has got to be "worked," as it is called, before you can put it on an aeroplane, because the aeroplane goes to distinctive points. Therefore you have got to separate the mail. You can not do it on the aeroplane. It has to be worked before it starts.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired. The time has expired. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. GARD. Reserving the right to object, is it the purpose of this striking out of words, which nobody pays any attention to in the debate, to consume the entire afternoon on this paragraph?

Mr. STEENERSON. I want just two minutes.

Mr. GARD. I do not object; but by moving to strike out one word or two words you take up an hour, while the paragraph has been disposed of largely by the point of order. If the purpose is to consume the entire afternoon I have no objection; but we might as well know it.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. STEENERSON. The Government had a special weighing of mail in 1917 by the order of the Interstate Commerce Commission, and the total tonnage was 826,000,000 ton-miles. According to the ordinary growth of the mail the volume to-day is substantially 1,000,000,000 ton-miles. So that when the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] stated that at 6 cents a ton by rail and $5.25 per ton-mile by aeroplane the cost would be, as stated, $60,000,000 by rail and $5,000,000,000 by air. Even at the lowest estimate of $1.25 it would amount to $1,250,000,000. So to claim that this is a money-saving proposition is absolutely misleading. It is an error.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, I demand the regular order.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] in his last remarks recalled to my mind a letter that was written by Benjamin Franklin way back in February of 1776 to Charles Lee, with reference to instruments of warfare and preparedness; and while it may not be exactly germane to this question, it completely fits the argument of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN], and I think it fits somewhat the argument of the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

I want to read briefly just a few lines from this letter of one of the great men of our country.

Mr. BEE. Will the gentleman yield for a second?

Mr. DOWELL. Certainly.

Mr. BEE. Will the gentleman also secure and insert the speeches made in the Senate of the United States protesting against opening up the great West on the ground that nobody but jack rabbits would live in that country?

Mr. DOWELL. I recall that Daniel Webster made one of his famous arguments along that line. But this is what Benjamin Franklin said in 1776. What will be said of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] in another century concerning the remarks he has made to-day on the air service?

I read from the letter written by Benjamin Franklin in 1776, as follows:

> But I still wish, with you, that pikes could be introduced, and I would add bows and arrows. These were good weapons not wisely laid aside.

Just think of Benjamin Franklin in the late war with his bows and arrows, which he says should not have been laid aside. He says further:

> (1) Because a man may shoot as truly with a bow as with a common musket.
> (2) He can discharge four arrows in the time of charging and discharging one bullet.
> (3) His object is not taken from his view by the smoke of his own side.
> (4) A flight of arrows, seen coming upon them, terrifies and disturbs the enemy's attention to their business.
> (5) An arrow striking in any part of a man puts him hors de combat till it is extracted.
> (6) Bows and arrows are more easily provided everywhere than muskets and ammunition.

And so forth.

I leave it to you, gentlemen, if this does not completely fit the argument of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] as to the air service? I am surprised to hear such an argument from the gentleman from Illinois when the development of the air service is just in its beginning. And I am hoping that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] and the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] will finally get a view of this subject which will be in accord with their views upon other great questions.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last three words.

The CHAIRMAN. That motion is not in order.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition.

Mr. KNUTSON. I would like to have the floor just two minutes.

Mr. STEENERSON. You can get the floor later on.

Mr. KNUTSON. I would like to speak now, because I expect to leave in a few minutes.

Mr. STEENERSON. The gentleman can speak later.

Mr. KNUTSON. I move to strike out the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DOWELL] has evidently been hearing from the Greater Des Moines Club. As to what his attitude will be when he hears from the farmers of his district, who are really in favor of economy, I am unable to say.

I do not know who has been rendered "hors de combat," as he calls it, or about anything else pertaining to pugilism [laughter]; but I do know this, that the gentleman will not be able to go out and face his constituents on the platform that he has enunciated here to-day, namely, that of squandering the people's money for a service that really does no one a great deal of good.

The gentleman seems to be a great deal concerned, Mr. Chairman, over the fact that the majority leader [Mr. MONDELL] would go back to the old stagecoach days. The gentleman from Iowa has gone the majority leader one better; he has gone back to the oxcart days by conjuring up the memory of that patron saint of thrift, Benjamin Franklin, as a justification of his desire to assist in the very worthy object of raiding the Public Treasury to the extent of several millions of dollars. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, has it come to the point that a single telegram is sufficient to make a Member of this House throw all money sense to the winds? I, for one, heartily concur with the doctrine of economy in the expenditures of public moneys enunciated by the majority leader [Mr. MONDELL]. Already this Congress has succeeded in saving millions of dollars to taxpayers of the country, and I, for one, propose to do what I can toward continuing the policy of economy now being carried out by the Republican majority. If the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DOWELL] thinks it the part of wisdom to train with those whose only care seems to be to spend, why, well and good. I can not follow him.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON].

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Page 14, line 16, strike out "$60,000,000" and insert "$59,500,000."

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, with reference to that I simply desire to say this: The item of $60,000,000, as reported, included $850,000 for the purchase of airplanes and their operation. We have now stricken out the authorization for the purchase of airplanes and their operation, and hence I have offered this amendment to reduce the total amount by $500,000, because certainly that much would be rendered unnecessary.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. I will yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. RAMSEYER. The gentleman makes the statement that the $500,000 is included in the $60,000,000. As the estimates were sent to the committee by the Post Office Department this $60,000,000 item was a separate item for inland transportation of mail, and they had another item in there of $3,000,000 for airplane transportation, so that the estimate of the department for $850,000 is not included in this.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLANTON. Would it be in order, Mr. Chairman, to move to take a recess for 30 minutes to give the Republican steering committee an opportunity to determine its attitude upon this important measure? [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas is out of order.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, in answer to the statement of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. RAMSEYER], I will say that he has referred to the estimates of the department. I am referring to the estimates recommended by the committee. It was the opinion of the committee that $60,000,000 would be sufficient, even using $850,000 of it for the purchase of airplanes and their operation. Having stricken out that authorization, we can easily reduce the $60,000,000 by $500,000.

Mr. STEENERSON and Mr. TILSON rose.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, I rose and desired to be recognized.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not understand the situation. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEENERSON], the chairman of the committee, will be recognized first.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, the estimates for $60,000,000 for the inland transportation of mail by railroad were submitted by the department without any consideration of the airplane service. The committee took that $850,000 out of the $60,000,000, but the fact that it has been stricken out here is no argument in favor of reducing the $60,000,000.

There was a large unexpended balance for railroad transportation last year, but the unprecedented increase in the volume of mail makes it advisable to leave the amount provided unchanged. Some of that increased volume of mail was paid for by the pound as well as by space, and the more volume you have the more space you will have to pay for. The increase in revenue over last year was 25 per cent, comparing the corresponding months of the two years. It was believed by the committee that we were justified in granting the full estimate of the Postmaster General of $60,000,000 for inland transportation of the mail alone, and for that reason I hope the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON] will not be adopted.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, there are two troubles, it seems to me, with the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON]. In the first place, he does not take into account the fact that if this mail is not handled by airplane it must be handled in some other way, and upon the showing of the Postmaster General it would appear that it would cost about as much to handle it in some other way as it would by airplane. Therefore that argument in favor of the amendment falls to the ground.

In the second place, it is not conceivable that this bill will go through both Houses and become a law without some provision in it for aerial mail service.

I am proud of my membership in this House, but I am ashamed of the action of the House to-day. [Applause.] As this bill will leave the House it will contain no appropriation whatever for aerial mail service. I feel like apologizing for the House for permitting itself to be placed in this ridiculous position. I am glad that it is not by a vote of the House, but that the provision has gone out on a technicality; that is, on a point of order. I am sure that there are few, if any, Members of this House who believe that this provision, or a similar one, will remain out of this bill. It will almost certainly be restored in the Senate, and will just as certainly be accepted by the House. When it is restored in the Senate, I hope it will be at a figure sufficiently large to provide for a reasonable extension of the aerial mail service during the next fiscal year.

Before taking my seat I wish to say further that the importance of this matter is not confined to carrying the mail, either now or in the future. If we encourage aerial navigation by carrying the mail in that way, it will not only encourage aeronautics in this country, but it will cause the building up of an aeronautical industry for the manufacture of airplanes, to be used commercially, for sport, and otherwise. Anyone can see the importance of such an industry as he looks forward and considers the question of the national defense. On the other hand, if we allow the aeronautic industry to perish in this country we shall again find ourselves in the same position that we were in at the outbreak of the war just closed, wherein we were reduced to the pitiable necessity of having to spend nearly a billion and a half dollars and get practically nothing for it, so far as use in the war was concerned. Such an outcome was the legitimate, possibly the inevitable, consequence of the situation in which the war found us in regard to aeronautics. I do not believe that we should permit ourselves to be found in that situation again, and the best way to prevent it is to encourage aeronautics for commercial purposes.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I agree entirely with the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON]. This is not a question alone of the cost of transportation of mail by airplane from one city to another. It involves the development of aeronautics in this country. I am entirely unable to follow the logic of my distinguished friend from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN]. In the first place, it has never been remotely suggested that all the mail should be carried by airplane. According to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. ROUSE], it was never contemplated even in the recommendation of the department that more than 5 per cent of it should be so carried. I think I am correct.

Mr. ROUSE. That is exactly the statement of the Second Assistant Postmaster General.

Mr. LONGWORTH. So I understand. Therefore that part of the argument of my friend from Illinois falls entirely to the ground.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MADDEN. Does the mere fact that an official of the Post Office Department states that only 5 per cent of the total is to be carried by airplane make it so conclusive that we must agree with him?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Not necessarily; but I say no suggestion has been made that more than 5 per cent of it should be carried in that way, except the suggestion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN], who intimates that it all should be carried in that way.

In the second place, the question of the cost to-day has very little to do with what the cost may be a year from now. I am as sincerely in favor of economy as any Member of this House. I intend to work with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] and the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] to bring about a saving, particularly on the estimates of the various departments, and I believe that by the time our appropriation bills have all passed this House we will show a saving of more than $1,000,000,000 from the estimates furnished by the departments.

But that is not the question presented here. I recall very well about the time I first came to Congress that it was impossible to get through this House any appropriation for the development of machines which were heavier than the air. I recall the strenuous objection made by certain alleged economists here to an appropriation of $15,000 to be expended by Prof. Langley in experimentation, and yet the $15,000 that Congress finally appropriated over the heads of the economists was responsible for the development of every heavier-than-air machine that now flies.

Gentlemen, could you capitalize the result of that appropriation of $15,000? Yet it was the basis of the Wright machine, which was the first machine that ever flew, here in Washington or anywhere else. What would be the cost of carrying mail by the first Wright machine? It might have been a million dollars a ton. If it has got down to $5 a ton, according to these estimates that we have here, does not that show that there is a chance that it will be cut down a great deal more? I am a believer in economy, but I think there is such a thing as false economy, and particularly may there be false economy in such matters as this, which are still in the experimental stage.

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Yes.

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. What is the primary purpose of this proposed appropriation—to develop aeronautics or to provide rapid transportation of the mails?

Mr. LONGWORTH. The primary purpose, of course, is the transportation of the mails; but I say, as the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON] said, that it involves far more than that. It is by commercial experimentation in aeronautics that you are likely to bring about improvements.

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. Why is not the gentleman willing to do that in a properly considered bill rather than in a rider on an appropriation bill?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Of course, unfortunately, that rider has gone out, if it was a rider. I regret it very much. I believe, with my friend from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON], that it will be restored shortly.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman from Ohio yield there?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. How long would it take the gentleman to bring out a well-considered plan in a separate bill?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Of course, there are only three ways in which this House can deal with the problem of aeronautics.

One is through the Post Office bill, another through the Army bill, and another through the Navy bill.

Mr. CRAMTON. Will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired. All time has expired on this paragraph. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. UPSHAW. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. STEENERSON. I ask for the regular order.

Mr. BLANTON. The regular order is the gentleman's motion to strike out the last two words.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia is recognized.

Mr. UPSHAW. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I want to go on record as favoring real progress in the Postal Service. The letter read by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON] quoted from Benjamin Franklin——

Mr. GARD. I will suggest to the gentleman from Georgia that the gentleman who read the letter was Mr. DOWELL, of Iowa.

Mr. UPSHAW. I accept the gentleman's correction.

Mr. KNUTSON. I forgive the gentleman.

Mr. UPSHAW. I thank the gentleman. I was about to say that the argument made by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON] is in thorough keeping, it seems to me in all good humor, with the shirt-tail argument of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. QUIN]. [Laughter.] The gentleman referred to the aeroplane service as a "shirt tail of mail." I want to submit that under proper governmental encouragement there would be as much development from PERCY QUIN'S "shirt tailful of mail" into a splendid carful of mail, serving the whole American people, as there has been from the earliest crude mail service that this Congress provided for the American people into our present splendid system.

I want to emphasize another thing. I think the point of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] is not well taken when he makes the argument about special privilege. Of course, it is not contemplated to have an air service covering every small town in America, but it is contemplated to serve the whole people as much as possible by bringing the mail by quick service to the great distributive centers.

I want the farmer in the State of Mississippi, the home of Mr. QUIN, and my own State of Georgia, whose mules used to get scared at automobiles and will for a time get frightened at airplanes, to feel that if he wants to give a letter the greatest possible dispatch he can put an aeroplane stamp on it and have the same privilege that the so-called plutocrat will have in the city or anywhere else. [Applause.]

Again let me emphasize this: If nine hours can be saved in the air postal service from New York to Chicago, then I submit that it is common fairness that we should so perfect the service that we could save nine hours between New York and Atlanta, which is at once the Chicago and the New York of the great Southeast. [Applause.] Henry Grady said one time, in one of his great prohibition speeches, that all reforms are born through doubt and suspicion, but back of them, as back of the coming sun, stands the Lord God Almighty. This is simply a great forward step in the mail service, one of those forward movements, always regarded with economic suspicion, which will be crowned at last with governmental success.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. UPSHAW. I love to believe, gentlemen of the committee, that even as God, the God of Progress who has been the God of America, inspires every great invention that has blessed the American people, so He is back of the inspiration that gave the airplane to the world, but let it be remembered that this great invention was never intended merely to loop the loop and do stunts in the air, but was intended for protection during war and for service during peace. Let us be sane and progressive as a Nation and develop this service for the expedition of business and the good of all the people. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 14, after line 25, insert "for inland transportation by aeroplane route, $850,500.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I raise the point of order against the amendment that it is a change of law.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Will the gentleman reserve his point of order for two minutes?

Mr. MADDEN. I will reserve it for five minutes.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Mr. Chairman, I want to take a few minutes' time of the House to give the House some idea of the amount we are spending now in the development of Air Service. This year we are spending $25,000,000 for the Army Air Service, $25,000,000 for the Navy Air Service, and $850,500 on the Post Office Air Service. The Post Office Air Service is the only air service on which there is any financial return whatever to the Government.

Twenty-five million dollars for the Army and $25,000,000 for the Navy are both economic losses, and when gentleman are here setting up the loud cry for economy they ought to remember that this Government is now spending large amounts for Air Service, and it will continue to spend large amounts for the development of the Air Service.

This year the War Department is asking for $65,000,000 for the development of the Air Service. The Navy is asking for $35,000,000, making a total of $100,000,000. The Post Office Department is asking for $3,000,000. Now, a part of that money that is appropriated for aerial mail service will return to the Treasury—that is, the amount asked by the Post Office Department; just how much I do not know. It is impossible to figure that exactly. The Post Office Department claims that they will save nearly $2,000,000 of this by space saved in the railway mail cars. I want to remind gentlemen who made the point of order against this item and who argued against any appropriation for air service for the Post Office Department that when these appropriation bills come in for the Army and the Navy, the one for $65,000,000 and the other for $35,000,000, I hope they will be on hand and help me save the Treasury millions.

Mr. BEE. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. RAMSEYER. Yes.

Mr. BEE. If the Post Office Department does not save the $2,000,000, does not that put $2,000,000 into the railroad coffers, because of the use of the space for the mail?

Mr. RAMSEYER. Yes; that is another thing that has not been brought out, and besides that this air service expedites the mail. It is something to be taken into consideration. It carries the mail for all people alike. If a letter is dropped into the New York office for San Francisco, the Post Office Department is not going to make any distinction between mail dropped in there by a millionaire and that dropped in by a laborer. The vociferous statements of certain gentlemen to the contrary are ridiculous. This service will expedite the transportation of mail that travels long distances. To be sure, only a small per cent of the first-class mail travels long distances, across the continent. The greater per cent of the mail will continue to travel short distances in the future as it has in the past and will be carried on trains.

We are living in a progressive age. The age of oxcart statesmanship is past. The Post Office Department is firmly of the belief that the aerial mail service can be made self-supporting in the very near future, and I am in favor of giving the department a limited amount of funds for next year to continue this service. [Applause.]

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, one of the curiosities of government is that it rarely makes available its assets. If we spent $25,000,000 a year in the Army on aviation and $25,000,000 a year on aviation in the Navy, why on earth can not we utilize this service in connection with the carrying of the mail? Of course, the Navy is a little bit different from the Army. A man gets a better training learning how to operate a flying machine by operating it, not as a sport, but as a business proposition. The Army officer who is taught to operate a flying machine will learn a great deal more if he has to start out at a fixed hour, regardless of the weather, under adverse conditions, to do a particular thing.

That is what he would have to do in time of war. That is not what he has to do in time of peace when he is taking his training. Why can they not be used? Why is it? Is it that we are so weak, that human nature is so weak that we can not correlate our affairs? In my judgment if we maintain this attitude of legislation, keeping up an Army aviation service and a Navy aviation service and Post Office aviation service and perhaps next an Interior Department aviation service, and various other services, the inevitable result will be the creation of one aviation service, the thing which the Army and the Navy both fear and detest. If we had one aviation service, we could have them carry the mail, we could have them do the work now done in the War Department, we could have that service do the work now done in the Navy Department. While I do not think it desirable to take away from the Navy and the Army the control of the aviation service in those branches of the Government, still if we are to spend almost a hundred million dollars every year for experimental work and in teaching in these two military branches of the Government, the people will shortly conclude that we are wasting money uselessly which might be devoted to carrying the mail and doing other work for the Government. [Applause.]

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, I will ask the gentleman to reserve the point of order for two or three minutes.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have about two minutes more.

Mr. MADDEN. I reserve the point of order for five minutes.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] forgets in his argument that the matter of aviation for the Army is not a thing that is at all related to aviation for the Post Office Department, except in the one particular—that the men fly. If you attach to the Army the matter of carrying mail, as some would have, you will develop into that service the merest humdrum methods. The character of plane that they would use and ought to use is one that is designed for the greatest safety, safety above everything else, except, perhaps, carrying capacity. The one that is to be used in the Army and the one in which the Army aviator must be trained is an entirely different machine in respect to the use to which it is to be put, except possibly the bombing plane. When a man goes into the aviation service in the Army he must have a different character from the man who goes into the aviation service in the Post Office Department. The carrying of the mail develops into a commercial enterprise, where the aviator pursues a daily occupation in the most humdrum fashion, getting up at a certain hour, traveling through the air over a certain route, landing at a certain place at a certain hour, and discharging his cargo and returning. In the Army you have an entirely different viewpoint. You have a man who is prepared, ready, and willing to take all of the risks of the most dangerous service that there is, who is trained and keyed up to that high pitch which will enable him to do the heroic thing in the defense of his country in the hour of its need. You are building up the nucleus of an organization that is to defend us in the air and protect us on land and on the sea, and if you destroy it by fastening onto that service this humdrum commercial enterprise of carrying the mail, you are, in the name of economy, creating a condition from which the American people will suffer in time of war.

I make these remarks in order that the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], who has read in the newspapers the statements of the advocates of the unified service, might take into consideration in his thinking upon this subject the necessity of a specialized training for the Army and the Navy in the defense of our country.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Mr. Chairman, this matter has been discussed thoroughly, and my colleagues on the committee will bear me out in the statement that I have always contended for economy as much as anyone else. Before the committee I have also contended that the air service should be unified under one department or board of the Government. The remarks of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] suited my viewpoint exactly. The flying machine is still in an experimental stage, and it will be developed faster by putting it to work at something useful. My idea is that there should be a unified air service under some board or department of the Government, and from that board or department then certain machines and men could be assigned to the War Department as my friend from New York [Mr. CALDWELL] contends for and others to the Navy Department. The great bulk of them could be used for the purpose of doing something useful. We learn faster by doing something useful and in which there is some financial return, and I hope that the committees of Congress will some time soon bring in a bill to unite this great service and thereby maintain the efficiency in both Army and Navy and at the same time make more rapid progress in making the aeroplane a useful and profitable machine commercially.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSEYER. Yes.

Mr. TILSON. Was it brought out in the hearings before the gentleman's committee in respect to the dropping of mail from an aeroplane?

Mr. RAMSEYER. Some evidence was brought out along that line.

Mr. TILSON. Is there not under consideration and has there not been an actual test of the dropping of mail from airplanes by means of a parachute, and has it not been done very accurately?

Mr. RAMSEYER. That experiment is being carried on right now.

Mr. TILSON. My understanding is that it is done quite accurately and that in doing it the same sight is used as is used in the dropping of bombs in war. I am informed that with this device it is practicable for a man to drop a sack of mail on the square directly in front of the post office building. If a man can do this with a bag of mail, he would be able to drop a bomb with a considerable degree of accuracy in case of war.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois makes the point of order. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. KITCHIN offers the following amendment: Add at the end of line 25, page 14, the following:

"Provided further, That hereafter the Postmaster General, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, is authorized to make contracts with telephone and telegraph companies for the transmission of letters by electrical means of communication.

"Provided further, That the rate to be paid such telephone and telegraph companies for the transmission of such letters by such means of communication shall not exceed 30 cents for 100 words or less, and that the rate of postage prescribed by the Postmaster General for such letters shall be such as to cover the full cost to the Postal Establishment for such service."

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order.

Mr. KITCHIN. I will ask the gentleman to reserve it for a time.

Mr. MADDEN. I reserve the point of order.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that no one can possibly have any objection to these provisions, although I admit that the amendment is subject to the point of order. It will certainly cost the Post Office Department nothing, because it is provided in the amendment that the Postmaster General shall make the rates high enough to cover the full cost of the service.

Before any contract can be made it must be to the benefit of the wire companies, because the wire companies will not make a contract with the Postmaster General unless it is to their benefit. It will not cost the Postal Service anything; it will not be a hardship or injury to the wire companies, because it must be to their benefit, otherwise they will not enter into such contract. It will result in a larger and better Postal Service. It is a new proposition, but it certainly will result in a larger benefit to the people. For instance, say I wanted to send a letter to-night to my home town. By regular mail it will be the second day before it arrives there. By this process I drop the letter in the post office or the mail box addressed to the telegraph company, and the carrier immediately, when he takes it up, will carry it to the Western Union or the Postal Co. I place stamps on it sufficient to cover the cost. It is transmitted by the wire company here in Washington between the hours, say, of 11 p. m. and 6 a. m., and it is delivered to the addressee at Scotland Neck to-morrow morning as soon as the mail is opened.

Mr. STEENERSON. I will say to the gentleman——

Mr. KITCHIN. I desire to say to the gentleman that although it is progressive legislation I do not blame the gentleman for making the point of order now, because probably he has not considered it and the House has not considered it. Now, I will ask the gentleman, if the point of order is made, which, no doubt, it will be, will not the able and considerate chairman of the committee promise that the committee will consider this proposition at some time during this session?

Mr. STEENERSON. I will say to the gentleman from North Carolina that I was about to say that very thing before he asked the question. There are already a number of bills on this very subject before our committee which have been referred to it. I know the gentleman to be a careful and considerate legislator, and he would not expect to have us take up a new subject and put it as a rider on an appropriation bill; and I will say to him that we will give the matter careful consideration as soon as possible.

Mr. KITCHIN. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order.

Mr. STEENERSON. I made the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota makes the point of order to the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina, and the Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

For rent, light, heat, fuel, telegraph, miscellaneous and office expenses, schedules of mail trains, telephone service, and badges for railway postal clerks, including rental of offices for division headquarters, and chief clerk, Railway Mail Service, in Washington, D. C., and rental of space for terminal railway post offices for the distribution of mails when the furnishing of space for such distribution can not under the Postal Laws and Regulations properly be required of railroad companies without additional compensation, and for equipment and miscellaneous items necessary and incidental to terminal railway post offices, $932,156.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. STEENERSON: Page 16, line 23, at the end of the line insert:

"Provided, That hereafter the Postmaster General may, in the disbursement of the appropriation for such purposes, apply a part thereof to the purpose of leasing premises for the use of the terminal railway post offices at a reasonable annual rental, to be paid quarterly for a term of not exceeding 20 years."

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on the amendment. Is this one of those things controverted? There was some controversy about these terminal offices.

Mr. STEENERSON. I will say to the gentleman that we put the provision in regard to the First Assistant, for rent of quarters for 20 years, and then the Second Assistant, Mr. Praeger, and his assistant, Mr. Denning, came after the committee had completed the bill and requested a similar provision for them. He had just been to Chicago.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Is this just a change of the law as to the length of the lease?

Mr. STEENERSON. That is all, from 10 to 20 years.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I have no objection. I withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman withdraws the point of order. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For transportation of foreign mails, including increases hereinafter provided, $4,700,000.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 17, line 23, after the figures "$4,700,000," strike out the period, insert a colon, and add the following: "Provided, That out of this appropriation the Postmaster General is authorized to expend not exceeding $30,000 for the transportation of foreign mails by airplanes and seaplanes."

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I reserve the point of order, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Mr. Chairman, just a word in explanation of this amendment. Under the existing law the foreign mail can only be carried over water by a steamboat or a sailboat. That law was made some years ago. Now, the request for this amendment comes about in this way. There is a corporation known as the Florida West Indies Airways, which has been organized. The manager of this corporation is a flyer, Maj. Bonnell, who served clear through the war in the Air Service. He, as well as his assistant, are experienced flyers. In 1914 Maj. Bonnell went in with the English, and when we got into the war he flew with the Americans. They have organized this corporation with good financial backing, and are going to establish an airway service from Key West to Habana, Cuba. They are going to commence flying in February. Now, all they ask is this, and the only right this amendment will give them is to go before the Post Office Department and bid for a contract for carrying the mail. It is no subsidy, no money appropriated to buy aeroplanes or seaplanes or to pay any expense of keeping up the route.

Mr. MADDEN. And they are to make daily runs?

Mr. RAMSEYER. If we do not get this amendment through, why, of course, the mail will have to be carried across the water from Key West to Habana either by a steamboat or by a sailboat, as it is now. If we put this in, it will greatly expedite the mail across the water, which is a distance of something like 90 or 100 miles, and they intend to fly it in a little over an hour and fly each way every day. They have contracted for seaplanes that carry 14 passengers. Their main business will be the carrying of passengers, and besides passenger space there is room in these seaplanes to carry mail. The only right conferred by this amendment will be to permit the Post Office Department to give them a contract to carry first-class mail, provided they can make a contract or a bid which satisfies the Post Office Department.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, it is very likely I shall withdraw the point of order, but anybody familiar with the situation must know that this will not expedite the mails any. Mails coming over from Key West will have to be carried away from there by train.

There is a boat that comes over from Cuba to make connection with these trains practically, and about the only thing we will do will be, if we let this contract, to pay out sums for the loss of mail dropped into the sea. Well, maybe it will be worth it.

Mr. RAMSEYER. They will have to fly between now and the 1st of July before they can possibly get a contract, and in the meantime they will have to demonstrate that they can make the flights from Key West to Habana with safety.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. They will not demonstrate that an airplane will not fall in the sea, because everybody that reasons knows that once in a while one will do so.

Mr. RAMSEYER. And sometimes a train runs off the track, and steamships and sailboats have been known to go to the bottom of the sea. As I stated before, this means no additional expense to the Treasury. The question is, Are you going to give the owner of a seaplane the same right to go before the Post Office Department to bid for carrying the foreign mails as you give to the owner of a sailboat? The boats now in use between Key West and Habana require from six to eight hours to make the trip. The seaplanes will make the same distance in a little over an hour. That the mails will be expedited is self-evident.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Yes; but not so often as the airplanes fall into the sea. And as long as we will not pay now if a man loses a registered letter, under military control of the Government, through somebody absconding with it, and the Government will not recompense him, we will recompense a man if he loses his money by putting it in a registered letter which is dropped into the sea.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I understood the gentleman from Illinois withdrew his reservation.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I do.

Mr. BLANTON. I renew the reservation of the point of order. If we are not going to have aeroplane service in the United States, I am dead sure we will not have it outside the United States. And I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas makes the point of order against the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. RAMSEYER].

Mr. STEENERSON. I desire to say to the gentleman from Texas that this matter was heard before the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads on a special measure, and we purpose to take it up and consider it further. But the proposition looks so reasonable—it is only 100 miles—that I told the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. RAMSEYER] that I would not make a point of order against it.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEENERSON. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Does the gentleman think it any more important to have aeroplane service from Key West to Cuba than from New York to Chicago?

Mr. STEENERSON. Yes; and for this reason——

Mr. BLANTON. And his leader on that side would obliterate any chance of aeroplane service.

Mr. STEENERSON. Let me explain to the gentleman this: The rate of compensation for carrying the mail over the seas to foreign countries is as high, on first-class mail in American register, as 80 cents a pound. If we contract here for $100 a trip, and they carry 200 pounds, and they carry 500 a day, we will really get the mail transported cheaper by aeroplane to Habana than we do at present.

Mr. BLANTON. When the gentleman becomes able to provide for proper aeroplane experimentation and service in the United States of America, can not he also provide for this service between the United States and Cuba?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Texas insist on the point of order?

Mr. BLANTON. I do, Mr. Chairman, because I think charity should begin at home, and we should have aeroplane service in the United States first.

Mr. STEENERSON. It is the only proposition on which we can save some money.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

I have been told, and this is not for the purpose of criticism, that two wrongs do not make a right. I am not charging that the other point of order was right or wrong, but certainly this is a step in the right direction. It will demonstrate to the Members of Congress whether mail can be successfully carried or not, and while it is only a small appropriation it means much along these lines of future legislation. I want to thank the gentleman from Illinois [Mr MANN] for withdrawing his point of order. I believe if the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] would stop and think just for a moment, because he does not desire to be unfair, he will see that this will cost the Government absolutely no more than without it, and the passenger aeroplane service which will be put into effect, running from Key West to Cuba, will only have the advantage of carrying the mails provided the bid is satisfactory, and thereby will demonstrate to Members of Congress whether we should go further along these lines or not. Certainly the gentleman from Texas, where it is not costing the Government one cent, will not insist upon the point of order simply because his district or some other part of Texas is not securing a portion of the appropriation. I hope the gentleman will withdraw the point of order, but of course it is entirely up to him.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For rental, purchase, exchange, and repair of canceling machines and motors, mechanical mail-handling apparatus, and other labor-saving devices, including cost of power in rented buildings, and miscellaneous expenses of installation and operation of same, including salaries and increases hereinafter provided of five traveling mechanicians and for per diem allowance of traveling mechanicians while actually traveling on official business away from their homes and their official domiciles at a rate to be fixed by the Postmaster General, not to exceed $4 per day, $392,115.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. STEENERSON: Page 21, line 2, after the word "salaries," strike out "and increases hereinafter provided."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEENERSON].

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say to the gentleman that the Comptroller of the Treasury has decided that these employees in here were not included in the salary increase. I have a letter here from the chief clerk suggesting that the words be stricken out.

Mr. BLACK. I will ask the gentleman if he does not think that some provision will be made for these employees so that they may be covered?

Mr. STEENERSON. I will read the letter to which I referred. It is as follows:

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
FOURTH ASSISTANT POSTMASTER GENERAL,
Washington, January 10, 1920.

COMMITTEE ON POST OFFICE AND POST ROADS,
House of Representatives:

Referring to my telephonic conversation with you this noon, and in conformity with promise at that time made, I am submitting herewith a copy of the decision rendered by the Comptroller of the Treasury concerning the pay of certain postal employees.

In view of the comptroller's decision as set forth in the concluding paragraph of his letter, this department has held that traveling mechanicians fall within the class referred to as "other employees paid from lump-sum appropriations," and since they receive in excess of $1,000, are not entitled to the increase provided for in public resolution No. 19 of November 8, 1919. These employees do, however, benefit by the act of February 28, 1919, which provides for an increase of 10 per cent.

Very truly, yours, L. M. DOW, Chief Clerk.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEENERSON. Yes.

Mr. BLACK. As I understand it, these five traveling mechanicians are paid out of a lump-sum appropriation which is in the hands of the Postmaster General, and if he decides that they are entitled to an additional increase in pay he will have the power to grant it, and the money is at his disposal?

Mr. STEENERSON. Yes; at any time.

Mr. BLACK. Of course, with that explanation, I see no reason why the amendment should not be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEENERSON].

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. BLANTON. A division, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. A division is demanded.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 23, noes 2.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask also that the letter of the comptroller be printed.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Following is the letter referred to:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE COMPTROLLER OF THE TREASURY,
Washington, November 29, 1919.

The honorable the POSTMASTER GENERAL.

SIR: I have your letter of November 17, as follows:

"I have to submit for decision the question of whether the employees hereinafter named are entitled to benefits provided in public resolution No. 19, Sixty-sixth Congress, which provides additional compensation for certain employees in the Postal Service.

"There are about 88 clerks employed in this department by authority contained in section 5 of the act of July 28, 1916 (39 Stat., 430), with salaries ranging from $1,000 to $1,900 per annum plus bonuses of 10 to 15 per cent provided for in the acts of July 2, 1918 (40 Stat., 752), and February 28, 1919 (40 Stat., 1199). These clerks are assigned to work on the accounts of railroads for carrying the mails under the space basis system authorized in section 5 of the above-mentioned act of July 28, 1916, and are being paid out of the appropriation 'for inland transportation by railroad routes and aeroplanes, 1920' (40 Stat., 1194)."

Section 5 of the act of July 28, 1916 (39 Stat., 430), provides in part as follows:

"The Postmaster General is authorized to employ such clerical and other assistance as shall be necessary to carry out the provisions of this section, * * * and to pay for the same out of the appropriation for inland transportation by railroad routes." * * *

The act of February 28, 1919 (40 Stat., 1194), provides:

"For inland transportation by railroad routes and aeroplanes, $59,625,000." * * *

Public resolution No. 19, of November 8, 1919, provides:

"That because of the unusual conditions which now exist the compensation provided for in the act entitled 'An act making appropriations for the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920,' approved February 28, 1919, the following classes of employees shall be increased as follows for such fiscal year only:

* * * * * * *

"(b) Carriers in the village delivery service and other employees paid from lump-sum appropriations receiving compensation at the rate of less than $1,000 per annum to be increased 20 per cent of their present compensation."

* * * * * * *

No statutory provision has been found fixing the salaries of the employees here under consideration. Their salaries are paid from the appropriation for "inland transportation by railroad routes and aeroplanes," which is a lump-sum appropriation.

Therefore the employees in question come within the class of "other employees paid from lump-sum appropriations" provided for in the part quoted from public resolution No. 19 of November 8, 1919.

Since, however, the increase authorized for "other employees paid from lump-sum appropriations" is limited to those receiving less than $1,000 per annum, and since the employees in question receive more than $1,000 per annum, the increase does not apply to them. Accordingly your question is answered in the negative.

Respectfully,

W. W. WARWICK, Comptroller.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, in a few moments the final vote will be taken on this bill, the second of the regular appropriation bills to be passed by the House, leaving 11 of the regular annual appropriation bills still to be considered.

The appropriating committees of the House have made such progress in the consideration of their bills that, beginning with next Monday, we shall have before the House constantly appropriation bills for consideration, and those bills will be considered and disposed of as rapidly as possible, consistent with careful examination. Important matters of legislation and conference reports will, of course, be considered from time to time.

Mr. Chairman, I am of the opinion—and this is a personal opinion, binding no one's judgment—I am of opinion, after a rather careful consideration of the status of the appropriation bills and the legislation before the Congress, and that which is likely to be presented, that we can dispose of our entire program and reach a final adjournment by Saturday, the 5th day of June [applause], providing we are diligent, providing gentlemen give close attention to the public business. I feel confident that the important matters of legislation and appropriation will be reported regularly and in due course, and I know of no reason why the Congress should not dispose of everything that may come before it of importance by the time I have suggested.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. In just a moment.

That will give us 20 weeks, 120 days, legislative days, in which to dispose of the business before the Congress, and I believe that all matters requiring attention can be considered by that time, and I am sure that we are, all of us, anxious to get through with all matters of importance and adjourn early.

During the consideration of these appropriation bills I hope we will have in mind the state of the Public Treasury. [Applause.] I hope we will not forget the tax-burdened folks at home, and that we will not allow the demands upon us from one class of people and another to lead us to lose sight of the absolute necessity of not only keeping within the estimates, so far as we can, but of reducing the estimates, if possible, as I have heretofore suggested, by at least a billion dollars, and I hope a billion and a quarter.

Now I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. KNUTSON. Has the gentleman taken into consideration the fact that during the extra session 22 days were consumed in needless and useless roll calls, made on points of no quorum? That method of obstructing public business will have to be eliminated if we can accomplish the program the gentleman has outlined in the time suggested.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. In just a moment.

Mr. BLANTON. I am sure the gentleman will let me answer that.

Mr. MONDELL. In just a moment. I hope we will not allow our thoughts——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask that I may proceed for two minutes more.

Mr. BLANTON. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, that the gentleman may proceed for three minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent to proceed for two additional minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I hope we will not have our thoughts and attention directed to the past, but that we will look forward to the future and to the important work before us.

Mr. BLANTON. Now, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. My distinguished friend from Minnesota, Mr. KNUTSON, the very energetic whip on that side, alluded to the number of roll calls that were necessary in the recent extra session of Congress. I want to call his attention to the fact that if he is just able to keep his colleagues here in their seats, where they belong, attending to the public business, we shall not have to have a single roll call, because they will all be here.

Mr. KNUTSON. I will say to the gentleman that if he will get the committees to suspend their sittings we can have a quorum.

Mr. BLANTON. That is all poppycock. [Laughter.]

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, we all realize that if we were to have a quorum in the House all the time it would tremendously interfere with the business of the committees. But I agree with the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] this far, that we always ought to have a good attendance in the House, and I hope we shall have, and I hope we may conclude the public business and get through at the time I suggest.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I will if I have the time.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Does the gentleman think it would be possible to transact any business in the House if we had 435 Members in the House like the gentleman from Texas? [Laughter.]

Mr. BLANTON. You would have a whole lot better laws passed in that case. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, I call for the reading of the bill.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the motion to strike out, made by the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York is recognized.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, I have listened to the remarks of the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL], and I hope he does not go away. I hope that his prophecy that we will finish the public business by June or July will be fulfilled. But I feel that, having listened to his agreeable prophecy, I would not be fair to my colleagues in this House if I did not call the attention of the House to the fact that we have been in almost continuous session in the Committee on Military Affairs since May, 1919, and that to-day we were working on page 6 of the Army reorganization bill that we started out with, and that there has not been a single word of testimony taken upon the Army appropriation bill, and that that bill can not be taken up until the Army reorganization bill is disposed of. And I call the attention of the House to the fact that the figures show that out of all the bills introduced into this House approximately one-third of them are referred to the Committee on Military Affairs. I want to say that unless the Military Committee go into continuous session and sit nights and disclose a better spirit to get together and compromise on the issues between the members of the committee, we will be here next December without any appropriation bill and without any Army reorganization bill.

Mr. STEENERSON. I ask for the reading of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For inland transportation by star routes (excepting service in Alaska), including temporary service to newly established offices, $11,000,000: Provided, That the Secretary of War is authorized hereafter, in his discretion, to deliver and turn over to the Postmaster General, without charge therefor, from time to time such motor vehicles, aeroplanes, and parts thereof, and machinery and tools to repair and maintain the same, as may be suitable for use in the Postal Service, and the Postmaster General is authorized to use the same in the transportation of the mails and to pay the necessary expenses thereof, including the replacement, maintenance, exchange, and repair of such equipment, out of the annual appropriations for star-route service.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. CONNALLY: On line 11, page 22, after the word "service," strike out the period, insert a colon, and add the following language: "Provided further, That the Postmaster General is authorized to investigate conditions arising from contracts in the star route, screen wagon, and other vehicle service entered into prior to January 1, 1920, with a view to determining whether any adjustment should be made in the compensation, and to adjust the same for services hereafter to be furnished or rendered in cases where the facts disclose the necessity for such adjustment; or, in his discretion, with the consent of the contractor and his bondsmen, the Postmaster General may cancel such contracts."

Mr. STEENERSON. I make a point of order against the amendment, that it changes existing law and is legislation on an appropriation bill.

Mr. BLACK. Will the gentleman from Minnesota reserve the point of order until the gentleman from Texas can make a five-minute statement?

Mr. STEENERSON. Yes, I will; although the time is getting late.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I present this amendment because of the condition that we find to exist from time to time on many of the little star routes over the country. As most of you know, these star routes in some portions of the country have to be carried by buggy or wagon.

A MEMBER. On horseback.

Mr. CONNALLY. Or on horseback. Under the law, as it now exists, these men who have entered into contracts with the Government for the carrying of the mails on the star routes are not able to receive any advantage of the general increases which the Congress has allowed to practically all Government employees. Some of these contracts cover long periods of time, and the increase in the price of feed and in maintaining their equipment has grown so great that many of the carriers are forced to carry the mails at an actual loss. They are not in the position of the rural carriers. A rural carrier may resign and leave the Government service, but when a star-route contractor enters into his contract he is required to execute a bond by which he is required to perform the service regardless of whether by changed conditions he can only render the service at a loss or not.

Mr. BRIGGS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. Yes.

Mr. BRIGGS. Is it not true that the quantity of mail has so increased on these routes that the contractors in large numbers of instances are carrying the mail at a great loss and can get no relief from that condition; that the Postmaster General is not authorized to relieve them from their contracts or to give them any relief?

Mr. CONNALLY. That is very true in many cases. Under the law the Postmaster General has no discretion whatever. He has to exact from the star-route carriers the conditions of their bonds, and I know of several instances, not in my own district but in other portions of Texas, where the bondsmen of the star-route contractor have been forced to go down into their pockets and hire people to carry out their contracts when the contractor himself, on account of being unable to do so for the compensation, has been forced to give up his employment. That is a condition that ought not to exist in a great Government like this.

Mr. MADDEN. Does the gentleman believe that a contract between the Government and anybody else amounts to anything?

Mr. CONNALLY. Oh, yes. The gentleman from Illinois knows that I would not seek to amend this law if I did not have respect for contracts; but the point I make is that a Government as great and as rich as this ought not to exact the terms of a Shylock bond when it is not just and equitable to stand upon the hard and fast terms of a contract with some little fellow with one horse and a cart, who is unable to carry the mails and render the Government the service for what the Government is paying, when conditions have materially changed since the date of the contract.

Mr. BRIGGS. Does not the gentleman know that in the last session of Congress we passed a bill for the relief of contractors for public buildings in the United States, so as to give them the actual cost of their work and give them their profit on it in addition?

Mr. CONNALLY. Certainly; and I dare say that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] was very anxious that that measure should go through this House and that he voted for it.

Mr. MADDEN. I want the gentleman to understand——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired

Mr. CONNALLY. I ask for two minutes more.

Mr. MADDEN. I ask for one minute to reply to the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CONNALLY. When I made that statement about the gentleman from Illinois having voted for that measure I meant to impute no odium to him, because I will vote for any other measure which is based on the principle that this great Government is willing to treat its citizens fairly and equitably, and I believe this is one case in which the Government ought not to stand upon the hard and fast terms of the contract with some hard-working little fellow away out in the country precincts when the great interests that have millions involved are coming here and getting justice. Now, in reply to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN], I will say that if the same conditions existed at this time, as existed at the time that these contracts were entered into, I would not say that any change ought to be made in the rule by which these matters are to be gauged, but I do say, and every Member of this House well knows, and the gentleman from Illinois will not deny that conditions of living to-day are not what they were two or three years ago. We know that our money has not the value that it had when these contracts were entered into. And I want to say, too, that this amendment simply gives to the Postmaster General discretion to adjust these matters fairly with the parties concerned. However partisan your views may be with reference to the Postmaster General, I do not believe that anyone on the floor of this House will be so bold as to charge the Postmaster General with not having served the Government faithfully, patriotically, and well with reference to the disbursement of public money.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. And economically.

Mr. CONNALLY. He is one Cabinet member of which that can be said. Of the heads of departments not only in this administration but several administrations back, he stands above them all as being economical in the disbursement of the public funds. [Applause.]

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I wish to call the attention of the gentleman from Texas to the fact that I spoke against the passage of the resolution for the adjudication of building contracts and voted against it. That shows that I was not very anxious for its passage.

I want also to call the attention of the gentleman from Texas to the further fact that as to all star-route contracts entered into before a given date, those who entered into contracts before war conditions prevailed, the Postmaster General is given authority to adjust them and to pay increased compensation. But where a man entered into a contract either for a star route or any other service, with all the facts before him, where the conditions have not changed to justify a further adjudication, I do not believe any such adjudication ought to be had. The man who entered into contracts referred to by the gentleman from Texas undoubtedly entered into it in 1919, or the fiscal year of 1920. If he did, the conditions are the same now as then, and there is no change.

Mr. CONNALLY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. CONNALLY. In a case where a new town has sprung up and the mail carrier has to carry two or three times as much mail as under the old conditions, would not there be that element to be taken into consideration?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes; and the Postmaster General can compensate for places where a great population has grown up. That is a case that can be adjusted on its own merits. That is an individual case which can be submitted for adjudication, and we should not make a general law to cover a single case. In 1917 the Postmaster General was given this authority:

That the Postmaster General is authorized to investigate conditions arising from contracts in the star route, screen wagon, and other vehicle service entered into prior to June 30, 1917, and from contracts for furnishing envelopes, blanks, and blank books, and the Official Postal Guide, for contracts entered into prior to June 30, 1917, with a view to determining whether any adjustment should be made in the compensation and to adjust the same for materials or services hereafter to be furnished or rendered in cases where the facts disclose the necessity for such adjustment, or, in his discretion, with the consent of the contractor and his bondsmen, the Postmaster General may cancel such contracts.

That was enacted into law for the purpose of providing for conditions that were unseen by these men who entered into the contract prior to the war and who could not know of the conditions that would exist during the war. These men found themselves face to face with conditions that they could not meet. Prices had increased, labor had increased, the cost of food and supplies of all kinds increased, and they were at a great disadvantage, and the Government could not afford under those circumstances to ask them to continue the contract. And so Congress saw the justice of the claims of these men and so power and authority was given to the Postmaster General to adjust all such contracts.

If there is any special reason in any particular case where the Postmaster General should be given authority, that one case can stand on its own merits, but we ought not to pass a general law covering in every contractor that has a special kind of work in order to get at this particular case. If there is any merit in the case that the gentleman from Texas refers to I would be the first man to meet the case to adjudicate it, but I would not be in favor of a general law which might cover all sorts of claims to be made against the Government just to reach this particular case.

Mr. BRIGGS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. BRIGGS. Is it not true that the greatest increase has been since July 1?

Mr. MADDEN. No; I think they were apprised of all the facts in the case.

Mr. BRIGGS. Has not Congress put an additional burden on the star route contractors by making them carry food and other supplies to different portions of the country?

Mr. MADDEN. I do not agree to that.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order, and in doing so I want to say that the gentleman from Texas can have this brought before the Post Office Committee, and in the future we will inquire into the necessity of this legislation. As has been said by the gentleman from Illinois, legislation was enacted in 1917, and this will give the gentleman an opportunity to present it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For pay of rural carriers, substitutes for rural carriers on annual leave, clerks in charge of rural stations, and tolls and ferriage, Rural Delivery Service, and for the incidental expenses thereof, including increases hereinafter provided, $78,000,000.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 32, line 16, after the figures "$78,000,000," insert: "Provided, That hereafter the length of route served by rural carriers shall be determined by the records of the department, which records shall be changed promptly whenever it shall be demonstrated to the satisfaction of the department that the length of a route has been incorrectly stated, the pay of the carrier to be increased or decreased accordingly."

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is suggested by the Postmaster General. It was received after the bill was completed or it would have been included. The committee authorized me to offer it as a committee amendment. The explanation is stated in a letter from the Postmaster General, which I will ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

OFFICE OF THE POSTMASTER GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., January 9, 1920.

Hon. H. STEENERSON,
Chairman Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. STEENERSON: Prior to the passage of the joint resolution of Congress, approved March 4, 1915, which became effective July 1, 1915, the pay of rural carriers was based on the length of the routes served as shown by the records of the department.

Beginning July 1, 1915, under the terms of the joint resolution mentioned, the pay of rural carriers was based on the actual length of the routes served.

Under a recent decision of the Comptroller of the Treasury, a copy of which is inclosed, it is obligatory on the part of the department, when a carrier has been underpaid by reason of an erroneous measurement of the route served by him, to make payment to the carrier of the difference between the amount paid to him and the amount that would have been paid to him if the route had been correctly measured on July 1, 1915, and also, if a carrier has been paid on the basis of a route longer than that actually served, to make a collection from him of the amount paid in excess of that authorized by law.

Clearly this is a condition that was not contemplated at the time of the passage of the joint resolution. It will no doubt at times prove a very serious hardship on some of the personnel. As the carriers are paid solely on the mileage basis, a slight error in the original measurement, for which the employee was in nowise responsible, may subsequently make it incumbent upon the department to collect from him several hundred dollars. Conversely, the department will be called upon to pay considerable sums of money to employees who are not equitably entitled thereto.

To remedy this condition and to enable the department to apply the principles of equity to such cases, I have to recommend the addition of the following to the item making appropriation for the maintenance of Rural Delivery Service for the fiscal year 1921:

Provided, That hereafter the length of routes served by rural carriers shall be determined by the records of the department, which records shall be changed promptly whenever it shall be demonstrated to the satisfaction of the department that the length of a route has been incorrectly stated, the pay of the carrier to be increased or decreased accordingly.

Sincerely, yours,

A. S. BURLESON,
Postmaster General.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE COMPTROLLER OF THE TREASURY,
Washington, January 7, 1920.

The honorable the POSTMASTER GENERAL.

SIR: I have your letter of December 29, received January 5, requesting decision whether under existing laws the Post Office Department in readjusting the salaries of rural carriers on the basis of the correct length of the route served by them as ascertained by measurement, whether the length be greater or less than shown by the official records, must make such readjustment effective July 1, 1915, if the route was being operated at that time.

The compensation of rural letter carriers was fixed by law and made to depend upon the actual length of the route served by a provision in the joint resolution of March 4, 1915 (38 Stat., 1227), effective on and after July 1, 1915. Prior to the latter date their compensation was fixed by order of the Postmaster General and based upon the length of the route served "as shown by the records of the department."

In a decision of this office dated January 31, 1916 (22 Comp. Dec., 360), it was held that any change in the rate of compensation as fixed by the joint resolution of March 4, 1915, necessitated by a remeasurement of the route served should be made effective from July 1, 1915, if the carrier was serving the route on that date, and from the date the carrier began to serve the route if such date was subsequent to July 1, 1915.

With reference to that decision and as a reason for again submitting the identical question therein decided you state:

"The practice of the department has been in conformity with this decision, but since the pay of rural carriers has been so materially increased under acts of Congress effective July 28, 1916, July 1, 1918, and July 1, 1919, numerous cases are arising involving the payment of considerable sums to carriers or of recovering sums from carriers who have been overpaid, and in many of these cases the persons concerned are no longer connected with the service."

The acts referred to by you (39 Stat. 423; 40 Stat., 751; and 40 Stat., 1197) made certain increases in the rates of pay of rural letter carriers, but did not change the requirement that said rates be based upon the actual length of the route served.

I fail to see wherein the amount involved or the fact that the carrier is no longer in the service can have any bearing upon the decision of the question presented.

If a carrier has been underpaid by reason of an erroneous estimate or measurement of the route served by him, clearly he has a legal claim against the United States for the difference between the amount paid to him and the amount which would have been paid if the route had been measured correctly on July 1, 1915. Whether the amount of that difference is large or small, and whether the carrier has or has not left the service, can not affect the legality of the claim. Likewise, if he has been paid on the basis of a route longer than that actually served by him at any time since July 1, 1915, he has been paid an amount in excess of that authorized by law, and which he has no legal right to retain.

Respectfully,

WALTER W. WARWICK, Comptroller.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I do not make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PARRISH. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. PARRISH offers the following amendment: On line 16, following the amendment just adopted, strike out the period after the figures "$78,000,000" and insert a colon and all the following language: "Provided, That on and after July 1, 1920, rural carriers shall receive a salary not exceeding $2,500 per annum, and their maximum salary shall be based on the length of their routes, the time required to serve them, and the number of pieces and weight of mail transported: And provided further, That on and after July 1, 1920, the minimum compensation of rural carriers, exclusive of the increases provided in section 2 of this act, shall be as follows: On routes of 24 miles and over, six times a week, $1,200 per annum, payable monthly; on routes 22 miles and less than 24 miles, $1,152; on routes 20 miles and less than 22 miles, $1,080; on routes 18 miles and less than 20 miles, $960; on routes 16 miles and less than 18 miles, $840; on routes 14 miles and less than 16 miles, $720; on routes 12 miles and less than 14 miles, $672; on routes 10 miles and less than 12 miles, $624; on routes 8 miles and less than 10 miles, $576; on routes 6 miles and less than 8 miles, $528; on routes 4 miles and less than 6 miles, $480.

"A rural carrier serving one triweekly route shall be paid on the basis for a route one-half of the length of the route served by him, and a carrier serving two triweekly routes shall be paid on the basis for a route one-half of the combined length of the two routes: And provided further, That no rural route on which the use of a motor vehicle would be required shall be established unless a motor vehicle can be operated thereon with reasonable regularity for 10 months in the year: And provided further, That when any route is authorized that absorbs or eliminates existing routes the carriers affected thereby shall be retained in the order of their relative efficiency."

During the reading of the amendment,

Mr. MADDEN (interrupting the reading). Mr. Chairman, I have heard enough of the amendment to know that it is subject to the point of order, and I make the point of order that it is a change of existing law.

Mr. PARRISH. Will not the gentleman reserve the point of order? I agree with the gentleman from Illinois that it is subject to the point of order, but I would like to be heard upon it for a moment.

Mr. MADDEN. This is not the orderly way to do, but I reserve the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois reserves the point of order, and the Clerk will conclude the reading of the amendment.

The Clerk concluded the reading of the amendment.

Mr. PARRISH. Mr. Chairman, I wish to thank the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] for reserving his point of order until I could explain the necessity for this amendment. The only change that this amendment makes in the present law is that instead of fixing the compensation of the rural carriers upon the mileage basis, the Postmaster General, in his discretion, under certain circumstances of emergency, will be to fix the compensation of rural carriers upon the basis of the time occupied in carrying the mail, the weight of the mail to be handled, and the other conditions that surround the carrier. In practically every county in my district we have an unusual oil development. The first thing that happens when we have an oil boom is that the mail gets heavier, then the heavy traffic over the roads, the hauling of pipe and tanks, and so forth, cut the roads to pieces, and the mail carrier that once carried the mail on a 25-mile route in three or four hours finds himself forced to labor from sunup to sundown in order to handle the increased mail over a road that in many cases are impassible and unfit to travel over. You may say, why do not the people of the county fix up the roads, but our answer to that is that in some sections they can not fix up the roads so as to permit the heavy travel, because they are dirt roads. We do not ask any additional appropriation in this amendment. I simply ask that the Postmaster General be permitted in cases, such as I refer to, to render simple justice to the rural carriers who are now engaged in carrying the mail. We want the mail to go to all of our people, and I dare say that the purpose of the distinguished gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEENERSON], the chairman of the committee, and of every man on the committee is to serve the people efficiently and regularly with the mail. Unless this amendment be adopted, or some other amendment which would give relief, portions of my district will not be so served. The service has already broken down in many instances. I have one town in a county in my district where four rural mails go out. Three of them are absolutely down, and a large number of people do not get their mail oftener than once a week. There is no way under the provisions of the present law by which, the Postmaster General tells me, they can possibly take care of those conditions. I have two carriers at another place that are quitting just now, and I have carriers at two other places who are quitting, and no one can blame them. In fact, unless there is some relief, you are going to find that in sections where these conditions prevail, for which we are not responsible, will soon be without any mail carriers. Of course, we welcome the conditions that exists there, as all people would welcome them, and now ask for some provision to take care of the situation. Some may say that it will put an unusual burden on the Government to take care of these extraordinary conditions, but my reply is that from our section of the country there will probably be as many as 20 men who will pay an income and excess-profits tax of approximately $1,000,000 this year, and hundreds of others will pay a very large income and excess-profits tax, which goes into the public service, and if we are thus paying for the service, if we are going to give to you a large part of our earnings, may we not appeal to you to give to us in return a mail service that will carry the mail to every citizen in the district, and that will deal fairly with the men who are carrying the mail for us?

I am not acting unadvisedly in this matter. The Postmaster General has had the subject up before. Time and again I have put it up to his department and time and again I have been met with the objections that I am giving to you this evening. He spoke as follows in his recommendation to Congress in his report in 1915–16:

The joint resolution of Congress approved March 4, 1915, prescribed that the pay of rural carriers should be based solely on the length of the routes served, but gave no consideration to such important factors as the number of pieces and the weight of the mail handled and the time required to serve the routes. The present basis of pay is, therefore, not equitable, and the law should be changed so as to make it possible to equalize the compensation of these employees, it being believed that carriers who are handling large quantities of mail and whose tour of duty covers a full working day are entitled to higher rates of pay than those carriers who handle only a few dozen pieces of mail each day and are able to complete service within three or four hours. Legislation to remedy this condition should provide administrative leeway that will permit of the continued extension of mail facilities, and should allow compensation that will be adequate to meet any unusual condition or emergency that may arise. A draft of the legislation recommended appears on page 62 of this report.

In conclusion, may I not say that I trust some provisions will be made to take care of the public generally, and that will follow the golden rule of common justice in compensating the men who are struggling in the face of so many obstacles to carry the mails and care for their families.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois makes the point of order. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call attention to this paragraph. The rural service probably has had more remarkable growth than any other service in the Post Office Department. It was first established in 1897. That year there were 82 experimental routes, and it cost the Government $14,840. The next year there were 153 routes, and in 1899 there were 412, and in 1900, 1,259. From that time the growth was rapid, and the highest number of rural routes we had was in 1915, when there were 43,866 routes. From that time the routes have been slightly decreased. I do not rise to criticize that part so much. The number of routes we had in 1919 was 43,210, and they cost us $65,448,230 to operate them. In this bill for the next fiscal year the appropriation provides for $78,000,000. Since 1915, including that year, the Post Office Department at different times undertook to discontinue and revise routes. In some cases undoubtedly they were justified. In many places the way in which they proceeded to make the revisions and discontinuances met with as much criticism as the revisions and the discontinuances themselves. May 1 last the Post Office Department undertook a revision of rural routes in the State of New York. I was appointed a member of the subcommittee to investigate the manner in which the Post Office Department proceeded in revising and discontinuing certain routes up there. The committee had extended hearings. I prepared a statement, my own statement, of my own findings and conclusions as to the manner in which the Post Office Department proceeded and the judgment or lack of judgment which they exercised up there in New York in making those discontinuances and revisions, and, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by inserting my own statement of that hearing in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I was not at the moment attentive to the latter part of the gentleman's request.

Mr. RAMSEYER. The gentleman should have been.

Mr. BLACK. Was it the report of this New York investigation to which the gentleman referred?

Mr. RAMSEYER. It is my own statement and my own conclusions, not that of the subcommittee.

Mr. BLACK. And has no connection with any of the findings of the committee?

Mr. RAMSEYER. None whatever.

Mr. BLACK. But the gentleman's own statement?

Mr. RAMSEYER. My own personal findings and conclusions.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. RAMSEYER. The statement referred to, Mr. Chairman, is as follows:

Last July a special subcommittee of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads was appointed to hold hearings on House joint resolution 33, a resolution introduced by Mr. GOULD, of New York, and which is as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Postmaster General be, and he is hereby, directed to suspend the operation of all orders issued by him or by any official of the Post Office Department, effective as of the dates of May 1, 1919, and June 1, 1919, respectively, changing or altering rural delivery routes; and the Postmaster General is hereby further directed to restore to their former status rural delivery routes changed or altered by orders of the Post Office Department effective as of the date of May 1, 1919.

The subcommittee held public hearings July 8 and 9, 1919, and the following persons appeared and testified: Hon. NORMAN J. GOULD, a Representative from the State of New York; Hon. GEORGE H. MOSES, United States Senator from the State of New Hampshire; Mr. S. J. Lowell, master of the New York State Grange, Fredonia, N. Y.; Mr. H. E. Babcock, secretary of the New York State Federation of County Farm Bureaus' Association, Ithaca, N. Y.; Mr. W. N. Giles, secretary of the New York State Grange; Mr. C. Fred Boshart, president of the New York State Agricultural Society; Mr. Leslie R. Smith, master of the Massachusetts State Grange; Mr. John A. McSparren, master of the Pennsylvania State Grange; Hon. WALTER W. MAGEE, a Representative in Congress from the State of New York; Hon. James I. Blakslee, Fourth Assistant Postmaster General; Mr. W. J. Satterfield, post-office inspector; Mr. John J. Kessel, postmaster, Syracuse, N. Y.; Mr. William Nacey, postmaster, Oswego, N. Y.; Mr. D. E. Sullivan, postmaster, Canton, N. Y.; Mr. L. G. Quackenbush, postmaster, Oneida, N. Y.; Mr. J. M. Dwyer, postmaster, Geneseo, N. Y.; Mr. J. W. McKnight, postmaster, Castleton, N. Y.; Mr. Thomas J. Gallagher, postmaster, Geneva, N. Y.; Mr. William C. Brigham, post-office inspector; Mr. L. M. Dow, chief clerk office of the Fourth Assistant Postmaster General; Hon. LUTHER W. MOTT, a Representative in Congress from New York.

On behalf of the Post Office Department, Hon. James I. Blakslee, Fourth Assistant Postmaster General, was present during the entire hearing and was permitted to cross-examine the witnesses and to make statements and explanations.

By an order effective May 1, 1919, the Post Office Department made changes and extensions in the rural routes of New York State and discontinued quite a number of the routes—50 in all. This order resulted in widespread dissatisfaction among the rural patrons in that State, which was amply shown by 12,000 signed protests, petitions, and complaints, together with hundreds of letters of protest. May 18 last, representatives of the rural-route patrons affected by these changes appeared before the Postmaster General in the city of Washington and presented their views and protests.

Following the hearings before the Postmaster General the department sent its inspectors into the counties of New York from whence the protests came. Meetings were advertised and held in a number of counties, at which meetings the inspectors heard the complaints of the rural-route patrons affected by the changes. As a result of this action quite a number of routes were rectified and restored to meet the wishes and needs of the rural-route patrons before the time of the hearings by this subcommittee on July 8 and 9.

As an illustration of how the department proceeded in the rural-route reorganization in its order effective May 1, and to restore routes after the protests were sent in and the hearing held before the Postmaster General of this city, I cite Oswego County, N. Y.

By the order effective May 1 a number of the routes were reorganized and 11 routes were discontinued in that county. The changes were made, without consulting any of the patrons, on maps in the department and such limited information as the department had in its possession. After this order of May 1 went into effect there was great dissatisfaction among the rural-route patrons of the county. Prior to May 1 the postmaster at Oswego was not consulted about any of the changes, but he was informed about a year before that time that the department contemplated changes. After hearings in the office of the Postmaster General, May 18, Mr. Brigham, one of the inspectors, was sent to that particular county to hold a meeting at Oswego where 150 rural-route patrons were present. It appears that Mr. Brigham made a thorough investigation. He consulted farmers who were aggrieved by the changes, called in road workers to ascertain the condition of the roads, consulted representatives of the Weather Bureau as to climatic conditions, and conferred with the leading people in that county. He recommended certain readjustments and the restoration of 7 of the 11 routes that had been discontinued, and the department acted upon his recommendation. I feel disposed to commend the fair hearings and the thorough investigation conducted by Mr. Brigham.

What I do criticize in the Post Office Department is that the department does not conduct such hearings and investigations before it undertakes to make wholesale orders changing and discontinuing routes. I feel that it would be entirely practical before ordering any readjustment of rural routes to conduct such hearings and investigations by the department. Certainly such hearings and investigations would be just as practical before the readjustments are ordered as they are after complaints and protests are made as a consequence of such readjustments. And if the department would adopt as its policy to hear and consult rural-route patrons, road workers, persons familiar with climatic conditions, and others interested in the readjustment, it would thereby remove much of the friction that has heretofore existed between the Post Office Department and the rural-route patrons of the country.

What the rural-route patrons of the State of New York, as well as the patrons of other States of the Union, want is nothing more nor less than what the Postmaster General has himself defined as satisfactory mail service, and to which he admits the rural patrons are entitled, to wit:

(1) Reasonably prompt mail delivery, even in bad weather.

(2) Mail to go out from post office the day collected on route.
(3) A minimum of inconvenience through the change of established addresses from established post offices.
(4) That the post office cooperate to maintain the life and organization of the established communities.
(5) In the future 100 per cent delivery of mail at the door.
(6) Cooperation of post-office officials with farmers' organizations.

Other inspectors were sent into the other counties of the State of New York from which complaints and protests had come. As a result of the reports of the inspectors many routes which were changed and discontinued by the order of May 1 were readjusted and restored, so that at the date of the hearings of this subcommittee, July 8 and 9, the dissatisfaction among the rural-route patrons was not as great as it was immediately following May 1. Furthermore, the Post Office Department assured the subcommittee that the complaints and protests from other parts of the State would receive careful consideration, and that other investigations would be made, and that further changes and restorations in the routes were in contemplation in order to satisfy the rural patrons with more adequate and satisfactory mail service.

In my judgment many of the changes made by the order of May 1 were ill considered and ill advised. The manner of making changes has caused quite as much complaint as the changes themselves. Frequently changes are made from maps in the department without knowledge of topographic and climatic conditions and without regard to the life and organization of the established communities. Seldom, if ever, are the patrons consulted about the contemplated changes. Because of the failure of the Post Office Department to consult the wishes and interests of its rural patrons and because of the aloofness of the Post Office Department, rural-route patrons live in a state of constant apprehension and uneasiness lest their mail service be curtailed or taken away from them entirely.

Personally I do not feel that it would be wise to take away from the Post Office Department the power to administer the rural routes or to change them when such changes become necessary to extend and improve the service. I am sure that by a closer study of conditions by the Post Office Department, and by consulting the rural-route patrons themselves before changes are ordered, most of the friction and misunderstanding between the department and patrons could have been avoided in the past. The constant failure to carefully study conditions and to consult the wishes and interests of rural-route patrons before ordering changes, in my opinion, deserves special censure and condemnation.

The Clerk read as follows:

For village delivery service in towns and villages having post offices of the second or third class, and in communities adjacent to cities having city delivery, including increases hereinafter provided, $1,200,000.

Mr. GRIEST. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 22, line 20, strike out the figure "2" and insert in lieu thereof the figure "3," so that the amount appropriated will be $1,300,000 instead of $1,200,000.

Mr. GRIEST. Mr. Chairman, this change is authorized by the committee. It does not increase the appropriation which was recommended by the department nor that which was adopted by the committee. It is an error in computation or in printing, I do not know which, and occurred in calculating the two bonuses heretofore authorized by Congress.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For conducting experiments in the operation of motor vehicle truck routes; also for experiments in the operation of country motor express routes, which shall be operated primarily as a means of expediting the transportation of fourth-class mail between producing and consuming localities, and shall not displace nor supplant any existing methods of mail transportation or delivery, which two classes of experiments shall be conducted hereafter under such rules and regulations, including modifications in rates of postage, limit of weight and size, and wrapping and packing requirements, as the Postmaster General may prescribe, $300,000.

Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment just read.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas makes the point of order. The gentleman will state the point of order.

Mr. TINCHER. That it is new legislation. I think the Chairman passed on the proposition involved in this point of order on a point of order previously this afternoon. The only excuse the committee can have for carrying this without a special rule is that they have carried without legislation such an item before, and the Chair clearly passed upon the proposition in the ruling before. There is no legislation authorizing the appropriation.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard on the point of order. Mr. Chairman, the point of order that has been made is that this is new legislation, and the Chair will note the provision is one which, by the way, has been carried in three separate appropriation bills in the same language, providing for two things: First, it provides for expediting the transportation of fourth-class mail matter. I admit it also provides for the use of motor vehicles, but the purpose of the provision is to provide an effectual method through which fourth-class mail shall be carried between producing and consuming localities. The second provision——

Mr. BEE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. If the gentleman will permit me to finish the statement. The second provision is that the Postmaster General shall be given the power to make modifications in rates of postage, limit of weight and size, and wrapping and packing requirements as he may prescribe. Now, these two provisions are not new legislation. They have not only been carried in three separate appropriation bills but the law of 1913, enacted August 24, 1912, Public Law, No. 326, contains this provision:

SEC. 8. That hereafter fourth-class mail matter shall embrace all other matter, including farm and factory products, not now embraced by law in either the first, second, or third class, not exceeding 11 pounds in weight, nor greater in size than 72 inches in length and girth combined, nor in form or kind likely to injure the person of any postal employee or damage the mail equipment or other mail matter not of a character perishable within a period reasonably required for transportation and delivery.

And further:

The classification of articles mailable as well as the weight limit, the rates of postage, zone, or zones, and other conditions of mailability under this act, if the Postmaster General shall find on experience that they or any of them are such as to prevent the shipment of articles desirable, or to permanently render the cost of the service greater than the receipts of the revenue therefrom, he is hereby authorized, subject to the consent of the Interstate Commerce Commission after investigation, to reform from time to time such classification, weight limit, rates, zone or zones, or conditions, or either, in order to promote the service to the public or to insure the receipt of revenue from such service adequate to pay the cost thereof.

I now yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BEE. I want to ask the gentleman if the effect of striking out this paragraph will not be to stop experiments in reference to carrying farm products from the farm to the consumer?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Certainly.

Mr. BEE. And thus help the distribution of farm crops to the consumer in the city?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I maintain, Mr. Chairman, that the act of 1912 has covered both of the provisions which are taken up in this paragraph. It is possible to introduce in an appropriation bill a provision which continues a public project. This experiment has been continuing for three years; the motor trucks are now running. Five motor-truck routes have been established in conformity with the provisions of the bill of last year. They are now being operated between the city of Washington and the producing territory. They are in operation, and the project is a continuing one.

Mr. TINCHER. Has the gentleman read the summary and conclusion of the committee that investigated these five routes and their condemnation of them?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I have, Mr. Chairman; and I will be delighted to discuss that on its merits. But the gentleman has made a point of order against the provision. If sustained, there will be no real opportunity to discuss it on its merits. I maintain his point of order does not lie against the provision, because there is legislation covering every detail of this paragraph, which provides for expediting fourth-class matter under this experiment, and that the Postmaster General may modify rates and conditions and manner of shipping in order to carry out that purpose effectively. Similar legislation has already been passed. Further, it is a continuing project that has been going on for three years in a successful manner.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. If the law now provides for the rates of postage, limit of weights and size, and wrapping and packing requirements, and so forth, what is the purpose of carrying that in this bill?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I do not think it is necessary in this bill, but I do say it is not out of order, we having passed such legislation in 1912. It certainly is not out of order to reenact legislation with the same meaning.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. It is not out of order to include the exact language of existing legislation into law. It is out of order to include the meaning in other language. The rulings are quite clear on that point.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Where the meaning is exactly the same, then it is simply unnecessary legislation, not out of order.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. If the meaning be the same, then it must be expressed in the same words. Otherwise it is a change of law. There are numerous rulings covering that question.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I wish the Chair would take into consideration the fact that the original parcel-post legislation carried the language of this provision; that this paragraph, in its essentials, has been enacted several times in the Post Office appropriation bill, and that the work is a continuing project. I contend that, therefore, under the rules this provision is in order and that the point of order of the gentleman does not lie against it.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield for just a question?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I will.

Mr. BLANTON. Does the gentleman realize that under this very provision the Post Office Department is to-day delivering Irish potatoes to the people of Washington for $1.30 a bushel direct from the farm? It is doing it under this very section.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I would like to discuss the merits of the proposition, but that does not come into consideration on the point of order.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say that my office telephoned the department about that potato stuff, and they say they can not deliver at less than $2 a bushel.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, while I am inclined to think the Government might properly make this experiment and this item might be placed in the bill properly, as it is expressed now, it seems to me, it is clearly subject to a point of order. The fact that it has been included in various appropriation bills heretofore enacted does not make it in order now, even the appropriation, unless it is otherwise authorized by law, and would not make in order any change of legislation, because the appropriation acts heretofore are only in force for the fiscal year for which the appropriation is made. Nor is it a continuing work in progress. The decisions are universal upon that point. It does not relate to anything except the construction—some thing, not an idea. Now, this language of the bill expressly provides that this experiment shall be conducted hereafter under such rules and regulations, including modifications in rates of postage, limit of weight and size, and wrapping and packing requirements, as the Postmaster General may prescribe. That is a change of law. That is legislation giving to the Postmaster General authority which he would not otherwise have. Now, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLY] says that the Postmaster General practically has that authority under existing law. Well, if that be the case, of course it is not necessary to have it included here. But the rulings are that existing law may be carried in an appropriation bill in the exact language, without the change of a word; but the language can not be changed, because otherwise there is a change in the law.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, just one suggestion: This same provision, practically, was in the law last year, but there has been this one notable change: In the current law the provision says that these two classes of experiments shall be conducted under such rules and regulations, and so forth. In the bill before us the word "hereafter" has been added, very apparently to make it permanent law. It was not done before.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule.

The language of the acts to which the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLY] referred, namely, those pertaining to the parcel post, in the view of the Chair are not sufficient to sustain the contention that in this act we can carry language providing for the operation of motor vehicle truck routes, and so forth. And, as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has well said, the carrying of this item in the annual appropriation bill is not sufficient justification, if the point of order be made at the time the appropriation is pending, against the language seeking to provide for the continuation of the experiment. Furthermore, as the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON] has pointed out, it is apparently sought to make this permanent law by inserting the word "hereafter." Neither can the language be justified on the ground that it is a continuation of a public work.

The Chair therefore sustains the point of order, and the Clerk will read.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Virginia rise?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I wish to offer an amendment to that section to the effect that the word "hereafter" be stricken out.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia: Page 22, after line 20, insert the following as a new paragraph:

"For conducting experiments in the operation of motor vehicle truck routes; also for experiments in the operation of country motor express routes, which shall be operated primarily as a means of expediting the transportation of fourth-class mail between producing and consuming localities and shall not displace or supplant any existing methods of mail transportation or delivery, which two classes of experiments shall be conducted under such rules and regulations, including modifications in rates of postage, limit of weight and size, and wrapping and packing requirements, as the Postmaster General may prescribe, $300,000.

Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas makes a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, that amendment is offered with an elimination of the language that was urged to be sufficient to make it permanent law. I think that language that is now offered there just brings it under the general authority.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Kansas desire to discuss the point of order?

Mr. TINCHER. As I understand it, the amendment comes within the same ruling as that which the Chair has just made.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that the elimination of the word "hereafter," while it excludes the objection urged when the previous point of order was made, making it permanent law, it does not make it free from the contention made in the point of order, that there is no warrant of law for conducting these experiments to be operated under the regulations set forth by the Postmaster General in conducting the Parcels Post Service. The Chair therefore sustains the point of order. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For travel and miscellaneous expenses in the Postal Service, office of the Fourth Assistant Postmaster General, $1,000.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I regret exceedingly that the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. TINCHER] has seen fit to press the point of order against this provision, which to my mind is one of the most beneficial in this entire measure. It means a blow against the high cost of living, and anything which will help to reduce the skyrocketing prices of food products deserves the earnest support of every Member of this body.

The plan embodied in the provision is the use of the greatest distributing force in America, the Postal Service, to bring producer and consumer together, to benefit both of them by eliminating wasteful and extravagant methods.

In the present high cost of living, which has become a flaming question in every part of this country, there are two elements, the cost of production and the cost of distribution. I maintain that there is more waste in distribution than in production, and that angle of the question should have constructive consideration.

The very fact that there is to-day 1 distributor for every 16 consumers shows the extent of the charges which must be assessed against the distribution of all products.

Let us take that humble but important article of food, the potato. It occupies second place, by weight, in the average budget of the American family. The producer must plant, attend, and harvest his crop, besides taking all the risks of bad weather, insect pests, plant disease, and so forth. It would be natural to assume that the task of carrying the potatoes from the farm to the pantry should cost only a small fraction of that involved in the production of those potatoes.

But the reports of the Bureau of Labor Statistics, Department of Labor, and the Bureau of Crop Estimates, Department of Agriculture, show that for the entire year of 1919 the producer of potatoes received $1.27 per bushel at the farm. To distribute those potatoes to the consumer cost 97 cents a bushel.

Now, through the use of this motor-truck service of the Post Office Department, that distribution cost can be cut to 35 cents a bushel, or 64 per cent of the present cost can be saved.

The average retail price for potatoes during the year 1919 was $2.24 a bushel. This saving would mean a price of $1.62 a bushel, which is less than the 1914 price level, taking into consideration the increase in wages during the same period.

We are pointing back now with regret to the prices of that far-off day of 1914, before the Great War wrecked all our complex industrial and international relationships. Here is a method of getting back to 1914 price levels on farm products by eliminating wasteful distribution alone. It can be done by this saving alone and without reducing the farmer's price one cent.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I will, with pleasure.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I wanted to ask the gentleman if the Post Office Department has not ascertained that this experiment is a great success and greatly promotes the interest of the consumer and is just as feasible in transporting goods to Washington City as anywhere else in the country?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Absolutely. Common sense shows that the agency which can reduce distributing costs 64 per cent by bringing producer and consumer in direct contact will benefit both, and when the Postal Service stops at the door of every producer and consumer in America there should be no doubt that it is possible to extend this plan on a nation-wide scale.

I think the Post Office Committee should have had a comprehensive survey made and that the experiment which has been going on here in Washington should have been greatly extended in this bill.

The experiment part of this program is over. It is a fact that here is a feasible plan by which the excessively high price of food products may be reduced to a point where the necessaries of life will no longer be luxuries in the average home.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. I want to say to the gentleman that all the deliveries made under this service were made to middlemen, and the middlemen got all the profit there was from it. No consumer anywhere got any advantage from it.

Mr. BEE. No; the gentleman is wrong about that.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] is entirely mistaken in that statement, and I know it from personal knowledge.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. I want to say that the authorities of the Post Office Department themselves say that they make the deliveries to middlemen and not to anybody else.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Oh, Mr. Chairman, at this moment one of these motor trucks is coming in from Pennsylvania farm territory, where it picked up its load of farm products. It will deliver its shipments to the Park View community center in Washington, and every pound will be delivered direct to the ultimate consumer. Not a single cent will be added to the cost at the farm and the parcel-post charge. I have myself bought many farm products in this way and know the savings which can be effected.

Even when the goods are delivered to the middleman—and no one suggests eliminating any middleman who performs needed service—the saving in transportation can and should be reflected in reduced prices to the consumer.

I maintain, Mr. Chairman, that this plan has within it possibilities for a constructive solution of the high cost of living problem. It is to be very much regretted that one Member strikes it down by a technical point of order. I am sure it should have been voted on and I am confident that it would have been enacted by a large majority.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time may be extended two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I should like to ask a question for information. If this system has been in force for three years and the cost of potatoes to the consumer is one-half the ordinary retail cost, why do not people buy potatoes under this system? How many bushels of potatoes have been sold in the District of Columbia under this system within the past year?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. There have been a few thousand bushels of potatoes brought here and distributed under this system, and vast additional quantities could have been disposed of at the reduced prices if they could have been transported. Under the appropriation of $300,000 for the year it was only possible to operate five motor-truck routes and four country-express routes. These connected the city of Washington with the producing territory adjacent. Of course, the amount of produce brought here with such limited facilities had very little effect upon the market price; but if sufficient quantities were brought in, it would break the market on every farm product and very likely would also break some of the food profiteers who are exploiting the people.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Five motor trucks will bring a great many more potatoes into Washington than are consumed in the course of a year, will they not?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. No; I think not.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. They could.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I think the consumption of potatoes in the city of Washington would surprise the gentleman. The recent "Food Budget" prepared by the Bureau of Labor Statistics states that the potato supply of the average family amounts to 12½ bushels a year. That would mean 1,250,000 bushels for the 100,000 families in the District. In other words, the potato requirements for Washington City are 32,500 tons a year. That means that 108 tons must be carried every working day in the year. You can figure how many trucks would be required to transport this one item of potatoes alone. Five 1 or 2 ton trucks, which carry many other articles besides potatoes, can not make much of a dent in the market. I would like to see a whole fleet of the trucks which are rotting away in Army transport camps put on the roads right now to carry products from the producer to the consumer.

Mr. BLANTON. Was this point of order authorized by the gentleman's steering committee?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. The gentleman from Kansas made the point of order on his own responsibility, I assume, and I regret exceedingly that he has done so.

Mr. KREIDER. Will my colleague yield?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I yield to my colleague for a question.

Mr. KREIDER. The statement has been made that $300,000 is only sufficient to run five motor trucks. Does the gentleman mean to say that it costs $60,000 a year to run a truck?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Oh, no. I mean to say that the present parcel post rates will pay for all expenses in transporting these farm products from producer to consumer and make a profit for the Government, besides greatly reducing the price to the consumer. For instance, the report printed in the hearings shows that the total expenses for operating the five motor trucks from July 1, 1919, to September 30, 1919, a period of three months, was $14,588.14. That includes all indirect expenses as well as direct charges. The postal receipts were $52,067.41 for the same period, or a profit of $37,479.27.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two additional minutes.

Mr. STEENERSON. I hope we may be able to proceed with the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that his time be extended two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ROUSE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. ROUSE. I will ask the gentleman if he knows what the retail price of potatoes is to-day in the city of Washington?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I stated that the average price for the year 1919 was $2.24 a bushel, but I believe the price to-day is $2.50 to $3 a bushel.

Mr. ROUSE. I want to say to the gentleman that day before yesterday I gave the chief clerk to the Assistant Postmaster General a $2 bill and he delivered a bushel of potatoes at my house yesterday afternoon.

Mr. STEENERSON. At $2 a bushel?

Mr. ROUSE. Yes.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. That is this plan in a nutshell, and its great possibilities certainly should appeal to every man who honestly wants to reduce the high cost of living.

Mr. Chairman, if we could transport by means of motor trucks in the Postal Service the 108 tons of potatoes used every day in this city it would save over a million dollars to the consumers in this one city on this one food item. There is nothing to prevent it as a practical question. The producing territory within the first parcel-post zone from Washington produces that quantity of potatoes and more. We have the trucks rotting away in open fields. It is a shame that they are not being used in this highly important service.

Other farm products could be handled in the same manner. It costs 18 cents a pound, in the ordinary wasteful method of distribution, to get butter from the producer to the consumer. By the motor-truck service of the Post Office Department it is carried at 1½ cents a pound, a saving of 92 per cent. It costs 19 cents a dozen to get eggs from producer to consumer under the old plan, while it is done for 2 cents by the motor-truck service, a saving of 89 per cent.

And remember, this calculation does not include a single cent reduction to the farmer. He will get more than he now receives from commission merchants and the consumer will have a large saving.

Taking official averages for 1919, the consumer would have paid $1.62 a bushel for potatoes carried under this plan instead of $2.24 a bushel. Instead of paying 68 cents a pound for butter he would have paid 52 cents. Instead of paying 63 cents a dozen for eggs he would have paid 45 cents.

In the city of Washington alone the butter bill could be cut down $1,300,000 by this sensible use of the one great national distributing system—the Postal Service. I am using the figures of the Bureau of Labor Statistics, which puts the amount of butter required by the average family at 80.3 pounds.

Using the same figures, the egg supply for the average family is 68 dozen a year. That means that Washington City requires 6,800,000 dozen, and the saving effected by this method of distribution would be $1,140,000.

These are only three staples, and on them alone there could be a saving of $3,000,000 for the people of this one city by the efficient use of the Postal Service. At the same time that service would be netting large revenues for the Treasury of the United States. Is there anyone who will say that a plan so full of benefit to all concerned should not be encouraged to the fullest extent?

Mr. Chairman, the estimate of the Government bureau for the cost of the food budget complete, for the average family under the conditions which prevailed in 1919, was $756. That means a yearly expenditure for food of $15,900,000,000 by the 21,000,000 families of America. I have pointed out that this direct communication in the distribution of three food staples means a saving of 27 per cent of the price. A saving of 27 per cent on food prices alone would make a total saving to the American people in a single year of $4,300,000,000.

Think of the possibility of this common-sense use of a public agency of distribution, and then measure the responsibility of representatives of the people who oppose it.

Mr. Chairman, I have pointed out on this floor from time to time during the past three years that there are certain difficulties in the operation of the parcel-post system before any such results as these will be obtained. I have already explained the method by which they can be overcome.

The one great handicap is the practical impossibility of the city-dwelling consumer getting in direct touch with the producer in the country. They do not know each other. Even if they did, the extra work required of the farmer in packing his eggs in 1-dozen cartons, his butter in 1-pound packages, his potatoes in small quantities, and the extensive bookkeeping and collecting system it would entail, would prevent most producers using the method.

That is where cooperation among consumers is required. Farm products must be bought in wholesale lots and distributed to the consumers in retail lots, and some organization among the consumers is essential.

That difficulty has been met and overcome with splendid success in several communities in this city, notably the Park View community. There the center of distribution is the public-school building, owned by all the people. In that building is situated a substation of the post office. The agent of the people of the community, elected by them, is Sergt. Olnton Miller, a veteran who served through the Great War as a member of the Motor Transport Corps. He was engaged then in getting food supplies up to the soldiers in the front so that they might smash the Prussian power. He is engaged now in getting food supplies direct to the people of America, with the hands of toll-taking profiteers removed. He is using the lessons learned in fighting the Hun in the great fight here against hunger.

Sergt. Miller, whose first name is a combination of the last syllables in the names Washington and Lincoln, is both the agent of the people, elected by them, and the appointed representative of the Post Office Department. He connects the community with the National Government, and the same thing can be carried out in every district in America.

He acts as buying agent for the people; orders the farm products from the producer and distributes them to the consumers. He is paid both by the community and by the Post Office Department, and he attends to the business of both. "What is everybody's business is nobody's business," but the whole community of Park View has one man on the job in their service, looking after their business, and the results attained are most gratifying to every believer in the ability of Americans to cooperate in efforts for the common good.

This Park View community center is to-day doing a business around $5,000 a month. Last Christmas 2,000 pounds of turkey went direct to the consumers, after being carried by the motor-truck postal service, at a price of 52 cents a pound, when every market in Washington asked 75 and 80 cents a pound.

The surplus ducks raised on the old Soldiers' Home grounds this year were sold direct through this Park View center. These grounds are close to the school building, and those in charge of the Soldiers' Home had followed the experiment with interest and had full confidence based on knowledge. Those ducks were sold at 20 cents a pound less than the retail price, and the producers received a larger sum than they could secure from any dealer in Washington.

Oysters are being sold to the people at Park View at $1.75 a gallon, when the market price is $2.75 to $3 a gallon. At the same time the producers of oysters at Leonardtown are receiving more than they could receive in any other way.

Pork products come to the community center postal station on certain days each week from Mount Joy, Pa., and Leonardtown, Md., by the motor trucks of the Postal Service. The farmers have a standing order, and they know their market is certain. They get higher prices and the consumers get much lower prices through this direct dealing.

Honey is being sold there at 30 cents a pound instead of 60 cents. Apples, brought in on motor trucks of the Postal Service, are sold at 60 cents a peck, instead of $1 a peck. In fact, every article of farm produce is being daily brought by these motor trucks to this public-school building and sold direct to the consumer. Checks are sent to the producer by Sergt. Miller, and there has never been any kicks from those who market their produce in this manner.

On a visit to this community market place one day recently I saw its tremendous popularity among the people. With the greatest good nature they stood in line waiting for a chance to purchase goods. With the facilities, both in the community center and in shipping arrangements from the farm, it was impossible to meet the wants of all. However, those who were forced to go away with empty baskets declared they would come earlier and have better luck next time.

While I was there poultry, eggs, butter, pork, country dressed beef, oysters, potatoes, sweet potatoes, honey, apples, hickory nuts, jelly, and canned goods were sold to the people. I was told that every article had been carried by the motor trucks of the Post Office Department.

I could not help feeling, at sight of the savings being made by every purchaser and the evident spirit of cooperation and comradeship in evidence, that this plan of combining the two great public agencies of the public school and the Postal Service contains within it the solution not only of the problem of the high cost of living, but also of the problem of securing American unity.

The school district next to Park View is Petworth, and here the plan is being operated on exactly the same lines. The people of Petworth saw the results in the neighboring community and secured the establishment of a postal station in their school building, and they are meeting with great success also. If the people can have the benefits of the motor-truck service, I am convinced that every school district in this city will follow these leaders. Then the Capital City might well become the example for every city in this country, for the same problem which is being dealt with here, and is being solved, confronts every city in the land.

Mr. Chairman, a wise old sage once said, "The purpose of all legislation is to make more useful to the people those things from which the people are accustomed to derive benefit."

It is a profound statement and might well be considered in dealing with many problems at this moment being considered by Congress. The people are accustomed to derive benefit from their public schools and their Postal Service. Why not make them more useful to the people? The public-school plant in America is valued at $1,000,000,000. The public highways represent an investment of $11,000,000,000. The Postal Service, as measured in this bill before us, represents an annual investment of $461,000,000. Why not utilize these to their fullest extent? Why not put the motor trucks, now lying useless in the hands of the Government, on the public highways carrying the necessaries of life from producer to consumer? Why not encourage the people to organize as communities, making their own public building the capitol and market of the people, and gaining therefrom the benefits of cooperation and mutual efforts for the common good?

I hope that before this measure is finally enacted into law it will contain this provision for motor trucks in the Postal Service, and thus make these public agencies more beneficial to the people.

Mr. PAIGE. I am not familiar with what has occurred in Pennsylvania, but I know that the post-office inspector, Mr. Sutton, who went over a route which Mr. Blakslee said was profitable—a route from Portland, Me., to New York City—reported that, without a single exception, the farmers and people along that route stated that they did not patronize it; that it was of no value to them, and they took no interest whatever in it.

Mr. ROUSE. The gentleman's experience is quite different from mine.

Mr. TINCHER. I hope members of the committee will not think I raised this point of order without some consideration of this proposition. There were a number of inspectors who reported upon it, and that report is printed and I had access to it. It occurs to me that the Government of the United States is the only organization that can start an experiment and can not quit the experiment after they find that it is a failure. That is what these men report. The men who have investigated it report that it is a failure from every standpoint, and here are pages of a printed statement to that effect.

Mr. BEE. Where was that?

Mr. TINCHER. Read the hearings. I am not responsible for the statements in the hearings.

Mr. BEE. Was it in Kansas?

Mr. TINCHER. No; it never came within a thousand miles of Kansas.

Mr. BEE. That is what is the trouble, then.

Mr. TINCHER. They say in this report that they can not even rely upon the accuracy of the report you are reading from there, that the gentleman from Pennsylvania read from.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman let me read?

Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Chairman, I want to call attention to some of the items that I suppose we could not rely upon. Here is a man that had one of the trucks and he said he ran it 24,883 miles and that his tire expense was $55.66, and still that truck cost the Government $60,000 to run it last year. It is no wonder that the nine men signed a written report that this experiment was a failure. Of course, they did not want to quarrel with the Post Office Department, and they said it was all right to go on experimenting in a moderate way——

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that this is out of order, for this is water that has already gone over the wheel. The matter has been decided, and the gentleman is not speaking to anything which is now before the House.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman insists upon the point of order——

Mr. BLANTON. We want to finish this bill to-night.

Mr. TINCHER. Oh, no; the gentleman does not want to do anything of the kind. He simply does not want to hear the facts about this.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. The gentleman sat still while the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLY] addressed the House for 12 minutes and discussed this very thing.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order, if the gentleman wants to do it.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is withdrawn.

Mr. TINCHER. After expending $60,000 per truck per year, after having nine men report that they can not agree with the Assistant Postmaster General, and that this is a failure, they add the language at the end of the report that it might do to continue for the sake of experiment, but would the Congress at this time be justified, under the circumstances, in appropriating $300,000 of the people's money to continue such a thing? The Government of the United States has some rights, and the taxpayer has the right to depend upon the Congress to exercise that right to stop an experiment of that kind. That experiment has proved a failure. That is the reason I make the point of order, and the sustaining of that point of order says to the people and to the Congress that it is not properly in this bill, that the item should have come on the floor of this House in some form so that a person could have discussed its merits, and not been precluded from doing so because of the fact that it is on an appropriation bill.

Mr. BEE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TINCHER. No; I yield now to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLY].

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I know the gentleman wants to be fair, and he must admit that his own making of the point of order has prevented a discussion of it upon the merits of the proposition. I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the report suggests that we want, if possible, to remove the onerous restrictions as to weight, packing, and so forth, and issue a new rate on commodities, such as farm produce, such as they have been informed is done in foreign countries, and they believe in that way the Government could accomplish something in the way of promoting increased food production.

That is exactly the language in this provision that has gone out on a point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That the increased compensation for positions in the Postal Service of all classes and grades made and provided for in the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920," approved February 28, 1919, and House joint resolution of November 8, 1919, entitled "Joint resolution to provide for additional compensation for employees of the Postal Service, and making appropriations therefor," and the classification and grades specified in said act and resolution shall continue in force during the fiscal year 1921, unless otherwise provided by law.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 23, line 16, after the word "the," insert the following: "provisions of such acts and resolution relating to promotion."

Mr. MADDEN. That is simply to correct the text of the bill.

Mr. STEENERSON. The committee considered this amendment, and authorized the gentleman from Illinois to offer it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. That if the revenues of the Post Office Department shall be insufficient to meet the appropriations made by this act, a sum equal to such deficiency of the revenue of said department is hereby appropriated, to be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to supply said deficiencies in the revenues for the Post Office Department for the year ending June 30, 1921, and the sum needed may be advanced to the Post Office Department upon requisition of the Postmaster General.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. This finishes the appropriation bill. I simply want to say that I tender my thanks to the members of the Committee on the Post Office for their faithful and diligent work in preparing this bill. There has been no division on party lines, and everyone has done his best to make the bill as perfect as possible. The fact that there have been so few amendments outside of the committee amendments adopted shows that the work of the committee has been well done. I want to thank each and all of the members of the committee, especially the former chairman of the committee, Judge MOON, who is not here, for the service they rendered in the preparation of the bill.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEENERSON. Yes.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing an address delivered by the Postmaster General at the annual convention of the National Hardware Association, held recently at Atlantic City. It is a review of the Postal Service and is not a partisan matter.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ROUSE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in regard to the Air Service and also in reference to the Motor Truck Service.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in regard to the Air Service and the Motor Truck Service. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. PARRISH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the Post Office appropriation bill. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, I also ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the Post Office appropriation bill. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks. Is there objection?

Mr. UPSHAW. Mr. Chairman, I make the same request.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, are these requests to extend remarks upon the bill or a general extension of remarks?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks on the bill. The gentleman from Virginia did not so state.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. In connection with postal matters.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, I make the same request.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to these requests? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill to the House with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. WALSH, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having had under consideration the bill H. R. 11578, had directed him to report the same to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and amendments to final passage.

The question was taken, and the previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them in gross.

The question was taken, and the amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, the House having divided, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] In the opinion of the Chair there is no quorum present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 285, nays 0, not voting 143, as follows:

The SPEAKER. A quorum is present. The Doorkeeper will open the doors.

On motion of Mr. STEENERSON, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I am authorized to state that Mr. NEELY is unavoidably absent on official business. If present, he would vote "aye."

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may extend their remarks on this bill within five legislative days.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota asks that all Members may extend their remarks on this bill for five legislative days.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. What good comes from everybody inserting a speech, whether it is spoken or not, or whether they were here or not, or whether they were paying attention or not? I have no objection to all the gentlemen who spoke on this bill extending their remarks.

Mr. STEENERSON. I will limit the request as suggested.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman limits the request to all who spoke on the bill. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I think it ought to be granted on this condition that under this privilege the Members will include no editorials, telegrams, letters, or petitions, and things of that sort.

The SPEAKER. And with the further limitation of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH]. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I ask leave to extend my remarks on the bill just passed by inserting in the RECORD an address delivered by the Fourth Assistant Postmaster General in regard to the extension and encouragement of parcel mail, with special reference to carriage from the producer to the consumer.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. SCOTT (at the request of Mr. MAPES), indefinitely, on account of illness.

To Mr. ROMJUE (at the request of Mr. RUBEY), for 10 days, on account of sickness in family.

To Mr. DALLINGER (at the request of Mr. PAIGE), for two days, on account of illness.

To Mr. HUDSPETH, until further notice, on account of important business.

To Mr. DEWALT, for five days, on account of important business.

RESIGNATION FROM COMMITTEE.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, UNITED STATES,
Washington, D. C., January 14, 1920.

Hon. F. H. GILLETT,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. SPEAKER: I hereby tender by resignation as a member of the Committee on Accounts.

Yours, sincerely,

EWIN L. DAVIS.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. RAMSEY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that January 14 they had presented to the President of the United States, for his approval, the following bills:

H. R. 484. An act to provide for the erection of a Federal office building on the site acquired for the Subtreasury in St. Louis, Mo.; and

H. R. 7752. An act relating to detached service of officers of the Regular Army.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Friday, January 16, 1920, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a detailed statement of the refunds of customs duties for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1919 (H. Doc. No. 608); to the Committee on Ways and Means and ordered to be printed.

2. A letter from the Sergeant at Arms of the House of Representatives, transmitting a statement of receipts and disbursements of money through his hands December 1, 1918, to December 1, 1919, and a statement of property in his charge December 1, 1919; to the Committee on Accounts.

3. A letter from the Secretary of Agriculture, transmitting statement showing travel performed by officers and employees (other than those whose duties require constant travel) of the Department of Agriculture during the fiscal year 1919 from Washington to points outside of the District of Columbia (H. Doc. No. 609); to the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Agriculture and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

SENATE.

FRIDAY, January 16, 1920.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we seek Thy blessing at the beginning of a new day. When we come to the higher levels of life we come into unity of purpose and plan with God. We work together when we work with Thee. We come with our hearts open to the divine impression this morning that we may be enabled to work together with God for the betterment of this great land. Guide us in our deliberations, counsels, and efforts to bring about Thine own honor through our work. For Christ's sake. Amen.

On request of Mr. SMOOT, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of yesterday's proceedings was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Gay	McLean	Simmons
Borah	Gronna	McNary	Smith, Ga.
Brandegee	Harris	Moses	Smith, S. C.
Calder	Harrison	Nelson	Smoot
Capper	Henderson	New	Spencer
Chamberlain	Hitchcock	Norris	Sterling
Colt	Johnson, Calif.	Nugent	Sutherland
Culberson	Jones, N. Mex.	Overman	Walsh, Mass.
Cummins	Kellogg	Owen	Walsh, Mont.
Curtis	Kendrick	Phipps	Watson
Dial	Kenyon	Pomerene	Williams
Dillingham	Kirby	Sheppard
Fernald	Lodge	Sherman
Frelinghuysen	McKellar	Shields

Mr. MOSES. I announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. KEYES] on account of illness in his family, and ask that the announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. MCKELLAR. The Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] and the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] are detained by illness in their families.

The Senator from Delaware [Mr. WOLCOTT] and the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH] are absent on official business.

Mr. GAY. I wish to announce that my colleague, the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL], is necessarily absent from the Senate. I ask that this announcement stand for the day.

Mr. CURTIS. The Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], the Senator from Michigan [Mr. NEWBERRY], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. MCCORMICK], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], and the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL] are detained at a meeting of the subcommittee of the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Forty-eight Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present.

TREATY OF PEACE WITH GERMANY.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I ask to have incorporated in the RECORD the item in the Washington Post of this morning from the Associated Press, giving a synopsis of the intercollegiate vote, so far as it has been canvassed, in something over 300 colleges of the country, on the subject of the League of Nations.

I will state that this synopsis reveals the fact that so far as canvassed 46,259 students voted for unqualified ratification; 33,304 voted for a compromise between the Lodge reservations and the Democratic reservations; 23,577 voted in favor of ratification with the Lodge reservations; and 11,690 voted against ratification in any form. While the count is not completed yet, it strikes me as a very remarkable result.

A ballot with four blanks was placed before the students and faculties of something over 400 colleges of the country. The four blanks read as follows:

First. "I favor the ratification of the league and treaty without reservations and amendments."

Second. "I am opposed to ratification of the league and treaty in any form."

Third. "I favor the ratification of the treaty, but only with Lodge reservations."

Fourth. "I favor a compromise between the Lodge and the Democratic reservations in order to facilitate the ratification of the treaty."

The blank ballots were revised and approved by Senator LODGE and myself.

Two arguments in printed form were placed before the students of these colleges. One was prepared by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]; the other was prepared by me.

The argument by the Senator from Massachusetts was in favor of ratification, but only with the Lodge reservations. I did not contend for ratification without compromise; I did not contend for ratification without qualifications. I opposed the Lodge reservations, but I stated that reservations had become inevitable. The only practical question in the Senate was what reservations. I urged a compromise between the Lodge reservations and the Democratic reservations.

In spite of the fact that no argument was presented in favor of unqualified ratification, the largest vote polled, something like 45 per cent, was for unqualified ratification. About 30 per cent voted for compromise reservations, and only about 20 per cent voted for the Lodge reservations, while less than 10 per cent voted against ratification in any form.

To my mind this shows a sentiment in the country in favor of uncompromising and unqualified ratification much stronger than I had supposed it to be. It shows that among this class of young men, coming from all parts of the country and representing all classes of people, the sentiment is so strong for unqualified ratification as to cause amazement.

Mr. President, in addition to this recapitulation from the Washington Post, which I ask to have incorporated in the RECORD, I also ask to have inserted in the RECORD the form of ballot that was used and a tabulated statement showing the vote in the 19 larger colleges of the country, headed by Cornell and ending with Smith, and polling 31,876 votes; also a tabulated statement on each proposition by the faculty and by the students in all of the States of the Union, so far as they have been canvassed; and then a final summary showing the detailed vote of the students and the faculty on each of the propositions, making a total vote, as far as canvassed at the time this tabulated statement was made up yesterday, of 92,466.

I will say, by way of explanation, that the item in the paper this morning covers 114,000 votes, but it is not detailed. The tabulated statement made up yesterday morning only covers 92,466 votes and is in detail.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the request of the Senator from Nebraska is granted.

The matter referred to is as follows:

COLLEGE VOTE 45 PER CENT FOR NO RESERVATIONS.

"NEW YORK, January 15.

"Advocates of ratification of the peace treaty without amendment or reservation forged ahead to-day in the intercollegiate referendum. More than 100,000 votes have been counted, cast by the students and faculties of 475 colleges and universities. Of these, 46,259 were cast in favor of unreserved ratification and 33,304 favored ratification by compromise. The remaining vote was divided between 23,577 supporters of the Lodge reservations and 11,690 voters who did not wish the treaty ratified in any form.

"On request from Washington the intercollegiate treaty referendum committee, which is tabulating the returns here, telegraphed the results to date to-day to Senator LODGE and Senator HITCHCOCK. No returns will be received after to-morrow, and the final vote will probably be made public to-morrow night."

TREATY ELECTION RETURNS AT 5 P. M. WEDNESDAY.

"The first official reports, verified and compiled to-night at headquarters of the intercollegiate treaty referendum committee, 165 Broadway, New York City, give the national results by wire from approximately 375 colleges and universities throughout the country.

"The returns are not yet complete. The figures in the attached tables give the result of the vote in many of the larger colleges and universities and the number of votes cast in each State that has reported.

"The following was the form of the ballot used at the college polls:

INTERCOLLEGIATE TREATY REFERENDUM.

"I am in favor of one of the following propositions (vote for one):

"Proposition I. I favor the ratification of the league and treaty without reservations and amendments.

"Proposition II. I am opposed to ratification of the league and treaty in any form.

"Proposition III. I favor ratification of the treaty, but only with Lodge reservations.

"Proposition IV. I favor a compromise between the Lodge and the Democratic reservations in order to facilitate the ratification of the treaty."

Vote in larger colleges already reported.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, in this connection I think it proper to state that I have not any question of doubt that if the vote on the peace treaty with Germany had been taken one month after the treaty was presented to the Senate, out of the 114,000 referred to by the Senator from Nebraska, there would have been about 103,000 in favor of unqualified ratification of the treaty and the League of Nations. I am quite surprised to see the change of sentiment which has taken place among the students of the universities of the United States, as shown by the returns just presented by the Senator from Nebraska. It was conceded by all, and it has been stated time and time again, that not 10 per cent of the students of the universities of the United States were opposed to the ratification of the treaty as it was presented to the Senate. It now develops, however, that that percentage favoring that course has fallen from 90 per cent to 40 per cent. Therefore I can not see any great cause for jubilation upon the part of the Senator from Nebraska in the vote which he has just presented to be recorded in the RECORD, if he himself desires the ratification of the treaty as it was presented to the Senate.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I desire to say in reply to the Senator from Utah that he is mistaken in his figures. The figures never showed 90 per cent of any university in favor of the unqualified ratification of the treaty.

Mr. SMOOT. That is not what I said.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I will finish, if the Senator from Utah pleases.

The figures which I have given this morning show that for unqualified ratification and for a compromise which the Democrats desire, 79,563 have voted, and that constitutes about 75 per cent of all the votes cast. On the other hand, for the position occupied by the Republican side of the Chamber, for the Lodge reservations, only 20 per cent of the voters in the colleges cast their votes in favor of the Lodge reservations.

Mr. President, in addition I wish to have inserted in the RECORD a ballot taken by the Rochester Times-Union, of Rochester, N. Y. It was taken a few days ago and was brought to me in person by one of the representatives of the paper. It is certified as correct by the editor, Mr. Frank E. Gannett. I will say that the Rochester Times-Union is a combination of two newspapers, one Democratic and one Republican.

In favor of the ratification of the treaty without reservations the vote was 1,706; in favor of ratification of the treaty with reservations acceptable to President Wilson, 789; in favor of ratification of the treaty with the Lodge reservations, 166; in favor of a compromise on reservations, 122; in favor of the rejection of the treaty, 39.

Mr. President, I may say that that also corresponds quite closely with the poll which is now being taken by the Journal, in Portland, Oreg., and from day to day the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] has introduced those figures, which show a proportion as overwhelming in favor of the unqualified ratification of the treaty as the figures given by the Rochester Times-Union.

I defy any Senator who supports the Lodge reservations to bring into the Chamber any test vote from sources equally reliable that will show any favorable showing for the Lodge reservations. No Senator will find that in any fair test anywhere the Lodge reservations can poll more than 25 per cent of the votes cast in any test ballot.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the request of the Senator from Nebraska is granted.

The matter referred to is as follows:

TRAVEL OF EMPLOYEES OF AGRICULTURAL DEPARTMENT (H. DOC. NO. 608).

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of Agriculture, transmitting, pursuant to law, a statement showing the travel of employees of the Department of Agriculture from Washington to points outside the District of Columbia during the fiscal year 1919, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

CHESAPEAKE & POTOMAC TELEPHONE CO.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the annual report of the Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Co. for the year ended December 31, 1919, which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 11578) making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. CURTIS. I present resolutions adopted by the Legislature of Kansas relative to the return of the railroads to private control. I ask that the resolution be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

There being no objection, the resolutions were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

House resolution 10.

Whereas the President of the United States has by a proclamation declared that the railroads of the country are to be released from Government control and restored to their owners on March 1, 1920; and

Whereas there is an effort being made by certain persons and organizations favorable to Government ownership of railroads to postpone their release and to delay their return to private ownership and operation: Therefore be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of Kansas, That we oppose the further continuance of Government control of the railroads and urge our Senators and Members of Congress to insist on their prompt return to private control on March 1 next, and to oppose any further postponement.

Adopted January 9, 1920.

W. P. LAMBERTSON,
Speaker of the House.
CLARENCE W. MILLER,
Chief Clerk of the House.

Mr. CURTIS presented a memorial of Pleasant View Grange, No. 1596, Patrons of Husbandry, of Ottawa, Kans., remonstrating against the passage of the so-called Smoot land-bank bill, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. CAPPER presented a petition of Local Lodge No. 775, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, of Coffeyville, Kans., praying for the acquisition of the Mammoth Cave in Kentucky and its establishment as a national park, which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

He also presented petitions of the Friends Church of Liberal and of sundry citizens of Corning, in the State of Kansas, remonstrating against compulsory military training, which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. GRONNA. I present resolutions adopted by the General Council of the Red Lake Band of Chippewa Indians, of Minnesota, in which they request that all features pertaining to the Red Lake Band of Chippewa Indians contained in legislation now pending before Congress to aid in winding up the affairs of those Indians be eliminated, for the reason that they were not consulted and that the proposed legislation does not represent their wishes. I move that the resolutions be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. GRONNA. I also present resolutions adopted by the General Council of the Red Lake Band of Chippewa Indians, of Minnesota, stating that these Indians had designated, appointed, and authorized a delegate to proceed to Washington to represent them in all tribal matters and affairs, and so forth. I move that the resolutions be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

FORT BERTHOLD INDIANS.

Mr. SPENCER, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 4382) to confer on the Court of Claims jurisdiction to determine the respective rights of and differences between the Fort Berthold Indians and the Government of the United States, asked to be discharged from its further consideration and that it be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, which was agreed to.

THE COMMITTEE ON THE LIBRARY.

Mr. CALDER, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to which was referred Senate resolution 232, submitted by Mr. BRANDEGEE on November 18, 1919, reported it favorably without amendment, and it was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Library, or any subcommittee thereof, be, and hereby is, authorized during the Sixty-sixth Congress to send for persons, books, and papers; to administer oaths, and to employ a stenographer, at a cost not exceeding $1 per printed page, to report such hearings as may be had in connection with any subject which may be before said committee, the expenses thereof to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate, and that the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, may sit during the sessions or recesses of the Senate.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. GRONNA:

A bill (S. 3735) granting an increase of pension to James A. Lucas; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. REED:

A bill (S. 3736) making appropriation for the construction and completion of an addition to the central post-office building at St. Louis, Mo.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. OWEN:

A bill (S. 3737) to carry out the provisions of an act approved July 1, 1902, known as "An act to accept, ratify, and confirm a proposed agreement submitted by the Kansas or Kaw Indians of Oklahoma, and for other purposes," and to provide for a settlement to Addie May Auld and Archie William Auld, who were enrolled as members of the said tribe after the lands and moneys of said tribe had been divided; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

GOVERNMENT STORE IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I introduce a bill which I send to the desk, and I ask the indulgence of the Senate for a few moments to explain its provisions.

The bill is a departure from the ordinary course of affairs. It provides for the creation of a joint District committee composed of the Senate Committee on the District of Columbia and the like committee of the House. The clause of it appropriating money ought to originate in the House, and I only inserted it for the purpose of directing the attention of the House to it, as well as the attention of Senators, in the hope that it will take the proper course when it is considered.

The bill provides, in substance, for the creation of a general store in the District of Columbia, together with the creation of a certain number of branch stores, for the sale of merchandise to the employees of the Government residing in the District. I am as far from socialism, probably, as any Member of the Senate, but the price of merchandise has reached the point where to the employees it is made a reason for the increase of compensation. That, in turn, calls for an increase in appropriation and becomes a part of the endless, vicious circle in the upward trend of prices. This is not a socialistic proposal. It is applying in concrete form what we already practice in the purchase of stationery and supplies from the supply stores of the two Houses of Congress.

The middleman is a useless appendage wherever he can be eliminated, anyhow. The wholesaler or jobber is not indispensable if the service can be otherwise performed.

In private enterprise there seems to be no way of eliminating a large number of middlemen. There is no reason, however, why the packers should sell to meat-market men and grocers in the District of Columbia, and especially to meat-market men who have practically no capital at stake in the business, and who net as high as eight or ten thousand dollars a year with a thousand dollars investment in a cold-storage box and a chopping block and a place to do business. A large part of that money is expended by the employees of the Government, who pay all the way from 33⅓ per cent to 200 per cent profit to these unnecessary middlemen. That in turn renders necessary—and it will be urged here, no doubt, when the Classifications Commission makes its report—an increase in compensation, and that will run literally into the hundreds of millions of dollars for the 104,000 Government employees in the District.

I propose a practical remedy. I propose that the Government shall buy at cost from wholesalers, manufacturers, producers, and jobbers and sell to the employees of the Government in the District at cost. That is one way of bringing the prices to a legitimate level. It is another way of notifying several middlemen that their services can be dispensed with, and that the Government will enter upon a course here in the District which will either curb their profits or dispense with their occupation entirely.

If these several gentlemen concerned, like Othello, find their occupation gone, it will be their fault.

I think it is entirely practicable for the Government to do this, and I think the experiment ought to be made. With that end in view I introduced a bill, providing for an appropriation of a half million dollars to put it in force, and that the money arising from the sale of merchandise for cash at cost shall be covered into the Treasury and reappropriated in the annual appropriation bill for the District of Columbia. I am aware that that is not allowed in the matter of appropriations, but I am offering it here for the purpose of calling the attention of the House District Committee and its members to the proposition, and further, that when some appropriation bill may be pending here I can properly offer this bill as an amendment, and it will then be in order.

I again notify the dealers of this District that they are profiteering upon helpless Government employees to a degree that ought not to be longer tolerated without some practical action upon the part of Congress.

Every once in a while I hear gentlemen here, before committees and elsewhere, asking for the creation of a State out of the District of Columbia. I am willing to give them the right to elect Delegates so that on the floor of each House of Congress they may have their interests properly presented, as nobody now particularly represents the District outside of the District Committees. But I notify these gentlemen that the creation of a State would afford a degree of independence of the control of the District in such matters as I propose in this bill that might be carried to a very dangerous extent. As it is now, Congress governs the District of Columbia because Washington is the Capital City, and was created for that purpose and for no other. It was not created as a place where middlemen and merchants could congregate for the purpose of preying upon the residents, as a predatory occupation that has risen to the dignity here of the grossest form of profiteering upon the employees of the Government who are compelled to live in the District and render service to the Government.

Washington being in the control of Congress as a Capital City, and as a District area in which we have full power, there can be no question about the right of Congress to engage in such an enterprise, and if profiteering landlords and profiteering retail merchants think this District and the Government employees are helpless to be relieved, I propose to call into exercise the powers of the Government in this way to bring them to their senses.

I will state, Mr. President, that if the Ball Act, known as the landlord and rent regulation act, should be attacked as a part of this series of measures, I shall propose an occupation tax upon the various occupations in this District, the proceeds of that occupation tax to be kept as a separate fund to relieve cases of hardships caused by eviction.

Only a few days ago, here in the District of Columbia, a rear admiral of the Navy, known as Rear Admiral Grayson, evicted a tenant from one of his rented properties and put her upon the street because she would not pay an advanced rent. I commend that to the public in Washington for their respectful consideration, as showing that the profiteers begin with Government officers and go all along through the line; and with this pernicious example, what right have we to rebuke the profiteer in private life who preys upon helpless tenants?

Another thing, Mr. President, a judicial officer having jurisdiction when the Ball rent act shall be attacked by property owners who claim the right to a certain degree of profit, before whom they will necessarily go for a hearing, or some one of his associate judges, has been reported by credible authority from credible sources to me, to have said that the Ball rent act is not worth the paper it is written upon, as it is entirely unconstitutional. With no case brought before him, no pending controversy calling for the expression of a judicial opinion, he still goes so far as to prejudge it before it is before him for a hearing and for determination. If that could be established, such a judicial officer ought to be impeached by Congress and removed from office. I await further evidence upon that subject, and if I obtain satisfactory evidence, it will be presented for the consideration of the Senate as to further steps to be taken, and in the House as well.

I introduce this bill, Mr. President, and ask that it be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia. I am offering it in good faith, and I propose to devise through it and the kindred agencies some method by which a person can live and serve the Government in the District of Columbia without having his salary doubled in order that it may be a fund for the predatory cormorants who are hanging about this Capitol.

The bill (S. 3734) to create and establish a Government store in the District of Columbia was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

INTERNATIONAL FINANCIAL CONFERENCE.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I wish to call the attention of the Senate to a matter which I regard as of very great national and international importance. It is a proposal on the part of the leading business men of the United States and of the Governments of Europe for an international conference for the purpose of bringing about a readjustment of the credits of the world.

The American dollar has lost in its purchasing power in an important way during the last few years; that is, in terms of commodities, but not in terms of gold.

The reasons why the American dollar has lost in its purchasing power I wish to call to the attention of the Senate.

First, it is due to a great world shortage of commodities arising from the destruction incident to the war, the stoppage of the processes of production and distribution of goods during the war, and the extraordinary demand from Europe for the products of this country; second, great gold imports in exchange for goods, about $1,100,000,000; third, the expansion of credits in the United States. We have issued an enormous amount of bonds. Not only has the United States expanded its bond issues on a very large scale, amounting to over $26,000,000,000, but our municipalities and our States have expanded these forms of credit. Such bonds in the hands of the people are readily converted into money under our system.

The expansion of bank deposits, easily converted into money, other stocks and bonds, easily salable on the stock exchange and convertible into money, and in America these dollars are exchangeable for gold, and the holder of a note can obtain gold at his option.

The same thing has happened abroad; there has been in the Old World an expansion of credits in the form of bonds and other securities on a gigantic scale, and, still worse, a huge inflation of paper currency, no longer redeemable in gold.

As a currency increases in quantity it diminishes pro rata in its purchasing power, in its power to obtain goods by exchange of money for goods.

I call attention to the fact that the so-called resources, and liabilities as well, of the national banks have increased from $10,000,000,000 to $21,000,000,000 in the last half dozen years—since 1913. The expansion of the so-called resources, which means also liabilities, upon the part of all of the banks of the United States, including all classes of banks, have increased from $25,000,000,000 to $47,000,000,000. The same kind of expansion has been going on in Europe. Because of these factors the American dollar has lost a part of its purchasing power in America, and the purchasing power of the currency of Europe has been still further diminished, measured in terms of American gold, because of the inflation there. The German mark has gone down to from approximately 24 cents in gold to 1.8 cents in gold; the same currency in Poland is worth 0.8 of a cent; in Roumania, 0.7 of a cent; and in all other countries which have been torn by war the expansion of currency has diminished the purchasing power of that currency, as with the French franc and the Italian lire; so that when you come to exchange these forms of currency for the American dollar the exchange rate has gone down so severely that the pound sterling, which has always been regarded as the standard currency of the world, if I may use such an expression. The pound sterling is bringing $3.73 instead of $4.86; the French franc, instead of exchanging 5.18 francs for $1—a dollar of this diminishing purchasing power—is exchanging at the rate of 11.50 francs for the dollar, and the Italian lire 13 and a fraction for the dollar. The consequence is that the export business of the United States—and I call the attention of the Senate to its responsibility in this matter—is being tremendously interfered with.

I have appealed from time to time to the administration to try to bring about an adjustment of this matter by an international conference, and, without pausing to read it, I place in the RECORD a letter which I addressed to the President of the United States on November 6 last, one of a series of efforts which I have made to attract the attention of the Senate and the attention of this Government to the importance of this question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the letter will be printed in the RECORD.

The letter referred to is as follows:

NOVEMBER 6, 1919.

The PRESIDENT,
The White House.

MY DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: Will you not permit me again to call your attention to the importance of stabilizing international exchange? Our excess commodity shipments over imports have fallen from six hundred millions in June to one hundred and fifty-eight millions in September. Our export houses are in distress and the exchange rates are going down to the lowest recorded point.

Francs, 9.05; lire, 11.07; sterling, 4.15.

The British sterling was sustained by a recent loan of two hundred and fifty millions placed in the United States.

British currency, French currency, Italian currency have gone through a serious inflation, and their paper money is not on a gold par basis. The Italians buying American goods must pay the present high prices plus very high transportation charges; for example, $28 a ton on coal plus twice the total in lire. It is obvious that this is ruinous to our foreign commerce with Italy and is making it impossible for our allies to get back to normal production as promptly as we had hoped.

The Europeans can not sell credits in the terms of their currency, because they are not only not on a gold basis but there is reason to fear further inflation in the absence of a declared policy to the contrary.

The gold standard is temporarily broken down and ought to be promptly restored. It can be done.

The investing public of the United States is able and would be willing to extend the credits necessary to finance our foreign exports, provided the mechanism were available and sound economic policies were declared by the Governments whose trade is involved.

The problem is well understood by many men, but apparently is not well understood by the men and officials responsible for government.

I regard this question as of the first magnitude and I respectfully request you to invite an international exchange conference to be held in Washington City with representatives of the leading nations of Europe present to meet with your representatives here.

I request that this suggestion be submitted to the Secretary of the Treasury, the governor of the Federal Reserve Board, and the Secretary of Commerce for an immediate report to you.

Yours, very respectfully,

ROBT. L. OWEN.

Mr. OWEN. I ask to place in the RECORD, without reading, the action taken in New York on the 14th of January, as reported in the New York Times of the 15th of January, in which the representative men of the United States and of Great Britain, of Holland, of Switzerland, of Denmark, Norway, and Sweden urged an international conference. In order to have the Senate realize that this is a very urgently important matter, I call the attention of the Senate to the names of some of these men, including Edwin A. Alderman, of the University of Virginia; Robert L. Brookings, of St. Louis; Cleveland H. Dodge, of New York; Charles W. Eliot, of Cambridge, Mass.; James B. Forgan, of Chicago; Arthur T. Hadley, of Yale College; Myron T. Herrick, of Cleveland; Herbert Hoover, of San Francisco; Darwin P. Kingsley, of New York, president of the New York Life Insurance Co.; George H. McFadden, a great cotton exporter of Philadelphia; A. W. Mellen, of the Mellen Bank of Pittsburgh; J. P. Morgan, of Morgan & Co., New York; George M. Reynolds, of Chicago; Elihu Root, of New York; Charles H. Sabin, of New York, president of the Guaranty Trust Co., and a large number of others.

I am not going to read the statement made by these men, but I put it in the RECORD, and I appeal to Senators who are interested in the commerce of this country to look at it and see what it means. I think it is of the greatest possible importance that the stability of the credits of the world should be brought about as speedily as possible.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. OWEN. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. GRONNA. I am aware of the fact that the Senator from Oklahoma has given this matter a great deal of study. I should be very much pleased to have the Senator outline or suggest the remedy.

Mr. OWEN. The remedy, Mr. President, is not very easy, and it is easier to ask the question than it is to answer it, but I will undertake to answer it.

Mr. GRONNA. I ask the question, and I think I have a right to ask it, for the reason that only a short time ago the Senator from Oklahoma and other Senators argued that the passage of a certain measure which was then before the Senate would remedy the situation. The Senator knows as well as I know, and perhaps better, that it has not remedied the situation.

Mr. OWEN. I prefer the Senator should not state what the Senator from Oklahoma knows, because he might exceed the mark. I will make the observation to the Senator, however, that I stated repeatedly that the Edge bill was only a palliative in a small degree. I favored it only on that ground; but it was all the Republican Senators would agree to and it is inadequate. I offered other remedies that were refused support; it did not at all meet the requirements which I thought were necessary.

In order to bring back the world to a condition of stability many things are necessary; it will be necessary to deflate the currency, which at present is being expanded by the printing press without responsibility in some countries. Russia has gone to such an extent that the Russian ruble is put out by the billions upon top of billions, without any intention of ever redeeming it, with a steadily diminishng value.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. OWEN. I yield to the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. GRONNA. I am sure the Senator has given this matter more attention than I have; but, if he will permit me, I will say that, so far as I am concerned, I do not agree with him that we should help to deflate the currency, nor do I believe that that is a remedy. In my humble judgment the remedy is to help Europe produce more, so as to enable her to offset her debts, her obligations, with her products. That will regulate it, and not any act to deflate the currency, either in this country or in any other country.

Mr. OWEN. The Senator has not permitted me, of course, to answer the question he originally propounded. He has answered it himself in part, and I agree with him in the answer he has made, so far as to assert it is absolutely necessary that Europe be put back upon production. Men must work, economize, and create values, but the mechanism of exchange, the moneys of the world, must be put on a basis of stability, on a known basis of value, and men must not use the printing press to issue securities without intention of redemption nor without the ability to redeem. These countries, however, in order to be put back on a condition of stabilized credit, must stop inflating their currency and must put their currency back upon a basis which will be approximately the same basis—the gold basis or some other agreed basis—which is common to the whole world.

The European nations must adjust their budgets to their income from taxes and keep within their income because until they do the inflation will continue in currency and in bonds.

They must bring their currency back to par of gold and do it by an arbitrary adjustment at the present relative value of such currency.

They must adjust their war bonds to the same standards and issue new bonds payable in gold on long time and low rate so that the taxpayers shall only pay the present gold value of such bonds and not be required to pay from three to ten times the present gold value of such bonds.

Mr. KIRBY. Mr. President——

Mr. OWEN. I yield to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. KIRBY. I understand the condition as stated by the Senator from Oklahoma. I do not understand, however, whether the remedy suggested or that might be suggested by the conference would be one that would enhance the value of the dollar on the other side or reduce the value of the dollar on this side. In other words, I understand that both our dollars have become cheap in the way of purchasing commodities, but on the other side of the world their money has become so much more cheap that they have to pay two or three times in products the price of our dollar in order to trade with us, and on that account trade languishes. Now, would we increase the price of the dollar on the other side; and if so, how can it be done unless at the expense of our own dollar?

Mr. OWEN. In order to arrive at a just understanding of this matter it is necessary to observe what the foreign exchanges really mean. Take, for instance, the exchanges of Norway and of Sweden and of Holland and of Switzerland. While they are affected by the excess of commodity shipments from the United States, they are not affected by an inflation of their currency. The same thing is true of the exchanges with regard to Spain. Spain being upon a gold basis and the commodity shipments being somewhat in excess to Spain in our favor, the Spanish peseta is a little below par; but side by side, across an invisible line, you enter into France, and there the French franc is worth only one-third of a peseta, approximately, although nominally each is equal to 19.30 cents in gold, showing that the inflation of the currency in France has affected the value of the currency, in addition to the balance of trade being against them. The balance of trade affects all of Europe, of course; but it is shown by the currency of Holland and the currency of Norway and Sweden and Switzerland and Spain that they are only comparatively slightly affected by the balance of trade in our favor, while Great Britain is more seriously affected, because it has inflated its currency, and France still more, because the inflation there has gone to a point where they have outstanding now 38,000,000,000 francs, amounting to approximately $200 per capita of money in circulation, while here we have $56 as a gross, and about $46 per capita, considering the amount which is sequestered in the reserve banks.

The following table will make this clear:

Foreign exchanges.

	Normal rate.	To-day's rate.	Discount.
			Per ct.
London	$4.83	$3.72	24	Currency inflated.
Paris	5.18 francs per dollar.	11.50 francs	55	Do.
Belgium	5.18 francs per dollar.	11.40	54	Do.
Italy	5.18 lire to dollar.	13.20	62	Do.
Germany	$23.83	$1.75	90	Currency grossly inflated.
Russia	$51.44	$3	95	Do.
Holland	$40.20	$37.37	9	Currency near normal.
Switzerland	$5.18	$5.56	7	Do.
Spain	19.30 cents	19.10 cents per peseta.	1	Currency normal.

Great Britain has doubled its currency during the war and more than doubled the deposits, and gold bought with English money costs 110 shillings an ounce instead of 79 shillings, the normal rate, before the war—a discount of 25 per cent in the purchasing power of English paper money.

Neither Great Britain, France, Belgium, Italy, Austria, Germany, Russia, nor any of the east European belligerents are on a gold basis.

It will take world action to put them into production and world credits. They can not buy; they can not pay unless assisted by international and internal reconstruction legislative action. If they do not buy and do not pay, it will seriously threaten our financial and commercial stability. Our foreign exports must cease.

Our banks holding great amounts in foreign securities and credits will be put in serious danger and industrial disturbances of a grave nature may be anticipated. No time should be lost. Much valuable time has been lost already.

The peace treaty should be ratified at once with or without reservations.

I want to call the attention of Senators to this matter, because it vitally affects every single State in the Union. It affects the value of the manufactured products of New England, and of the cotton of the South, and of the wheat of the West, and of the mineral ores of our various States; and you gentlemen who are responsible to this country ought to understand this and ought to consider it. Now, here the business men of the country are going to call an international conference of the first magnitude and bring the leading business men of the whole world together to try and solve this problem, so that they with their combined forces can appeal to the statesmen of the world to take the steps necessary to stabilize the world and to reconstruct the world and to put it upon a basis of stability and credit, so that our merchants and manufacturers can interchange their commodities, because after all it is an interchange of commodities or an interchange of the products of labor. What the Senator from North Dakota said was truly said, that the remedy at last is work, orderly work, and avoiding extravagance in government and extravagance in private life. The remedy is to restore the world by personal economy and by personal production and by improving the processes of distribution, but the mechanism of exchange and of currency is absolutely essential to the conduct of international business.

The Governments of Europe must act and put their budgets in order; must deflate their currency; must readjust their war debts; must arrange to underwrite the loans needed to buy raw material and seed and supplies to start production; and the nations able to furnish the raw material and credits should do so by opening the doors to the investment public and having the loans properly secured by the nations seeking credits for their citizens.

When a convention is called to arrange these details, the representatives of labor should be present; and, above all, the representatives of the highest rank in the various Governments should participate to see that justice is done to the people who will meet the burdens of these readjustments.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The request of the Senator from Oklahoma is granted.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[From the New York Times of Thursday, Jan. 15, 1920.]

POWERS TO CONFER ON WORLD FINANCE—SIMULTANEOUS APPEAL TO NATIONS TO CALL INTERNATIONAL ECONOMIC CONFERENCE—NATIONAL LEADERS SIGN IT—PLAN PROPOSALS TO LIMIT CREDITS AND FORCE THE PEOPLE TO REHABILITATE EUROPE—PRIVATE AID IS SUGGESTED—LESSENING OF THE FINANCIAL DEMANDS ON GERMANY AND AUSTRIA MADE IN TREATY PROPOSED.

"A request that representatives be appointed as soon as possible to an international economic conference is being made simultaneously to-day to the Governments of Great Britain, France, Holland, Switzerland, Denmark, Norway, and Sweden to the United States Government, the reparations commission, and the United States Chamber of Commerce. The request is in the form of a memorandum, which sets forth, in brief outline, the ideas of the various signatories as to how the work of relmbilitating the world's financial and commercial structure should be undertaken.

"The precise origin of this movement has not been disclosed. Leading American financiers who are interested in it declined yesterday to say whether or not the matter had first been broached by them or by some interests in Europe. However, great stress was laid on the widespread demand for such a conference, and it was said that within the last few weeks what virtually amounted to spontaneous petitions for such a conference had been received by the leading financial and commercial representatives of all the countries which have become parties to the memorandum.

"Abroad, the request is directed to the several Governments. They, according to the plan, are to appoint the delegates to the proposed conference. In the United States a somewhat different procedure is being adopted. The United States Chamber of Commerce is asked to appoint the American delegates, partly because of its Nation-wide affiliations and partly because here it is desired to have participation in the conference kept on an unofficial basis. The American signatories feel that the problems outlined in the memorandum should be met, as far as is possible, through private initiative, but with the United States Government extending its moral support.

OPPOSED TO PAISH CREDIT PLAN.

"The memorandum takes issue squarely with the scheme, recently attributed to Sir George Paish, of an international credit arrangement in which all of the leading Governments should take active part. Quite the opposite position is assumed by emphasizing the necessity of encouraging to the greatest extent possible 'the supply of credit and the development of trade through normal channels.'

"The proposed conference will be composed of representatives of the leading countries, both belligerent and neutral, of Europe, the central European countries, Japan, and the chief exporting countries of South America. These representatives, it is further purposed, will bring with them all pertinent information, and it is expected that as a result of the conference recommendations will be made as to what measures may best be taken in the various countries in order to revive and maintain international commerce.

"One of the American signatories, in commenting on the request for the conference, said:

"'One might sum up the document as a call to the people to return to prewar standards of reason, an appeal to the reparation commission for wise moderation as to the best business policy for all concerned; an appeal to Governments to arrest inflation and meet inevitable burdens by increasing their revenue rather than by further increasing their debts; an appeal to the people to work and to save; and, finally, an appeal to leaders of commerce and finance to get together in order to study the problem dispassionately and take it up as a business proposition, relying on independent action rather than Government intervention. Governments must be relied upon, however, to remove as rapidly as possible the obstacles that impede such a course.'

MEMORANDUM TO THE GOVERNMENT.

"The full text of the memorandum submitted to the United States Government, the reparations commission, and the United States Chamber of Commerce follows. It is substantially the same as the documents submitted abroad:

"'The undersigned individuals beg leave to lay before their Government, the reparations commission, and the Chamber of Commerce of the United States the following observations and to recommend that the Chamber of Commerce of the United States designate representatives of commerce and finance to meet forthwith (the matter being of the greatest urgency) with those of other countries chiefly concerned, which should include the United Kingdom and the British dominions, France, Belgium, Italy, Japan, Germany, Austria, the neutral countries of Europe, the United States, and the chief exporting countries of South America, for the purpose of examining the situation briefly set forth below and to recommend upon the basis of authentic information what action in the various countries is advisable among the peoples interested in reviving and maintaining international commerce.

"'They venture to add to the above recommendation the following observations:

"'The war has left to conqueror and conquered alike the problem of finding means effectively to arrest and counteract the continuous growth in the volume of outstanding money and of Government obligations, and, its concomitant, the constant increase of prices. A decrease of excessive consumption and an increase of production and taxation are recognized as the most hopeful, if not the only, remedies. Unless they are promptly applied, the depreciation of money, it is to be feared, will continue, wiping out the savings of the past and leading to a gradual but persistent spreading of bankruptcy and anarchy in Europe.

THE PERILS OF INFLATION.

"'There can be no social or economic future for any country which adopts a permanent policy of meeting its current expenditure by a continuous inflation of its circulation and by increasing its interest-bearing debts without a corresponding increase of its tangible assets. In practice, every country will have to be treated after careful study and with due regard to its individual conditions and requirements. No country, however, is deserving of credit, nor can it be considered a solvent debtor, whose obligations we may treat as items of actual value in formulating our plans for the future that will not or can not bring its current expenditure within the compass of its receipts from taxation and other regular income. This principle must be clearly brought home to the peoples of all countries, for it will be impossible otherwise to arouse them from a dream of false hopes and illusions to the recognition of hard facts.

"'It is evident that Germany and Austria will have to bear a heavier load than their conquerors, and that, in conformity with the treaty of peace, they must bear the largest possible burden they may safely assume. But care will have to be taken that this burden does not exceed the measure of the highest practicable taxation and that it does not destroy the power of production, which forms the very source of effective taxation.

"'For the sake of their creditors and for the sake of the world, whose future social and economic development is involved, Germany and Austria must not be rendered bankrupt. If, for instance, upon close examination the commission des réparation finds that, even with the most drastic plan of taxation of property, income, trade, and consumption the sums that these countries will be able to contribute immediately toward the current expenses of their creditors will not reach the obligations now stipulated, then the commission might be expected to take the view that the scope of the annual contribution must be brought within the limits within which solvency can be preserved, even though it might be necessary for that purpose to extend the period of installments.

"'The load of the burden and the period during which it is to be borne must not, however, exceed certain bounds; it must not bring about so drastic a lowering of the standard of living that a willingness to pay a just debt is converted into a spirit of despair and revolt.

"'It is also true that among the victorious countries there are some whose economic condition is exceedingly grave, and which will have to reach the limits of their taxing powers. It appears, therefore, to the undersigned that the position of these countries, too, should be examined from the same point of view of keeping taxation within the power of endurance and within a scope that will not be conducive to financial chaos and social unrest.

THE PROBLEM OF CAPITAL.

"'When once the expenditure of the various European countries has been brought within their taxable capacity, which should be a first condition of granting them further assistance, and when the burdens of indebtedness as between the different nations have been brought within the limits of endurance, the problem arises as to how these countries are to be furnished with the working capital necessary for them to purchase the imports required for restarting the circle of exchange, to restore their productivity, and to reorganize their currencies.

"'The signatories submit that, while much can be done through normal banking channels, the working capital needed is too large in amount and is required too quickly for such channels to be adequate. They are of opinion, therefore, that a more comprehensive scheme is necessary. It is not a question of affording aid only to a single country, or even a single group of countries which were allied in the war. The interests of the whole of Europe, and indeed of the whole world, are at stake.

"'It is not our intention to suggest in detail the method by which such international cooperation in the grant of credit may be secured. But we allow ourselves the following observations:

"'1. The greater part of the funds must necessarily be supplied by those countries where the trade balance and the exchanges are favorable.

"'2. Long-term foreign credit, such as is here contemplated, is only desirable in so far as it is absolutely necessary to restore productive processes. It is not a substitute for those efforts and sacrifices on the part of each country, by which alone they can solve their internal problem. It is only by the real economic conditions pressing severely, as they must, on the individual that equilibrium can be restored.

"'3. For this reason, and also because of the great demands on capital for their own internal purposes in the lending countries themselves, the credit supplied should be reduced to the minimum absolutely necessary.

"'4. Assistance should as far as possible be given in a form which leaves national and international trade free from the restrictive control of Governments.

"'5. Any scheme should encourage to the greatest extent possible the supply of credit and the development of trade through normal channels.

"'6. In so far as it proves possible to issue loans to the public in the lending countries, these loans must be on such terms as will attract the real savings of the individual; otherwise inflation would be increased.

"'7. The borrowing countries would have to provide the best obtainable security. For this purpose it should be agreed that—

"'a. Such loans should rank in front of all other indebtedness whatsoever, whether internal debt, reparation payment, or interallied governmental debt.

"'b. Special security should be set aside by the borrowing countries as a guarantee for the payment of interest and amortization, the character of such security varying perhaps from country to country, but including in the case of Germany and the new States the assignment of import and export duties payable on a gold basis, and in the case of States entitled to receipts from Germany a first charge on such receipts.

MUTUAL HELPFULNESS PARAMOUNT.

"'The outlook at present is dark. No greater task is before us now than to devise means by which some measure of hopefulness will reenter the minds of the masses. The reestablishment of a willingness to work and to save, of incentives to the highest individual effort and of opportunities for every one to enjoy a reasonable share of the fruit of his exertions must be the aim toward which the best minds in all countries should cooperate. Only if we recognize that the time has now come when all countries must help one another can we hope to bring about an atmosphere in which we can look forward to the restoration of normal conditions and to the end of our present evils.

"'In conclusion the signatories desire to reiterate their conviction as to the very grave urgency of these questions in point of time. Every month which passes will aggravate the problem and render its eventual solution increasingly difficult. All the information at their disposal convinces them that very critical days for Europe are now imminent and that no time must be lost if catastrophes are to be averted.'

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I submit with my remarks the report of the committee on foreign trade of the American Economic Association. I ask the privilege now of having it printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

JANUARY 9, 1920.

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN TRADE OF THE AMERICAN ECONOMIC ASSOCIATION.

This, the second report of the committee on foreign trade, will cover the effect of the war on the volume, direction, and the constituent commodities of international trade, and will attempt to analyze some of the conditions that affect the outlook.

I. The effects of the war.

The war had a very profound effect upon the trade of the world. In belligerent countries normal production was curtailed and therefore exports declined. The domestic production of commodities needed by the warring nations was insufficient, and these had to be imported. The excess of imports was financed by shipments of gold, the sale of securities, and by borrowing. The trade currents prevailing before the war were upset.

A. THE VOLUME OF TRADE.

The countries at war greatly increased their exports in amount and to a less extent in tonnage. The countries on the American Continent, on the whole, greatly increased their exports. Japan did likewise. The countries blockaded, Germany and Austria, experienced a tremendous decline in trade. The trade of Holland, Spain, and Russia, declined as an incident to the blockade. Because of the long sea voyage involved and the shortage in shipping, the trade of British India, Australia, and South Africa also fell in volume.

B. COMMODITIES OF TRADE.

Because the belligerents of Europe needed enormous quantities of war materials and other goods for consumption, their imports of manufactures increased relatively and the imports of raw materials decreased relatively. Western Europe was cut off from its sources of food supply in Russia and Southeastern Europe, and the entire burden of producing food for the western European countries was thrown upon the Americas. Australia and India were too far removed to permit the utilization of much needed tonnage for the long ocean trip. Because Germany was under blockade, the countries which she had supplied with chemicals, dyestuffs, porcelain, machinery, electrical goods, toys, and specialties had to turn to other countries like Switzerland, the United States, and Japan for their supply. Trade in luxuries was much reduced. Japan, the United States, and in general the neutrals increased their imports of raw materials and increased their exports of manufactured goods.

There was an increased demand for commodities of all kinds from countries that were readily accessible to Europe, and they, therefore, suffered from a shortage of goods. On the other hand, the demand upon the countries far removed from Europe slackened so that there was a glut of goods, as of wheat in Australia, wool in New Zealand, and sugar in Java.

C. TRADE CURRENTS.

The war resulted in the transfer of millions of men to France, where they had to be maintained under conditions which increased their consumption over that of peace. Shipping routes were therefore focused upon western Europe and created a ship shortage in other lanes of trade, which was aggravated by submarine warfare. The tonnage passing through the Suez Canal in 1913 was 20,000,000 tons and in 1917 only 8,300,000 tons. Because of the shortage in shipping, supplies for Europe had to be brought from the nearest available center of production. Tonnage was conscripted for the trans-Atlantic service. There was an increase of exports to Europe and a decrease of imports from Europe.

Furthermore, trade between near-by countries increased; for example, the trade among the northern neutrals of Europe, between Japan and the countries skirting the Pacific and Indian Oceans, between the United States and the countries of North and South America and of Asia. The trade on the Pacific greatly increased. The countries of Asia, East Africa, and the west coast of the Americas traded with each other to a greater extent than before the war.

Because of the shortage in shipping, heavy commodities were eliminated to a large extent, and wherever possible home sources of supply were developed. The lack of those goods which were manufactured chiefly in central Europe stimulated the establishment of new branches of industry in the non-European countries.

D. ENTREPÔT AND TRANSSHIPMENT TRADE.

The European countries which were at war had controlled the shipping of the world and determined the course of commodity movements. Trade prestige and established custom were important determinants of the route of trade and of the location of entrepôt centers before the war. During the war the blockade and economy of shipping were the deciding factors. American cotton was sent to Holland direct instead of by way of Bremen and Liverpool. Dutch colonial produce reached the United States directly instead of by way of Amsterdam. African produce could no longer be shipped by way of Belgium or France. The United States obtained Australian goods across the Pacific, and not by way of London. Trade routes which were temporarily expedient have in some cases proven to be permanently efficient.

Hamburg and Bremen were closed tight during the blockade, and the transshipment and entrepôt trade which they had conducted were eliminated. The European countries which had traded with the outside world through the medium of Germany now traded directly. The trade of Switzerland, Italy, the Baltic States, and Spain with the overseas countries greatly increased. Furthermore, new centers of transshipment developed during the war. Copenhagen, Bergen, and Goteborg rose as ports of transshipment and as entrepôts supplying Germany and the north of Europe.

E. ECONOMIC DECENTRALIZATION.

For four years the countries dependent upon Europe have been compelled to seek new sources of manufactured goods and new outlets for their raw materials or else to establish some local industries to satisfy their needs. The industries of the world, hitherto concentrated chiefly in Europe, have been temporarily disrupted and to some extent permanently decentralized. The transshipment of goods from the Orient to America or from South Africa to North America by way of Europe has been partly replaced by direct trade. The international jobbing business has been reduced and in some lines eliminated. Countries were compelled to become self-sufficient. The old creditor nations, clustered in Europe, have become borrowers of widely scattered countries, as the United States, Japan, and Argentina, hitherto their debtors. The world has hastened toward a stage of economic development which it might have taken generations to attain. The predominance of Europe in trade has declined, and new commercial spheres have become defined in America and in the Far East, centering about the United States and Japan.

Agricultural countries and regions producing raw materials develop eventually into centers of industry and trade. The war hastened this process. It has hastened the growth of industrial self-sufficiency, the decentralization of trade, and the lessened dependence upon Europe of the rest of the world. The war has hastened the disintegration not only of political imperialism but of commercial imperialism as well.

Decentralization is the prerequisite of federalism. In a more than superficial sense, therefore, the war has prepared the world for an inevitable League of Nations of some sort. As the backward countries of the world become more industrialized, as the density of their population tends to increase by migration, the economic dominance of Europe will probably decline still further, but the interdependence of the nations of the world will increase. The process of economic decentralization will prepare for ultimate world federalism. More extensive interdependence of the nations will vitalize a League of Nations.

II. The outlook in international trade.

A. THE PREWAR BALANCE OF TRADE.

Before the war the countries of Europe, with the exception of Russia, had an excess of imports. On the other hand, the countries of the American Continent, with the exception of Canada, and most of the partly developed countries, such as British India, and South Africa, had an excess of exports.

The excess of imports of the European countries was paid for by services, such as shipping and banking, by interest on foreign investments, by the expenditures of non-European tourists in Europe, and by the remittance of European nationals in foreign countries to their friends and families in Europe.

B. THE WAR-TIME BALANCE OF TRADE.

The countries of Europe, on the whole, increased their imports greatly. The non-European countries, on the other hand, had a large excess of exports, particularly during the later years of the war.

Europe paid for the increased excess of imports less by banking and shipping services, more by the shipment of gold, and the sale of securities, and most of all by loans.

C. THE IMMEDIATE FUTURE.

1. Europe needs credit: Europe, in part, is devastated and everywhere is short of goods. The war-ravaged countries need food and machinery. But even the neutrals need raw materials. Without food and raw materials Europe may fall into chaos, which may react upon us industrially and perhaps politically. Europe must have goods, and to get them she needs our credit.

But for purely selfish reasons we must lend. In order to balance our international debits and credits, the courses before us are to curtail exports, increase imports, or to lend. Reduction of our exports seems inevitable. However, to curtail our foreign sales suddenly would mean stagnation of industry and consequent unemployment in many lines, although in some cases the satisfaction of demands at home deferred during the war would absorb the slack in production as prices decline. We can not at present buy more, for Europe has less to sell now than before the war. As a temporary expedient the course open to us is to lend. For the economic welfare of the country credits of some sort must be advanced in order to move American goods.

2. The supply of short-term credit. Some European statesmen thought that they could borrow from America sufficient funds to restore the devastation quickly. Unfortunately, that is not the case. The credit needed is of two kinds, long term and short term. The neutrals and the belligerents not devastated by the war will not need long-term credit to any great extent. The machinery for supplying short-term credit for exports consists of the facilities afforded by the Federal Reserve System. However, should a scarcity of short-term credit for exporters arise, there are untapped reserves in the discount houses which may accept drafts up to several times their capital. To a great extent these institutions would relieve the banks of deposit of the risk of too heavy commitments on account of foreign acceptance liabilities in addition to their ordinary commercial risks. Several of these have been established.

3. The supply of long-term credit: Six months' credit, even with a renewal, would hardly provide for the needs of countries in which factories and even cities will have to be rebuilt and reequipped.

(a) Government advances: During the war the United States Government made advances to other Governments to the extent of about $10,000,000,000. These advances cease with the proclamation of peace. The sentiment in the United States is averse to further loans by our Government. Our Government has a floating debt of over three billions. This is a revolving debt and is responsible in part for the inflation of prices and the high cost of living. The Government could loan to Europe by issuing more bonds. Congress would hardly authorize such loans, and the public would hardly take such loans if authorized. Conceivably conditions in Europe might compel a change of sentiment in the United States. The evils of inflation may be less menacing than industrial debility in Europe attended perhaps by political disturbances.

(b) Indirect Government aid: The United States has, however, undertaken to aid the exporter indirectly, through the War Finance Corporation, which may make advances to the extent of $1,000,000,000 for periods of not exceeding five years, to exporters or bankers upon the promissory notes of the borrower. However, the difficulty inherent in the act under which the War Finance Corporation operates is that while the country as a whole benefits by the export of goods, the burden of the present unusual risk is placed entirely upon the exporter. Nevertheless, the facilities of the corporation are being utilized.

(c) Private means: The financing of foreign trade by the Government may lead to further inflation. The financing of exports through private channels can be accomplished only through savings, past or present. The alternative of war financing, namely, inflation versus savings, faces us again during the transition. Possibly the gravity of the after-war situation may compel a compromise as in war time between these two methods of financing.

At present Europe is being financed by private income. Private aid is being extended to individual enterprises, whose conditions meet the credit standards of bankers. The methods of private long-term finance are various. Either Europe's holdings of neutral securities might be liquidated in the United States, or else a foreign importer, if his credit is good, might float a loan here.

The member banks of the Federal Reserve System have been permitted to invest 5 per cent of their capital and surplus in subsidiary corporations engaged in the financing of foreign trade. The Edge law would authorize the establishment and incorporation under Federal charter of companies to engage in international financial operations under the supervision of the Federal Reserve Board.

Furthermore, investment trusts might be established. These institutions would invest in foreign securities and issue their own obligations against their holdings, which might be either Government bonds, industrials of the borrowing country, or the pledged securities of a third country or of the industries.

Finally the listing on the stock exchange in the United States of outstanding foreign securities, under proper restrictions and with adequate safeguards of the American investors, would help greatly in accelerating the flow of trade.

(d) The essentials of an acceptable foreign security: If advances are to be made to countries fiscally weak or to industries already under heavy taxation charges, a priority of lien will be needed to assure the safety of interest and principal of the new loan as compared with the old ones. If new loans to weak countries are to be junior liens, funds for Europe will be difficult to obtain. Just as a private company that has good prospects may secure credit through the issue of receiver's certificates, so the weak European countries will have to give priority of lien of principal and interest of new money as against old loans.

The rate of interest on loans to foreign governments or industrials will have to be competitive with domestic rates. The marketability of securities based on foreign loans depends upon suitable publicity, and whether or not the public will avoid waste and gather funds for investment, and whether or not they are favorably disposed toward the investments from the viewpoint of safety and adequacy of return.

In order not to be the lone and sole creditor of the nations of Europe, the United States might raise a loan jointly with other powers, or with the participation of other powers to a sufficient extent morally to insure payment by the borrower. The indorsement of the European banker, and the guaranty of the foreign government may be essential to secure the funds from American investors.

Such credits as are granted to Europe should be devoted to industrial and not governmental uses. They should be utilized not for meeting current Government expenses, not for the balancing of their budgets, where there is a lack of adequate measures of taxation, and not for the artificial maintenance of their inflated currencies at parity in the exchange market. Credits should be devoted to increasing production. The import into Europe of essentials and not of luxuries should be financed. If industry in Europe is benefited the security underlying our loans, new and old, will be strengthened. As industry in Europe revives, world-wide economic conditions should benefit.

D. THE OUTLOOK IN THE UNITED STATES.

What is to be the future of our foreign trade? The theoretical analysis indicates that during the early stages of lending a country has an excess of exports. After this process has continued for many years the lending country has an excess of imports.

Our present position has been obtained not as a result of the slow process of economic development but as a result of the sudden shifting of trade during the war. However, our readjustment can not be as sudden. It will take years. Europe took our exports and gave us promissory notes in payment. She can not liquidate her debt in gold, because European countries wish to retain their gold supply in anticipation of a return to a gold basis. Because of the development of American facilities for financing trade and because of the creation of the American merchant marine, Europe will not be able to pay us with these services even to as great an extent as before the war. Securities with which to pay us are either not available or else will not be sold by Europe because of the commercial prestige which attaches to foreign investments.

Ultimately Europe must pay us in goods. A mortgage on her fixed assets is not feasible politically, because of the anti-alien laws of Europe and the fear of economic penetration. Europe will therefore eventually have to pay in merchandise. The annually accruing interest on the debt to the United States will depress the exchange rate of the debtor country and thus stimulate exports and restrict imports. On the other hand, the annual credit of the United States for interest will tend to raise our exchange above par, to stimulate imports, and to restrict exports. Ultimately our excess of exports must decline and probably change to an excess of imports—a feature which before the war characterized the trade of the creditor countries of Europe.

Immediately Europe may be unable to pay in goods. Her debt to us for interest must be postponed or met temporarily by further loans to her. The need of additional goods from America will need to be financed in the same way. Loans by us would make possible a continuation of our reports until the productive capacity of Europe is restored sufficiently to permit the resumption of exports by Europe. The annual investment of a sum equal to our excess of exports and the reinvestment of the interest on loans, both outstanding and to be placed, would, if compounded, reach a huge figure in a generation. Our balance of trade would thereafter probably be an excess of imports.

In the present unsettled state of Europe there are many factors which would qualify these conclusions. If Europe falls into chaos exports from the United States will be greatly reduced. If the principal and interest of our present loans is thus wiped out, the conditions which would call for an ultimate excess of imports will cease to exist.

PAYMENTS FOR COMMANDEERED COAL.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, I send to the desk and ask to have read the following telegram.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the Secretary will read the telegram.

The Assistant Secretary read as follows:

MORGANTOWN, W. VA., January 15, 1920.

Hon. HOWARD SUTHERLAND,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

It is with pronounced regret we are compelled to annoy and apparently put your high office in position of collecting agency; however, we feel that it is not the intention of our Government to arbitrarily ruin us financially. We have complied with all requests of the Railroad Administration in rendering our invoices and have had the matter up with Mr. Hines and Mr. Spencer, without results. Furthermore, Railroad Administration refuses to purchase coal, but are again confiscating, with the result our customers are refusing to do business with us. Your continued efforts in our behalf will be highly appreciated.

DAVIS COAL CO.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, during the time of the coal strike it became necessary, of course, for the Railroad Administration to confiscate coal for the public good. That was done, however, in such a manner as to cause great embarrassment to the coal operators. The coal was confiscated in transit and diverted from its original consignees to other consignees, and up to this time very little of it has been paid for. Some of the larger companies could stand this drain upon their resources without ruin, but to some of the smaller ones it has meant almost absolute ruin; they have not been able to meet their pay rolls.

I received a telegram a few days ago from one of the coal operators stating he was sending out a special agent with 1,000 notices of diverted coal all over the West and Southwest in an endeavor to secure payment for that coal. Apparently no effort has been made, nor is any cooperation now given by the Railroad Administration, toward securing payment for this diverted coal. They seem to think that their public duty in the matter was fulfilled when they diverted the coal from these coal operators and sent it to some other consignee, leaving the coal operator to struggle as best he can to secure the money in payment for this coal.

Of course, when the monthly or semimonthly pay rolls come due they are unable to meet them. I find that this practice, as attention is called to it in the telegram, is continuing in some parts of the State. They are not only diverting coal sent to various consignees without notice to the shipper, thereby greatly embarrassing the consignees, who are thus deprived of the coal which they are expecting, which they have ordered, and which is necessary for the continuance of their business, but, in addition to that, practically putting out of business the shippers of this coal, and it seems to me that this coal should be diverted with some due regard to the business necessities of these men.

On that account I have had this telegram read and have desired to call the attention of the Senate to it.

THE PANAMA RAILROAD CO.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Interoceanic Canals:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith, for the information of the Congress, the seventieth annual report of the board of directors of the Panama Railroad Co. for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1919.

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE,
16 January, 1920.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

H. R. 11578. An act making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

LIVING CONDITIONS OF TRAINMEN.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, on the 5th of January I introduced a resolution requesting the Interstate Commerce Commission to investigate and report upon living conditions of trainmen who are compelled to lie over between trips at terminals of railroads, and also to investigate the feasibility on the part of railroad companies of furnishing to their men accommodations. By my request the resolution was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce. I am advised that if we should pass the resolution the commission can probably furnish us some information that might be valuable both to the Senate and to the conferees on the railroad control bill. I therefore ask unanimous consent to withdraw the resolution from the Committee on Interstate Commerce with a view of asking the Senate to adopt it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the Committee on Interstate Commerce will be discharged from the further consideration of Senate resolution 267.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I should state that I consulted with the chairman of the committee, and that this action is agreeable to him.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Georgia ask for the immediate consideration of the resolution?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do, Mr. President.

The resolution (S. Res. 267) was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Interstate Commerce Commission be, and it is hereby, requested to investigate and report upon living conditions of trainmen who are compelled to lie over between trips at terminals of railroads, and also to investigate the feasibility on the part of railroad companies of furnishing to their men accommodations suitable to their needs at such terminals.

COAL CORPORATION INCOMES.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I ask for the consideration of Senate resolution 247.

Mr. SMOOT. I object.

Mr. HARRIS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the resolution.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I should like to know what the resolution is.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the resolution.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. Senate resolution 247, submitted by Mr. HARRIS December 4, directing the Secretary of the Treasury to furnish the Senate certain detailed information secured from income and profit tax returns of the taxable year 1918 as to relative incomes of corporations engaged in mining bituminous coal and lignite coal.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. A parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nebraska will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. NORRIS. Is the pending motion debatable in the morning hour?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In the opinion of the Chair the motion is not debatable at this time.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution, which was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to furnish the Senate the following information, to be secured from the income and profits tax returns for the taxable year 1918 of all corporations engaged, exclusively or principally, in the mining of bituminous and lignite coal:

Capital stock; invested capital; net income; tax (1) income, (2) excess profits, (3) total; per cent of total tax to net income; net income, after deducting tax; per cent of net income to capital stock; per cent of net income to invested capital; per cent of net income, after deducting tax, to capital stock; per cent of net income, after deducting tax, to invested capital; capital stock, 1917; net income, 1917; per cent of net income to capital stock, 1917; excess of the per cent of net income to capital stock for 1918 above the percentage for 1917.

Also a statement showing the dividends paid by corporations engaged in the mining and production of bituminous coal within the United States for the years 1917 and 1918; that if such information is not already in the possession of the Secretary of the Treasury he be requested to procure the same and furnish it to the Senate as promptly as may be practicable.

That the information be transmitted in form similar to that obtaining in Senate Document No. 259, Sixty-fifth Congress, second session, which contains the information transmitted by the Secretary of the Treasury in response to the resolution of the Senate of June 6, 1918, and that the corporations be listed in the same sequence and under the same symbols, as far as possible, as obtain in Senate Document No. 259.

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Assistant Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Hale	McNary	Sheppard
Beckham	Harris	Moses	Simmons
Calder	Harrison	New	Smith, Ga.
Capper	Henderson	Newberry	Smith, S. C.
Chamberlain	Hitchcock	Norris	Smoot
Colt	Jones, N. Mex.	Nugent	Spencer
Cummins	Kendrick	Overman	Sterling
Curtis	Kenyon	Owen	Sutherland
Dial	Kirby	Page	Townsend
Dillingham	Lodge	Phipps	Trammell
France	McCormick	Pomerene	Walsh, Mass.
Frelinghuysen	McCumber	Reed	Walsh, Mont.
Gay	McKellar	Robinson	Williams

Mr. NUGENT. I desire to announce that the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] is absent from the Senate on official business. He is a member of the subcommittee of the Committee on Naval Affairs now inspecting the construction of a Navy dock at Charleston, S. C.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Fifty-two Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present.

Mr. POMERENE. I move to amend the pending resolution in line 5, before the word "bituminous," by inserting the word "anthracite."

I will state the reason why I offer the amendment. Of course, information of this kind will be of value, but it seems to me that those who are interested in the subject will be interested in having the same data with respect to anthracite coal that is called for in relation to bituminous or lignite coal.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon the amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. NORRIS. I could not hear what the Senator said and I could not hear the amendment proposed by him.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the proposed amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 1, line 5, before the word "bituminous," it is proposed to insert the word "anthracite," so as to read:

In the mining of anthracite, bituminous, and lignite coal.

Mr. NORRIS. I do not see any objection to that amendment, as it simply broadens the scope of the resolution and makes it apply to anthracite as well as to other varieties of coal.

Mr. POMERENE. Yes. My thought was that those who were interested in the subject would also like to have some information with regard to anthracite coal.

Mr. NORRIS. I agree with the Senator as to that.

Mr. SMOOT obtained the floor.

Mr. REED. May I make an inquiry in regard to this matter?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I desire to ask the status of the resolution submitted by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARRIS].

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution is before the Senate for consideration.

Mr. REED. I desire to ask the Senator from Nebraska if there are other kinds of coal than lignite, bituminous, and anthracite.

Mr. NORRIS. I do not know of any.

Mr. REED. Then, why not strike out all qualifying adjectives in the resolution and simply use the word "coal"?

Mr. NORRIS. I have not any objection to that, but the pending resolution is not my resolution, I will say to the Senator from Missouri. So far as I am concerned, however, the resolution can not be made too broad to suit me.

Mr. REED. I should like to ask the Senator who has submitted the resolution if he is not willing to accept my proposition as an amendment?

Mr. HARRIS. I am quite willing to do so.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 1, line 5, before the word "coal," it is proposed to strike out the words "anthracite, bituminous, and lignite," so that it will read "in the mining of coal."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands that the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] accepts the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] and that the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARRIS] also accepts the amendment. In the absence of objection, the amendment of the Senator from Missouri will be agreed to.

Mr. REED. I desire to make an inquiry, with the permission of the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT]. Is it the intention of the author of the resolution to limit the inquiry as to profits strictly to the matter of the mining of coal or is it intended that we shall learn the profits that are made by the proprietor of the coal mine and also by the company which may be handling the coal in a large, wholesale way?

Mr. HARRIS. The resolution is intended to include both, but particularly the profits of the coal operators.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, in the first place, I desire to say that the pending resolution virtually undertakes to repeal an act of Congress, though it is only a Senate resolution. If this position taken by me meets with the approval of the Senate, I think there can be no question that the Senator from Georgia will either have to change the resolution to a joint resolution or the Senate certainly can not consider it.

I wish now, if Senators will follow me, to read the law as it is upon the statute books to-day, in reference to this subject matter, and in connection with that I ask Senators to read the pending resolution. I have no objection whatever to securing the information asked for by the resolution, but, in my opinion, it must be done under existing law or a law repealing it. The resolution reads as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to furnish the Senate the following information to be secured from the income and profits tax returns for the taxable year 1918 of all corporations engaged, exclusively or principally, in the mining of bituminous and lignite coal:

Capital stock; invested capital; net income; tax (1) income, (2) excess profits, (3) total; per cent of total tax to net income; net income, after deducting tax; per cent of net income to capital stock; per cent of net income to invested capital; per cent of net income, after deducting tax to capital stock; per cent of net income after deducting tax to invested capital; capital stock, 1917; net income, 1917; per cent of net income to capital stock, 1917; excess of the per cent of net income to capital stock for 1918 above the percentage for 1917.

Then follows this provision:

That the information be transmitted in form similar to that obtaining in Senate Document No. 259, Sixty-fifth Congress, second session, which contains the information transmitted by the Secretary of the Treasury in response to the resolution of the Senate of June 6, 1918, and that the corporations be listed in the same sequence and under the same symbols, as far as possible, as obtain in Senate Document No. 259.

Mr. President, if Senators will examine Senate Document No. 259, they will notice that the date on which that document was referred to the Committee on Finance in order to be printed was July 5, 1918. The law at that time was quite different from the law existing to-day, for in the tariff act of October 3, 1913, we find the following provision:

SEC. 3167. It shall be unlawful for any collector, deputy collector, agent, clerk, or other officer or employee of the United States to divulge or to make known in any manner whatever not provided by law to any person the operations, style of work, or apparatus of any manufacturer or producer visited by him in the discharge of his official duties, or the amount or source of income, profits, losses, expenditures, or any particular thereof, set forth or disclosed in any income return by any person or corporation, or to permit any income return or copy thereof or any book containing any abstract or particulars thereof to be seen or examined by any person except as provided by law; and it shall be unlawful for any person to print or publish in any manner whatever not provided by law any income return or any part thereof or the amount or source of income, profits, losses, or expenditures appearing in any income return; and any offense against the foregoing provision shall be a misdemeanor and be punished by a fine not exceeding $1,000 or by imprisonment not exceeding one year, or both, at the discretion of the court; and if the offender be an officer or employee of the United States, he shall be dismissed from office and be incapable thereafter of holding any office under the Government.

Mr. President, there is nothing in Document No. 259 that violated that law in any way; the law was complied with strictly; but the pending Senate resolution provides:

That the information be transmitted in form similar to that obtaining in Senate Document No. 259, Sixty-fifth Congress, second session, which contains the information transmitted by the Secretary of the Treasury in response to the resolution of the Senate of June 6, 1918.

Mr. President, the resolution of June 6, 1918, was not in violation of the law, but in the act to provide revenue, and for other purposes, approved February 24, 1919, a subsequent act to the tariff act of October 3, 1913, there is a specific provision in relation to returns being made public records. I call now the attention of the Senate particularly to section 257 of that act, which reads as follows:

That returns upon which the tax has been determined by the commissioner shall constitute public records, but they shall be open to inspection only upon order of the President and under rules and regulations prescribed by the Secretary and approved by the President.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN in the chair). Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, the Senator has just read the law——

Mr. SMOOT. I was not through with the law.

Mr. NORRIS. I understand the Senator has not read all of the section, but he has read every particle of the section which has any application to this matter; the remainder of it consists of exceptions. Unless the Senator merely wants to take up time, there is no occasion to read the remainder of it.

Mr. SMOOT. That may be the Senator's opinion, but it is not mine.

Mr. NORRIS. I wish to ask the Senator now if we pass this resolution will not the legal effect be that the President, not being required under the law to permit this information to be made public, can instruct the Secretary not to supply the information? If, however, the President wants to give the information and desires to comply with the resolution of the Senate, then there is not any reason why he should not do so, because the law specifically gives him that authority; so that the effect would be that we are asking something by Senate resolution that, as a matter of law, we are not entitled to unless the President consents to it. Will not that be the legal effect?

Mr. SMOOT. No, Mr. President; the Senator is mistaken——

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. SMOOT. I will yield, but I should like first to answer the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. HARRIS. Very well; then I will not interrupt the Senator.

Mr. SMOOT. I will yield to the Senator and answer both Senators later if I can.

Mr. HARRIS. The Senator from Utah raised this objection to my resolution some weeks ago to me personally. I thereupon went to see the Secretary of the Treasury and asked his opinion, and I will say that the Secretary differs from the Senator from Utah as to the law on this question.

Mr. SMOOT. That does not make any difference to the Senator from Utah, and it should not make any difference to other Senators in this Chamber. If they will read the law and see exactly what it is, they can construe the law as well as can the Secretary of the Treasury and perhaps a little softer.

Mr. President, in answer to the Senator from Nebraska, I will say that if the wording of the law were qualified as he has suggested, then, of course, there would be no objection to the passage of the resolution, but the Secretary of the Treasury has not under the act of Congress issued rules and regulations which have been approved by the President of the United States, and until they are issued and approved the law stands as it was written, and positively prohibits the information to be given, unless by order of the President of the United States.

If the Secretary of the Treasury a month ago, or yesterday, or at any time after the passage of the act to which I have referred, had issued rules and regulations in relation to making this information public, and they had been approved by the President, then there would be no question that this resolution would have been in order, and I would not for a moment have been found standing upon this floor objecting to it.

Let me again read from section 257 of the law for the information of the Senators who are listening:

That returns upon which the tax has been determined by the commissioner shall constitute public records; but they shall be open to inspection only upon order of the President, and—

Not "or"—

and under rules and regulations prescribed by the Secretary and approved by the President.

I say now, without a moment's hesitation, that the Secretary of the Treasury has not issued any rules and regulations for making these returns public; and those rules and regulations, not being issued, certainly could not be approved by the President of the United States.

If the Senator from Georgia wants to make this a joint resolution, which would be virtually repealing the existing law, that is another question; but I take it that no Senator will hold that a law now in force, passed by Congress and signed by the President of the United States, can be repealed by a simple Senate resolution. If there are Senators who believe that that can be done, they will vote for the resolution; but there is not a question of doubt in my mind that there is not a Member of the Senate or a Member of the House or even a Secretary of the Treasury who would hold that such a thing could be done, and that is what this resolution is—nothing more nor less.

Why, Mr. President, there is no requirement in the act of October 3, 1919, for any rules and regulations on the part of the Secretary of the Treasury. There was no requirement there that those rules and regulations should be approved by the President, but the law is different to-day than it was then.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; I yield.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I am rather surprised at the construction the Senator puts on that language. As I remember, when that law was passed the purpose was to protect individuals and corporations from the exposure of their private affairs, and it was considered to be proper to give either to the President or to the Congress, on proper application, information as to various classes of business that might be of use in framing other laws or in construing existing laws. Now, the Senator, as I understand, makes the point that this information, which is in the office of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and which would not expose the individual affairs of any corporation or individual, can not be published because the President has not made regulations for its publication. But is it not quite possible that after the request was made and the President realized that the Senate desired the information, he would make such a regulation as would enable the commissioner to give it?

Mr. SMOOT. The trouble with that is the rules and regulations should be made before the resolution is passed; and therefore rules and regulations made after the passage of the pending resolution certainly could not apply to the pending resolution.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. It could be very easily applied if the President desired. It is not compulsory. If it is a violation of existing law, the information will not be given. If, on the other hand, it can be made consistent with the regulations of the President, we will get the information; and certainly the intent of the law is that Congress, or either branch of Congress, at any time shall have accessible to it the information in the Treasury Department, providing it does not expose the private concerns of either any individual or any corporation.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator says that he knew what the intent of the law was. I suppose the Senator will grant to me the same right that he claims for himself. I was a member of the committee that had this very provision in charge. I know the discussion that took place in the committee, and I know the reason for the passage of the law, and I know the reason why the change was made from the law of 1913; and I say to the Senator now that the changes that were made in this law were made for the very purpose of placing entirely in the hands of the President of the United States the right to give the information contained in the returns upon which the tax of any individual or corporation or, I suppose, class of individuals or class of corporations, may have been determined.

There is no difference of opinion as to whether or not they should get this information. That is not what I am talking about at all. I am saying now that the pending resolution is in absolute disaccord with the present law as contained in section 257 of the act of February 24, 1919. If this were a joint resolution, I would not say a word about it, because I think Congress has a perfect right to repeal one law by a subsequent bill or joint resolution.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Oh, undoubtedly, Mr. President; there is no dispute about that; but can the Senator give any reason why there should be secrecy with regard to information of this sort, except for the purpose of protecting the individual or the corporation from having his or its private affairs exposed?

Mr. SMOOT. This would expose the affairs of corporations and private individuals in such a way that every competitor would know just exactly the condition of the business of all others engaged in the same business.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I differ with the Senator there. No names are to be mentioned. It is merely the classifications.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that I can take Senate Document No. 259, and turn to the classes of business under almost any head, and there are few of them but what the symbol number will tell the well informed the company making the report. Under the head of automobile manufacturers I can name to you nearly every automobile manufacturer that is reported in the document. I can tell you the names of many of the railroads that are reported, or any other class of business in the United States, and so can anyone who has given the question any study at all.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Can the Senator find my business there?

Mr. SMOOT. I do not think newspaper businesses are in this document.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Oh, yes; they are.

Mr. SMOOT. They may be.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I will confess that I have sought my own, and have been unable to identify it.

Mr. SMOOT. That may be, Mr. President; but it is quite different with newspapers than with other lines of business, where the general practice is to give a complete statement of the business the widest publication, so that everyone can learn the exact financial condition of the company for any quarter of a year or any year in the history of the company.

Mr. SIMMONS rose.

Mr. SMOOT. Does the Senator from North Carolina wish to interrupt me?

Mr. SIMMONS. I was simply going to say to the Senator from Nebraska, but he has left the Chamber, that these returns are formulated and published by the commissioner under a code number.

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. SIMMONS. And unless he knows the code number, of course, he can not find his business.

Mr. SMOOT. In small business, perhaps, and the newspaper business, probably as the latter is quite different from all of the other businesses of this country; but there is not any question that I can take the document and I can point out Mr. Ford's return, I can tell what Marshall Field's business was, and I can go to the code number and pick out the United States Steel Corporation, and I can select almost all businesses of any size or extent. True, the name is not given in this report; but we have used this report before the Finance Committee time and time again in the discussion of what rates should be imposed, not because the name was mentioned but because we all knew, or if we did not all know the expert of the committee knew, the business the code number referred to.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, will the Senator suffer an interruption?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ROBINSON in the chair). Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; I yield.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I will say to the Senator from Utah that I have no objection to any Senator procuring any further information upon the question of coal operators' profits; but I feel, as chairman of the committee which at the present time is making an exhaustive investigation of this subject, that I should like to know the object of making public at the present time the profits of these coal operators.

Mr. WILLIAMS. To expose the profiteers, of course.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I will say to the Senator who suggests that it is because they are profiteering that the committee intends to ascertain directly from these bituminous coal operators, represented through the National Coal Association—and there are 7,000 of them in this country—whether or not they are profiteering; but I object, and seriously object, to the utilization of any general statement made by the Secretary of the Treasury or any other official tending to give the general impression that universally and uniformly these coal operators are profiteering, unless in those statements it is shown to the public what the losses have been. I object for the reason that at the present time there has been imposed upon the public—the consumer—in the wages of the miners, many of whom are earning as much as $4,000 a year, an additional burden of 14 per cent, which is supposed to be imposed upon the operators on the ground that they are profiteering and can pay that advance, but it does not work out that way. That 14 per cent advance placed upon the consuming public over and above the 58 per cent advance given by Dr. Garfield in the wages of the miners, which increased the cost of coal and fixed a load in the commodity of approximately $275,000,000, added another $107,000,000 to the cost of the commodity, on the ground that the mine operators were profiteering and could stand this increase. But do the mine operators pay it? In some few instances, yes; but in the majority of instances, no.

In my State alone the public service corporation of that State has made a protest to the committee of which I have the honor to be chairman against the 14 per cent advance, on the ground that it will cost them $500,000 a year additional for their coal, and I asked them why, in view of the statement of Dr. Garfield and Attorney General Palmer that the operators would bear these increases. They said it was because, under the contract, any change in prices or increase in wages or costs was to be imposed upon the consumer. That is their contract, and this public utility corporation of my State is taxed $500,000, and through them indirectly the consumer is taxed.

I do not want to take too much of the time of the Senator from Utah, but I am deeply interested, because the subcommittee of the Committee on Interstate Commerce is earnestly trying to get at the bottom of this thing and make a report to the Senate. We have been sitting now for two months and a half.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Jersey yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I yield.

Mr. HARRIS. This resolution, if adopted, would be of great assistance to the committee if they want to get the real facts.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I have no objection to the Senator's resolution, but I prefer to get the facts in my own way directly from the operators. I wish briefly to present a few figures in relation to this report, if the Senator from Utah has no objection.

Mr. SMOOT. If it will not take the Senator too long, I will be glad to yield.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I wish to call attention to a statement of Mr. McAdoo in a public telegram to Fuel Administrator Garfield, wherein he gave the impression that the bituminous-coal operators in 1917 had made shocking and indefensible profits. It occurred to me to ask why the Secretary of the Treasury had not made that public before, if he knew it. He said that their returns showed earnings upon capital stock ranging from 15 to 2,000 per cent, although he admitted that he did not know what the profits were in 1918 or 1919.

I made some investigation of that. On page 130 of Mr. McAdoo's letter, printed as Senate Document No. 259, Sixty-fifth Congress, second session, will be found the details upon which the former Secretary undertakes to justify these statements. The first company mentioned is symbol 132, on page 131, which appears to have earned 3,954 per cent on its capital stock in 1917 before taxes were paid.

Mr. SMOOT. That is on the capital stock.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. The capital stock reported for that company, however, was only $10,000, while the capital invested in the company was $569,286, and the average percentage earned on that capital, after Federal taxes were paid, was 35.47 per cent. There are other charges, in addition to that, that must be taken out of those earnings.

Mr. SMOOT. In this connection the Senator might well say that everybody knows the company, and everybody knows that it was one of the most profitable concerns mining coal in the United States.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, may I ask who has the floor?

Mr. SMOOT. I have the floor.

Mr. HARRISON. Will the Senator yield for me to ask a question of the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. SMOOT. I will yield for that purpose.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator from New Jersey says that for two and a half months his subcommittee has been investigating this question. What has the subcommittee done?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I will be very glad, if the Senator from Utah will yield, to tell the Senator from Mississippi what the subcommittee has done.

Mr. HARRISON. The reason why I ask that question is because the Senator said he preferred to get his information from the operators themselves in his own way. I want to know how he expects to get it and what he meant by that statement.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I will be very glad to tell the Senator. The Senator has asked me two questions. First, as to what the subcommittee has done and has been doing. I will tell the Senator. When we entered upon this investigation we found that there was a condition in production which pointed to a coal famine in the country during the coming winter, even without a strike; that after the war, and after the armistice, the consumers were not buying coal, that there was no market; that the director general had not repaired the cars, and that there were 115,000 idle cars; that there was a shortage at the mines; that the average production per week was 6,000,000 tons, when, according to the production of the previous year, it should have been 10,000,000 tons.

We also found that many of the mines were closed down because they could not get the cars. The committee cooperated with Director General Hines, who placed his car-service division at the accommodation of the committee, and through the committee we furnished them with information where at the various mines there was a shortage of cars, and during August, September, and October, and until the strike, we built that production, through that clearing-house system, up to 13,000,000 tons. It was by reason of that activity of the committee that there was a large surplus of coal when the coal miners of this country struck in violation, in my opinion, of their contract and threatened to freeze and starve the people of this country.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President——

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Now, let me go on. The Senator has asked me two questions.

Mr. HARRISON. I wanted to find out if the Railroad Administration could not have gotten that information other than from the subcommittee investigating the subject.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Yes; the Railroad Administration might have gotten it; but they did not, and the subcommittee did.

The Senator asked me why I prefer to procure this information in my own way.

Mr. HARRISON. No; I did not ask the Senator that. The Senator said that he preferred to get this information from the operators themselves, in his own way. I thought that statement was a little peculiar. I wanted to know why he did not want to confer with anyone else.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I admit it might have been a peculiar statement; but I intend to explain to the Senator what I meant. He asked me.

Mr. HARRISON. Go ahead.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Very often when a body of this character is considering a financial statement, the general impression might be given regarding profits or losses, without any investigation of the details or figures, that either excessive profits or excessive losses are made. I prefer to take that statement and analyze it and find out how those profits are made, and what is chargeable against them, and not the general statement which has been made by some of our bureaus, such as the Federal Trade Commission and others, that the coal-mine operators were losing 50 per cent or making 50 per cent, when they had not charged off the proper items, and it was not a correct financial statement.

There are five members of the Interstate Commerce Committee on this committee, and we have had no counsel, we have had no one to assist us. The Senator from Michigan and myself have been carrying on these hearings, and if the Senator from Mississippi wishes to inform himself further as to what we have done, I should like to have him read the hearings and see the information we have procured. I will say to the Senator that we intend to recommend legislation to correct some of these evils that exist in coal-mining operations in this country.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator has said that they had no attorney, I believe. Has the subcommittee had any accountant to look over the books of the operators? Have the books been investigated?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. No; not at all.

Mr. HARRISON. If the books have not been investigated, the only statement that the subcommittee has had is from the operators themselves as to their profits. Is that right?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. The subcommittee began in the anthracite field, and they have made some investigation of the statements of the companies, and have placed them upon their records; and they have themselves asked some questions. I myself know something about figures, but I should like to have assistance, and I shall ask the Senate to give it to me, not only counsel but accountants.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator said that he had not himself looked over the books of the operators.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I have not looked over the books.

Mr. HARRISON. So when the Senator said that he preferred to get the information himself from the operators, in his own manner, he meant by merely questioning the operators——

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Not at all.

Mr. HARRISON. Without looking over their books, without having any special accountants investigate them, from the returns made by them to the Treasury.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Not at all. I have compelled every operator who came before us to file a full statement of his profits and his production costs, and that has gone on the record, and the committee fully intends to make a thorough investigation of those figures. We have asked them for statements more complete than any statement that this resolution will produce.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I was going to suggest to the Senator that it might be possible to amend this resolution to a form similar to the resolution that was adopted June 6, 1918, to which Senate Document 259 is a reply, requesting information in regard to the incomes of all corporations having a percentage of income over a certain fixed amount, say 20 per cent.

This resolution, originally adopted here, to which this document is a response, called for the incomes of corporations having an income in excess of 15 per cent. That would enable us to get at the figures of these institutions that have been getting excess profits over and above the fair figure of 20 per cent without discrimination.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the Senator, I suppose, has prepared his amendment, and when the resolution comes up the next time for consideration I expect he will offer it.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Very well.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN] called attention to symbol 132, with a capital stock of $10,000, with an invested capital of $569,286, showing a profit, not on the invested capital but on the capital stock, of 3,189 per cent. That is not the extreme case in this document, Mr. President. I find symbol No. 162, with a capital stock of only $10,000, with an invested capital of $1,274,364, showing a percentage of profit of 5,983 on the capital stock, $10,000.

There is a company reported with a capital stock of $1,800, with an invested capital of $177,095.

Mr. McAdoo, the Secretary of the Treasury, referred to cases of this kind as showing the exorbitant rates that have been made upon the mining of coal in the United States. I do not know whether the Secretary gave the statement out the way the papers reported it or not, but if he did it was unfair for him to do so, and I have had too much confidence in the Secretary of the Treasury to believe that he ever tried to mislead the public in the way that they were misled. I am fearful, Mr. President, that it came through the press not as he stated it but as those persons receiving the information from him desired to have it spread from one end of the country to the other. I think it is unwise for any business in the world to have a capital of $10,000 with $1,274,364 invested in the business, not by way of capital stock but by way of invested capital. The only reason I can think of, Mr. President, why a company would do that is that the act of 1913, which Senators will remember, imposed a tax of 50 cents on each thousand dollars of capital stock.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which is Senate bill 3315.

AMERICANIZATION OF ALIENS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3315) to promote Americanization by providing for cooperation with the several States in the education of non-English-speaking persons and the assimilation of foreign-born residents, and for other purposes.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Beckham	Harrison	Myers	Simmons
Brandegee	Henderson	New	Smith, Ga.
Capper	Hitchcock	Newberry	Smith, S. C.
Chamberlain	Johnson, Calif.	Norris	Smoot
Colt	Jones, N. Mex.	Nugent	Sutherland
Culberson	Kendrick	Page	Townsend
Curtis	Kenyon	Phelan	Underwood
Dial	Lenroot	Phipps	Walsh, Mass.
France	Lodge	Pomerene	Walsh, Mont.
Frelinghuysen	McCormick	Reed	Watson
Gay	McCumber	Robinson	Williams
Gronna	McKellar	Sheppard
Harris	McNary	Shields

Mr. UNDERWOOD. My colleague, the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], is detained on official business.

Mr. GRONNA. I was requested to announce the absence of the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], due to illness. I ask that this announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. NEWBERRY. I was requested to announce the absence of the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL], and the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] on business of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. NUGENT in the chair). Fifty Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

[Mr. KENYON addressed the Senate. After having spoken for an hour and three-quarters he closed his remarks for the day.]

Mr. KENYON. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 3 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m.) the Senate ajourned until to-morrow, Saturday, January 17, 1919, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, January 16, 1920.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Once more our Father in heaven, we approach Thee in prayer, and we pray with open minds and hearts, that we may be tractable to the sacred influences, within and without, and thus be inspired to clear perceptions of right and truth and duty.

We bless Thee that this day marks the progress of a nation. Under the Constitution, prohibition goes into effect at twelve o'clock to-night. It will be a blessing to millions and will hurt no one. Help us as law-abiding citizens to uphold and support this humane law; and Thine be the praise, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska, by unanimous consent (at the request of Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska) was granted leave of absence, indefinitely, on account of a death in his family.

MUNICIPAL COURT, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill H. R. 10074, a bill to increase the jurisdiction of the municipal court.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota, chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill H. R. 10074, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read the title, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 10074) to enlarge the jurisdiction of the Municipal Court of the District of Columbia, and to regulate appeals from the judgments of said court, and for other purposes.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I would like to make an inquiry about this bill. Nobody knows what it is.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk is going to report it.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Let it be read.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will again report it.

The title of the bill was again read.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Does this simply apply to the District of Columbia?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Yes; it simply applies to the District of Columbia. The Committee on Rules have reported a rule making it in order.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. It does not make any difference about the rule, I am inquiring about the bill. What does it do?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. It increases the jurisdiction of the municipal court in cases up to $1,000 and enlarges to some extent the scope of the jurisdiction of the court. At present they have got exclusive jurisdiction only of cases amounting to $20. This bill would give jurisdiction of cases in amount up to $1,000.

Mr. DYER. Also, if the gentleman will yield, I will say to my colleague that it makes them a court of record, and takes away what is known now as the justice of the peace court, with an appeal to the supreme court, when the cases are tried de novo. This bill would now give them jurisdiction over certain cases and appeals only to the court of appeals, makes them a court of record, permits jury trials, and brings the amount up to $1,000 of cases of which they shall have jurisdiction.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Does the gentleman think it will expedite justice in the District?

Mr. DYER. I think it will. I will say to my colleague there is a great deal of work in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia. The judges are unable to keep up with the work. They are away behind, several years behind, and one of the causes is that these cases from the municipal court go to the supreme court on appeal and are tried de novo, which takes immeasurable time from the judges. This will relieve that.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. This bill does not increase the number of judges in the District?

Mr. DYER. It does not increase the number of judges and it does not increase the salaries.

Mr. WALSH. It does increase the salaries.

Mr. DYER. It does not increase the salaries and does not increase the number. The gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. GARD. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, this bill is rather of wider significance and application than has been stated by either gentleman. I do not think it should be considered by unanimous consent, inasmuch as the matter is already prepared for by the application to the Committee on Rules. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I submit a privileged report from the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas submits a privileged report from the Committee on Rules, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas, from the Committee on Rules, submits the following report:

The Committee on Rules, to which was referred House resolution 435, submits a privileged report on said resolution, with the recommendation that the same be agreed to.

House resolution 435.

"Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H. R. 10074, being a bill 'To enlarge the jurisdiction of the Municipal Court of the District of Columbia and to regulate appeals from the judgments of said court, and for other purposes.' That there shall be not to exceed one hour's general debate, one-half to be controlled by the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary and one-half by the ranking member of the minority of said committee. At the conclusion of the general debate the bill shall be read for amendment under the five-minute rule; whereupon the bill shall be reported to the House with the amendments, if any, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill, and all amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion, except one motion to recommit."

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, this rule was agreed to unanimously by the Committee on Rules, in response to the request of the Committee on the Judiciary, on the information to the Committee on Rules that the bill had been unanimously reported by that committee. It is for the purpose of expediting the business of the House that the rule has been reported. I do not care to discuss the matter, inasmuch as it has already been discussed under the reservation made by the gentlemen here on the request for consideration by unanimous consent.

Mr. GARD. I am not sure if I heard correctly. Was the time for general debate limited to one hour?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. The time for general debate was limited to one hour.

Mr. GARD. Is that enough general debate, in the opinion of the chairman of the committee?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. The Committee on Rules thought, and the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary thought, that that would be sufficient. The discussion under the five-minute rule will add to the information of the House.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I yield for a question.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. How much does this bill increase salaries?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. My information is that it does not increase salaries at all.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. It increases the expense?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. The only expense that would be added, I think, would be in the administration of the law, in calling for a jury. Now the municipal courts are not permitted to have juries. These courts would be permitted to call juries, and the expense of the jury would be the only additional expense, and the expense incident to the jury.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The leader of the Republicans, Mr. MONDELL, of Wyoming, stated yesterday that he was going to effect economies amounting to $1,000,000,000. Now, if you go on increasing the expenses of everything, how are you going to effect an economy of $1,000,000,000?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. A part of this expense will be on the litigants in civil actions, I assume, as it is in most of the States. The costs of the case will include the jury expenses, which will be paid by the defeated litigant.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. And three-fourths of the defendants in these cases are insolvent, if not nine-tenths of them.

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois for a question.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The gentleman said, as I understood, that this would increase the expenses by the payment of the jurors in this court. Is it not a fact that the cases that will be tried in this court by jury will be tried in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia by a jury if this bill does not pass, and that the expense there will be greater than in the municipal court?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. That is undoubtedly true.

Mr. DYER. That is just what I wanted to call the attention of the gentleman to. In my judgment there will be less expense in administering the law if this bill is passed than there now is in administering the law in these cases in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Unless there is a request for time——

Mr. GARD. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I yield for a question.

Mr. GARD. What is to be the division of time in general debate?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. The time is to be equally divided between those favoring and those opposing the bill.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the adoption of the rule.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H. R. 10074.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10074) to enlarge the jurisdiction of the Municipal Court of the District of Columbia and to regulate appeals from the judgments of said court, and for other purposes, with Mr. TREADWAY in the chair.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the first reading of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I shall occupy only a few minutes in the discussion of this bill, for the reason that in the preliminary consideration considerable information has already been obtained by the House as to the necessity for this legislation.

For many years the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia and the citizens of the District of Columbia have insisted that we furnish some relief to that court. This court has general jurisdiction for the trial of all classes of cases outside of matters confined to the police court, the juvenile court, and the municipal court.

The Supreme Court of the District of Columbia is at the present time some two or three years behind in its work. It is said that an ordinary lawsuit, such as we aim to confer the power on the municipal court to try, can not ordinarily be tried in less than three years, and in scarcely any instance in less than two years after the issues are made up. This, of course, is a practical denial of justice. We have had bills before us time and again for the purpose of increasing the number of judges in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia. The Judiciary Committee in the last Congress reported a bill granting two additional judges to that court, but it failed of passage.

On an examination of the situation in the District, I concluded that the proper thing would be to give to the municipal court enlarged jurisdiction. Under the existing law it is a municipal court in name only. It has exclusive jurisdiction only in cases where the amount in controversy is $20 or less. Nominally, it has exclusive jurisdiction of cases up to $100; but as the Constitution provides that a person is entitled to a jury trial in all cases where the amount in controversy exceeds $20, a person can secure a transfer from the municipal court to the supreme court simply by filing an affidavit.

It is proposed by this bill to give to the municipal court jurisdiction up to $1,000. As I drew the bill, the jurisdiction was fixed at $2,000. The bill in this form had the approval of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, the municipal court, the chamber of commerce, and, so far as I know, of everyone in the District who was interested in the subject, except that there was a demand for an increase of the limit of jurisdiction to $3,500 instead of $2,000. The Judiciary Committee, on consideration of the matter, cut this amount from $2,000 to $1,000. They did so largely because in many cities of the size of Washington municipal courts have jurisdiction only up to $1,000. Possibly there is some reason why in this city it should be more, but it is for this committee to determine what that jurisdiction should be.

This will not materially—though it will to some extent—increase the expense of the administration of justice in the District. We hope, if this bill is passed, that in the near future a great many actions can be tried that otherwise would be delayed. By that delay the expense would, of course, be spread over more years, so that the actual annual cost in the immediate future will be a little more if this bill passes; but we can not afford to say to the people of this District that they ought to be denied the opportunity to try their cases for that reason. The increase in the expense would be very much greater than those incurred under this bill if we should furnish the two additional judges of the supreme court asked for by the citizens and by that court. The judges of the supreme court draw salaries, I believe, of $7,500 each. Two additional judges would mean $15,000 additional expense. By giving the judges of the municipal court the necessary jurisdiction and clerical force to carry on their work, they are in a position to do a large amount of work which the Supreme Court of the District would otherwise be required to do.

It seems to me we ought to give relief in this way. We are giving it then in line with what cities generally are doing. In this court cases can be tried more readily and inexpensively, under less technical rules, than in the Supreme Court of the District. We have now five judges in the municipal court. They draw salaries of $3,600 apiece. I am told that they are men of high character and ability. The law requires that they must be lawyers who have practiced at least five years in this District. I can see no good reason why these men should not try these cases just as well, efficiently, and fairly as they can be tried in the supreme court; and, as the people of the District ask for this relief and the relief is so greatly needed, we ought to pass this bill.

Mr. DOWELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Yes.

Mr. DOWELL. On page 2 I note a provision for the transfer of cases. May I inquire what that has reference to?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. It has reference to cases now pending in the supreme court. If those cases are within the jurisdiction that we contemplate conferring on the municipal court, they may be transferred to the municipal court instead of allowing them to remain in the supreme court.

Mr. DOWELL. The language of the section does not carry out that meaning to one who understands it. If it said that all cases now pending in the supreme court may be transferred, it would mean what the gentleman suggests.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. The gentleman can present his views when we come to that part of the bill.

Mr. BRAND. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Yes.

Mr. BRAND. Is it the chairman's understanding that if we pass this bill they will not ask for the additional judges of the supreme court?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. They may ask for it, but if we furnish this relief the chances are that we will not grant it.

Mr. IGOE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Certainly.

Mr. IGOE. So that it may be clear to the House, I ask the gentleman if it is not true that this bill meets with the approval of the District Supreme Court judges, the District Municipal Court judges, the bar association, and the chamber of commerce?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. It does, and this bill was drawn at their suggestion and approved by all those bodies.

Mr. DOWELL. Will the gentleman further yield?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I will.

Mr. DOWELL. What is the jurisdiction of the municipal court?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. It has exclusive jurisdiction of sums up to $100, and concurrent jurisdiction with the supreme court of sums up to $500.

Mr. DOWELL. And this bill gives the municipal court exclusive jurisdiction up to $1,000?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Yes; and furnishes them a jury.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. And as to the right of appeal——

Mr. VOLSTEAD. The right of appeal to the supreme court is cut out, and the appeal will go directly to the Court of Appeals of the District.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Yes.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Who appoints the judges of the municipal court?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. The President of the United States.

Mr. LONGWORTH. With the advice and consent of the Senate?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I am not sure about that. We make no changes in appointment of the judges.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I will.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. What is the condition of the business in the municipal court to-day? Is it congested?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. No; they have very little to do. There is no objection on the part of the judges of the municipal court to assuming these additional duties.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Is this bill the unanimous report of the Committee on the Judiciary?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. It is the unanimous report.

Mr. RAMSEYER. How are the judges paid, by fees or salaries?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. The municipal judges are each paid a salary of $3,600 annually.

Mr. RAMSEYER. And appointed for how long?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. For four years.

Mr. BRAND. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I will.

Mr. BRAND. The gentleman says the jurisdiction is limited to $1,000. What is the objection to increasing it to $3,000 or $5,000?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Personally I would have been willing to leave it at $2,000, but the Judiciary Committee thought that this ought to be limited to about the amount usual to cities of this size, which is about $1,000. There are conditions here that might perhaps justify an increase beyond $1,000.

Mr. BRAND. Would not more relief be given to the supreme court if you increase it $1,000?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. There is no doubt about that, it would take care of a great many more cases, and I think it might be better.

Mr. BRAND. Does the supreme court or the city government or the bar association object to increasing it to $2,000?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. No; the representative of the chamber of commerce asked that it be made $3,500.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Will the gentleman state what are the qualifications of a municipal judge?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. He must be a man learned in the law and have been in active practice for five years in this District.

Mr. WATSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Yes.

Mr. WATSON. How much more will this cost under this bill if it becomes a law?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. There is no increase in the salary of the judges nor in the number of judges. There is a provision for the appointment of two clerks at $1,200 apiece, and the court is given a jury. At present there are no juries in the municipal court. Of course, if you are going to furnish necessary juries to the municipal court so that the people can try their suits, it will mean some little additional expense, but the people are entitled to a trial by jury, whether the trial takes place in the municipal court or the supreme court.

Mr. WATSON. The rules must be enlarged in order to conduct proceedings in the municipal court under this bill.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Yes; and there is a provision authorizing the judges in banc to make the necessary rules.

Mr. WATSON. Is this expense to be borne under the 50-50 proposition?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Yes; the half-and-half provision applies to this as it does to everything else. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, it may be well to understand what this measure is, and therefore I crave your attention in order that I may discuss certain provisions in the bill with respect to proper amendments thereto.

In the first place, the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary has said that this bill is to relieve the necessity for additional judges of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia. I have the report of the hearing on this case, pages 12 and 13, in which it appears on the hearing held before the chairman of subcommittee No. 2, of which Mr. DYER, of Missouri, is chairman, that inquiry was made as to whether or not the passage of this act would do away with the necessity of additional judges for the District of Columbia Supreme Court, and Mr. DYER, speaking to the principal witness, who was Mr. Chapin Brown, I believe, said:

Mr. DYER. If Congress did that—

And he was referring there to the passage of this bill in the sum of $3,000 as the exclusive jurisdiction—would it relieve the work of the supreme court sufficiently so as not to necessitate appointment of additional judges?

Mr. BROWN. No; I think not; no, sir. They would need those two judges. They ought to be appointed right now. They would need them even with this change.

So that we get now to a consideration of just what this bill is, what the law was before, and what the change contemplated amounts to. The judges of the municipal court are embraced under the municipal code, section 1 and section 2. Section 2 provides, first, that the judicial power of the District shall continue as at present—

To be vested in, first, inferior courts, viz, justices of the peace and the police court, and, second, superior courts, viz, the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia, and the Supreme Court of the United States.

It may be interesting to note, too, that section 1 of this act provides that—

The common law, all British statutes in force in Maryland on the 27th day of February, 1801, and the principles of equity in admiralty, and all general acts of Congress, etc., shall be applicable in the District of Columbia.

The primary limitations were the common law and the British statutes in force in Maryland in the year 1801. Therefore, the municipal court, in its old name, in its old authority, was a court of justices of the peace. This was changed in 1909 so that this language was used:

That the inferior court known as justices of the peace in the District of Columbia shall remain as now constituted but shall hereafter be known as the municipal court of the District of Columbia.

That law provided that the said court and each member thereof should exercise the same jurisdiction as was vested in them as justices of the peace immediately before the passage of the act and no more, and that they shall be governed by the laws then in force. That act sought to dignify by a new appellation a court known as justices of the peace. The present bill seeks now to give additional authority and additional dignity to the municipal court which in reality is a court of justices of the peace, and I desire to discuss briefly whether that be advisable under present conditions or not.

Justices of the peace, as everyone knows, are called the people's courts. The courts known as justices of the peace the country over are courts wherein the small actions which occur between man and man may be taken up for immediate adjudication. A complaint is filed, notice is issued, and the case is usually heard in three or four days. That is the object of this court here in the District of Columbia. It has taken the place of justices of the peace.

Mr. BEE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARD. Yes.

Mr. BEE. In that connection, in the analogy of justices of the peace, does this law require that these judges of the municipal court shall be practicing lawyers, and name the length of years they shall have practiced before they are eligible to appointment?

Mr. GARD. No; I think not. It requires that they shall have been a judge or a resident of the District for five years.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit, the law does require that they shall be men learned in the law and engaged in the practice of the law for five years, except as to those judges who were judges at the time the act was passed. An exception was made in favor of them.

Mr. BEE. It occurs to me that a man holding such an important office here should be a lawyer. I understand that in one State of the Union, under a clause of the constitution providing that a man shall be learned in the law, a gentleman who has followed the business of merchandizing all of his life became the chief justice of the State.

Mr. GARD. I do not think the phrase "learned in the law" can be conclusive even to those who are practicing attorneys.

Mr. BEE. I do not think so either, but the presumption is in their favor.

Mr. GARD. What I was about to speak of was this: We changed the character of this court, and I desire to call the attention of the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary to this fact. Section 2 of this bill provides that instead of its being a court of justices of the peace it shall now be a court of record; that it shall have the same terms as those that now obtain. In other words, the hearing will be an entirely different hearing. Instead of the immediate hearing guaranteed to litigants, in small cases, we will now have the hearing by terms, to be arranged by the court itself or by the supreme court, and the language there is so uncertain that it is difficult to tell just what it means.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. If the gentleman will pardon me, I think he is entirely mistaken as to that.

Mr. GARD. I am not.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. This bill provides that the judges in banc may make rules and regulations for themselves, and it is merely contemplated that they can carry on this business in the same way that they are doing now.

Mr. GARD. I know what it provides and I shall call attention to it. The old law provided in the municipal code certain elements of jurisdiction, and this bill provides for an increase of the elements of jurisdiction, and those elements are so uncertain that the language certainly needs amendment to enable correctness of understanding. The bill we have before us provides that it shall have jurisdiction over causes which it had immediately prior to the passage of the act—and in action for the recovery of damages for assault, assault and battery, slander, libel, malicious prosecution, and breach of promise to marry.

At the end of the section it provides—said municipal court shall also have jurisdiction of all civil causes transferred to it for trial and disposition by order of said supreme court.

So that now it has an original jurisdiction in the sum of $1,000, and then the jurisdiction for assault, assault and battery, slander, libel, and so forth, and then a jurisdiction by transfer of all civil causes, no matter what they may be, no matter how large they may be, no limitation on amount—all civil causes referred by the supreme court to the municipal court. If it is the intention of those who have this bill in charge to create five new additional judges of the supreme court, then that is what they are doing; but I do not believe that was the original intention of the Committee on the Judiciary. I believe the intention was to increase the jurisdiction of this court to $1,000, so that the smaller litigations might be taken care of without the continuous appeal which has embarrassed the supreme court. But we go beyond that. We not alone take away the appeals under small amounts that we now have, but we say that any civil cause the supreme court might want to get rid of, or any number of them, may be transferred to the municipal court. The supreme court may transfer half its docket down there. It is well for us to have an understanding. Here are five judges of a municipal court, five justices of the peace. We take away the jurisdiction of the justices of the peace, and we give these justices of the peace the jurisdiction of the judges of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia.

That is exactly what this bill proposes to do, and the minute you do that, the minute you make transfer of a lot of causes from the Supreme Court of the District to the municipal court, you will come in with five municipal judges who will say, "We are doing the same work as the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia and our salaries of $3,600 are inadequate to our 'learned-in-the-law' experience, and therefore we say that our salaries should be placed at least on a parity with the judges of the supreme court."

Mr. DOWELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARD. I yield first to the gentleman from Iowa and then to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. DOWELL. Under the provisions of this bill the gentleman would not argue it would be possible for the supreme court to refer a case to the municipal court that involved more than $1,000?

Mr. GARD. I would, unquestionably.

Mr. DOWELL. Why, the strict provisions of this bill prevent any hearing before this court beyond that amount.

Mr. GARD. Oh, no. I know if the gentleman will read carefully he will see there is an entire disassociation between the $1,000 and the last paragraph.

Mr. DOWELL. I concede the last paragraph of section 1, about which I asked the chairman of the committee, is incorrect, but I can not understand how you can base an argument that even under that section the court could be given jurisdiction over cases above $1,000.

Mr. GARD. I think I am entirely right on that proposition, although I do not question the good faith and judgment of the gentleman from Iowa. Now I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CRAMTON. In any event, does the gentleman from Ohio think that the supreme court would be any more ready to surrender jurisdiction in any particular case—except it be a very exceptional case where such a course was very necessary—that it would be any more likely to surrender jurisdiction than one committee of the House is inclined to surrender jurisdiction of a measure to another committee?

Mr. GARD. I do not know how jealously they guard their dockets.

Mr. CRAMTON. Well, human nature the world over is human nature, and courts are likely to be as jealous of their jurisdiction as the committees of the House are jealous of theirs, and they are somewhat jealous.

Mr. GARD. My observation, and it has been somewhat, has been that human nature is such that it does not object to the shifting of responsibility and of work, especially if the same financial return for a smaller amount of work be obtained. I now yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I was about to say to the gentleman that I think he was unquestionably right in his statement made a moment ago, that there would be no limitation at all upon the power of the Supreme Court of the District to transfer causes to this municipal court if the bill should be enacted in its present terms. Personally I do not object to giving the supreme court that broad discretion; nevertheless it is certainly true the court would have the right to transfer equity cases and admiralty cases and patent cases and other suits of which the supreme court may have jurisdiction.

Mr. KITCHIN. Irrespective of the amount.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Irrespective of the amount. If that is the purpose, the purpose is carried out by this language.

Mr. GARD. Yes; I think it is very true, as stated by the gentleman from Virginia, but it is entirely a matter of purpose. If it is the purpose of this committee to do that, then this language is all right. On the other hand, if it is the purpose to extend the jurisdiction of this court to sums of $1,000, then this language is entirely wrong. Now, I desire to call the attention of the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, if he has finished his conference with the gentleman from Illinois, for a moment to the consideration of section 3. Section 3 provides—

That hereafter when the value in controversy of any action pending in certain municipal courts shall exceed $20, and in all actions for the recovery or possession of real property, either party may demand a trial by jury.

I call the attention of the gentleman who introduced the bill to the fact that section 1 of the bill nowhere provides that this court shall have the right to try actions for the recovery of possession of real property. The old law was this, and I read from it, that this court—justice of the peace court—had jurisdiction of a certain amount, not exceeding $300, including proceedings of attachment, replevin, and so forth, except in cases involving the title to real estate, actions to recover damages for assault or assault and battery, or for malicious prosecution, or actions against justices of the peace or other officers for official misconduct, or actions for slander, libel, and for cases of breach of promise to marry. Now, there was an exception in there of the things which are included here, and there was an additional exception of actions involving title to real estate.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. This does not permit trial involving title to real estate. This permits a trial as to the right of possession. It does not permit trial of title to real estate. It is a possessory action, simply. There is another provision in the District Code specifically authorizing the municipal court to try that class of cases, and they try a great many of those now.

Mr. GARD. Well, I do not know; it may be that the contention of the gentleman is correct. I have been examining this, and I desire, and my only purpose is, to have the bill a proper bill, and therefore I am calling the attention of the committee to this matter in the hope that it can be amended so that there will be no question about this particular law. The succeeding section in the bill provides for the impaneling of jurors. It was stated in the hearings that there would be one jury trial, one set of jurors of this court.

That is a very remarkable statement, since this law, in section 4, provides they shall draw 26 persons as directed by law. Judge Gould and Judge Aukam, who appeared before the committee, said that the idea was to have one jury in this municipal court. Now, here are five judges, paid $3,600 a year—justices of the peace are what they are—whose dignity is by this law to be so increased and their jurisdiction so elevated, in their own scheme, at least, that they are resolved into a court of terms, and they have one jury.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. If the gentleman will pardon me, in the discussion between some of these gentlemen, and some members, at least, of the Judiciary Committee, it was thought perhaps it would be necessary to have two juries at the same time, but no provision was made for certifying more than 26, and a provision was decided on that in case of a deficiency others might be added as certified from the supreme court. So that the idea is to have at least two judges try jury cases when necessary.

Mr. GARD. Now, this is the law about that as you have it here in section 4: You provide that jurors may be drawn or selected under the law as it now is, by the mode of filling deficiencies in a panel. Now, here you have it further:

Deficiencies in any panel of any jury may be filled according to the law applicable to juries in said supreme court, and for this purpose any judge of said municipal court shall possess all the powers of a judge in said supreme court and of said court sitting as a special term.

In other words, you transfer and elevate, or increase, the jurisdiction of these ordinary justices of the peace in the District of Columbia, not alone to that of supreme court judges of the District of Columbia but as a court sitting as a special term.

The gentleman said a moment ago that there was some question about the rule. Let me tell him about that. Section 3 provides that the trial judge shall conduct such jury trial according to the course of the common law and according to the practice and procedure now obtaining, or as hereafter modified, respecting the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia. So it is not true that this municipal court can make its own rules about jury trials. This provides they shall try it according to the course of common law. What that means I do not know.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. There is another section that expressly provides for this. If you will turn to section 11 you will find that is expressly provided for.

Mr. GARD. I am calling your attention to this section:

The trial judge shall conduct such jury trial according to the course of the common law.

Probably rules. It says further:

According to the practice and procedure now obtaining, or as hereafter modified, respecting the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia.

That does not mean anything. It means in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia. But you do not say that there. Now, in another place, you say that the members of this court, sitting in banc, may establish rules and regulations, but is not that conference of power at odds with this express provision that the conduct of a jury trial must be conducted as provided in section 3? In other words, there can be no reconciliation of these two sections, since one section provides for rules of their own and the other section provides for particular rules to be given by the supreme court.

That is the thing I desire to call the gentleman's attention to. Now, there is another thing that it is well to inform the membership of the committee about, and that is in section 10. It appears here that—

The municipal court shall have power to appoint two additional assistant clerks, to be known as jury clerks, at an annual salary of $1,200 each, payable in monthly installments—

And note what they have to do—and the said clerks shall note the attendance of each juror, administer oaths when required, and perform such other duties as the trial judge shall direct.

That is only one thing that this law is trying to do. It provides for one jury panel of 26 men, and we authorize the appointment by the municipal court judges of two jury clerks in addition to what they have now. What duties this assemblage of jury clerks might have I confess I do not know.

I call attention to these matters in no spirit of criticism, but merely that the membership of this committee may understand. It is well to know that this bill came to the Committee on the Judiciary practically on an adoption. It was prepared by the chamber of commerce, composed of some 900 men, who wanted this bill to be made $3,000 or $3,500—I have forgotten which. In other words, they wanted to create an exclusive limitation of $3,500. The Committee on the Judiciary did not think that such an exclusive limitation in that amount was wise and restricted it to $1,000. Three thousand dollars, I am told, is what was asked for. The chairman of the committee said it was $3,500, but I am inclined to believe it was $3,000. So I am calling attention to these matters.

Now, I call attention to section 8, which manifestly needs rewriting. It says:

That suits may be prosecuted by poor persons in the discretion and upon the order of the court.

What is manifestly intended is, that if a person is indigent and finally unable to make deposit fees, the court in his discretion may permit the prosecution. But to say that suits may be prosecuted by poor persons is an assumption that possibly poor persons may have no right in this court unless this particular section 8 is passed.

There are a number of other things in the bill which I desire to call attention to and shall do so under the five-minute rule.

Mr. Chairman, how much time have I used?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has used 28 minutes.

Mr. DOWELL. Will the gentleman yield for one further question?

Mr. GARD. I will yield, very gladly.

Mr. DOWELL. I note the gentleman has criticized section 3, relative to the provision for the recovery of possession of real property. Now, under section 1, I think, the gentleman has called attention to the fact that this was not included in section 1.

Mr. GARD. It is not.

Mr. DOWELL. Does the gentleman believe this court should have jurisdiction over the title of real estate?

Mr. GARD. I do not.

Mr. DOWELL. And should not this paragraph of section 3 be stricken out entirely and action in reference to real estate remain in the particular court where it now is?

Mr. GARD. I think all questions involving title to real estate should remain in the supreme court.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I will ask the gentleman this: Would not that very much curtail the present jurisdiction of the municipal court—a provision of that character?

Mr. GARD. As the chairman of the committee said a few moments ago, as to possessory actions, the actions that we call unlawful retainer, and so forth, why should not the municipal court have jurisdiction to try possessory actions?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I think it would; but I think there is a distinction between possessory actions and actions to try titles. I should say that the trial of possessory actions should be had in the municipal court, and title actions should be tried in the supreme court.

Mr. DOWELL. Might not the title be involved in this controversy?

Mr. GARD. That is what I thought when I called the matter to the attention of the Committee on the Judiciary.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VOLSTEAD] is recognized.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I assume that in the District of Columbia the distinction between law cases and equity cases or chancery cases was maintained.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Yes; quite generally.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I notice in the last part of section 1 this provision:

> Said municipal court shall also have jurisdiction of all civil causes transferred to it for trial and disposition by order of said supreme court.

Is it the expectation that after the passage of this bill all of these cases involving less than $1,000, of the nature specified in this section, will be transferred to the District municipal courts?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. That is the object of the provision.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I so understand it. It seems to me, however, that the provision might authorize any kind of a case to be transferred from the supreme court, although I would not expect the supreme court to take such action.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, may we have the benefit of the colloquy that is going on between the two gentlemen? We can not hear over here.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I have no objection to gentlemen on the other side being permitted to hear. If the disorder would subside I think the gentleman could hear.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will be in order.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I was speaking with reference to the last sentence of the first section, which authorizes the transfer of all civil causes—it says "all civil causes"—to the municipal court, and I was just remarking that I did not suppose that the supreme court would transfer anything but law cases; but at the same time the provision apparently would authorize the transfer of equity and chancery cases, and it would seem to me that there ought to be some limitation there.

Mr. GARD. That is true.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Now, I would like also to say, if the chairman of the committee will yield——

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I yield.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I also notice in the last part of section 2 the following sentence:

> A memorandum of each action by the court shall be noted by the clerk on the docket, and shall be a sufficient record thereof.

Now, I think it is obvious to any attorney that this mere memorandum would not constitute a proper record of the cases. All courts keep this kind of a memorandum, which they call their "docket memorandum" or the "appearance docket" or memorandum or something of that kind. It is, of course, very necessary that this memorandum should be kept, in order that the attorneys might have something to refer to, as to the proceedings in the case, without going through the complete record. But it is still more necessary that there should be a proper record of the case, because if there were not, as the gentleman can easily see, there would be no real judgment entered in the case.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I will.

Mr. GARD. The idea of the gentleman is that there should be a final record?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. GARD. This provides simply for a daily memorandum or record.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Let me call the gentleman's attention to the fact that this was evidently put in with the idea of not requiring the great formality that is required, for instance, in the supreme court. The idea is that this court shall be able to try cases expeditiously, so as to get rid of a lot of these cases. That is why they are given the power to make their own rules, so that with these smaller cases they can go on and try them as they try them now, except in those cases where a jury trial is required.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. My friend from Minnesota is too good a lawyer not to realize that there are certain constitutional limitations in the way of a proceeding of that kind. There are certain things that must be shown of record in order to make up a judgment.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. There is not anything in that particular sentence that limits the character of that entry. It may be just as complete as it would be in the supreme court. It says:

> A memorandum of each action by the court shall be noted by the clerk on the docket, and shall be a sufficient record thereof.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. But a memorandum is very different from a complete entry of a judgment. At least it would be usually so understood.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. That is all you have in a justice's court. It is a memorandum on the docket of the justice, and that memorandum is in effect the judgment and the whole record of the case.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman will pardon me. Notwithstanding the informality or license that is granted to the justice's court by all other courts, by which certain matters may be considered that are not in the record, there are still certain requisites of a judgment in a justice's court, and if he does not get them in there there will be no judgment.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. There is nothing in this language to indicate that it should not go in, and it is provided that the court shall make its own rules as to what that memorandum shall contain.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The word "memorandum" has a perfectly definite meaning, and I do not see how the gentleman can write into it or get into it something that the dictionary does not give.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 3184) to create a Federal power commission and to define its powers and duties, to provide for the improvement of navigation, for the development of water power, for the use of lands of the United States in relation thereto, to repeal section 18 of "An act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes," approved August 8, 1917, and for other purposes, had requested a conference with the House of Representatives on the bill and amendments, and had appointed Mr. JONES of Washington, Mr. NELSON, Mr. BANKHEAD, Mr. SMOOT, Mr. FALL, and Mr. MYERS as conferees on the part of the Senate.

MUNICIPAL COURT OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the bill be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Be it enacted, etc., That the municipal court of the District of Columbia shall have exclusive jurisdiction in the following cases of all claims and demands in which the value of the personal property claimed or the debt or damages claimed, exclusive of interest and cost, does not exceed $2,000, namely, in the classes of cases over which the court had jurisdiction immediately prior to the passage of this act, and in action for the recovery of damages for assault, assault and battery, slander, libel, malicious prosecution, and breach of promise to marry. The concurrent jurisdiction of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia in any such case and the right to remove such cases to said supreme court by the statutory writ of certiorari are hereby abolished. Said municipal court shall also have jurisdiction of all civil causes transferred to it for trial and disposition by order of said supreme court.

With a committee amendment:

On page 1, line 7, strike out "$2,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$1,000."

Mr. IGOE. Mr. Chairman, I offer a substitute by making it $3,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri offers a substitute, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Substitute offered by Mr. IGOE: Page 1, line 7, strike out "$1,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$3,000."

Mr. IGOE. Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of this bill. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD] has pointed out some matters in the bill that might well be amended, certain language that might well be changed, and when we read those I presume that they will be properly taken care of.

The suggestion that was made that under the language contained in the bill the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia might transfer to this municipal court any action pending at this time is perhaps a correct one. I think it was intended that the supreme court might transfer to the municipal court any of those actions pending at the time this act takes effect which would be within the jurisdiction of the municipal court after the passage of this act. I do not think anything else was intended.

Now, it is true, as stated by gentlemen who appeared at the hearings, that this bill will probably not greatly relieve the supreme court, because the business of that court is increasing every month. But if this bill is not passed the congestion in that court will be so great that instead of waiting two years, as now, to get a trial, litigants will have to wait three or four years. A condition of that kind is absolutely intolerable. It is almost a complete denial of justice as things now exist. A plaintiff may file an action in the supreme court, and he can not hasten the trial. He may elect to bring his action in the municipal court, where that court now has jurisdiction, and the defendant against whom a judgment is obtained may appeal it to the supreme court, and so the matter again becomes delayed and the court docket congested. The testimony before the committee was that this municipal court pays into the Treasury of the United States or of the District of Columbia, whichever it may be, in excess of all the expenses of running the court, the sum of $100,000 a year, and I think we may well consider whether it is not proper and just to these litigants to provide the machinery necessary to give them prompt trial and justice, no matter what the expense may be.

Now, the limitation of $1,000 recommended by the committee is, I think, too small. I think rather that it should be increased to $3,000. The judges of the municipal court are appointed by the President. The law says that they shall be learned in the law; that they shall have been residents of this District for a certain length of time. Now, if these men are not competent to try these cases which come to them, some one has made a mistake. I believe we can get judges upon this bench who are capable of trying these cases; and, as far as I know, the men who are there now are competent and capable of trying them. It is true that the bill is presented by residents of the District of Columbia. There are many things in it relating to the practice which are peculiar to the District of Columbia. I am not competent to take the Code of the District of Columbia and the procedure and practice and write a bill which I am sure will be satisfactory to the practitioners at this bar or to the litigants who must submit their causes to the courts of this District.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. IGOE. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. IGOE. The practice in the District of Columbia is familiar perhaps to very few Members of this House. This bill was presented to the committee by men who are familiar with the practice here, by the judges of the supreme court, the judges of the municipal court, the members of the bar association, and the business men and others who are interested in these various associations here. It seems to me we might follow their suggestions upon matters of this kind, which affect their property rights, their money, and many of their other rights.

Mr. DOWELL. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. IGOE. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. DOWELL. I assume the gentleman has the information, but it seems to me that his argument is based entirely upon the proportion of business that will come to this court with this amendment adopted. Now, has the gentleman the information as to whether or not the judges in the municipal court will be able to care for all of the cases within the limit of $3,000?

Mr. IGOE. My understanding is that they will be; but I am frank to say that I believe that later on these judges, or some one for them, will ask for an increase of their salaries, and I think they ought to get it. If they are men who are capable and competent, they ought to get more money than $3,600 a year.

Now, the situation to-day is that there are 300 cases a year appealed from the municipal court to the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, and retried when that court can get to them. After they get into the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, it takes two years to get the trial there, and then when the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia gets through with them they may be appealed to the court of appeals. Why, a man can never get a case disposed of under the present system. There is not a lawyer or business man here who would want to be subjected to such delays as are now incident to trials in the District of Columbia, and some relief must be given. If this bill it not in the proper form let us amend it so that it will give to the people of the District of Columbia speedy trials. In the municipal court now you can get a trial, I understand, in some instances within a few days, but when the case is tried, if it is one that can be appealed, it goes to the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, and there it is placed in cold storage for about two years before it is tried again. So I think some legislation of this kind must be provided.

The suggestion has been made that perhaps the supreme court will not be relieved, and I agree with that suggestion. I think the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia should have been given the two additional judges that have been asked for during the last several years, and that this House voted to give, but for some reason or another the law was not finally passed. As far as I am concerned, I repeat again that this Congress ought to give to the people of this District whatever legislation is necessary to provide a just system for the trial of cases, and that they ought to be speedily tried, so that litigants may know what their rights are and may recover that which is justly due them.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I am personally in favor of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. IGOE]; but, in any event, if the Committee of the Whole does not see fit to go as far as the gentleman from Missouri suggests, I believe it certainly should retain the figure of $2,000 in the bill as first presented.

I would like to suggest that, inasmuch as the people of the District have no representative upon the floor of this House, we are in duty bound to give consideration to the expression of sentiment in the District of Columbia when it comes to us from reputable sources and from organizations that legitimately represent the sentiments of the District. In that connection I want to call your attention to the fact that the Chamber of Commerce of Washington, through its committee, has given great study to this question, and its recommendation on this point was for a jurisdiction up to $3,500, which is $500 more than the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. IGOE] proposes. Perhaps it has been gone over, but I should like to emphasize that the judicial system here consists of five courts, the juvenile court and the police court, whose jurisdiction is indicated by their titles; the municipal court, which has heretofore been a court with very small jurisdiction and without a jury; the supreme court, which handles civil matters, important criminal matters, and a great many appeals from the municipal court; and the court of appeals.

As the gentleman has said, there has been great delay in the handling of cases before the supreme court, cases lying dormant two or three years before the trial, so that it amounts to a substantial denial of justice. I would like to emphasize this thought, that the denial of justice under those conditions inevitably rests most heavily upon those who can least afford to bear it.

The man who has means can give his bond and can wait his time for trial, but the man who has no means, if he is suing for $300 or $400 wages or damages, if he has to go into the supreme court either through an appeal from the municipal court or original jurisdiction, he is absolutely denied justice, because he can not wait two or three years.

The propositions before us now involve the question merely as to giving the municipal court jurisdiction in cases between $1,000 and $3,000 or between $1,000 and $2,000. I am advised that for the last three months the cases that have been filed in the Supreme Court of the District average about $11,000. That is the average amount involved in the cases in the supreme court. There have been two cases involving half a million dollars each, and, eliminating them, still the average is $7,500. It is apparent from that that even if this jurisdiction is given to the municipal court and the figure is raised to $3,000, the jurisdiction retained by the supreme court will still be ample to leave it all the work it can do, but it will have proper time to try the important matters that they do retain. On the other hand, the five judges of the municipal court are satisfied that they can, for the present, handle the business with that limit of jurisdiction.

Let me also emphasize that as to these cases between $1,000 and $2,000, or $1,000 and $3,000, if they are tried before the municipal court instead of the supreme court, and there is a jury, it will be the same kind of a jury that you would have sitting in the case if the supreme court tried them, because it is a part of the supreme court panel; it is certified from the supreme court. So the same jury would try it in one court as in the other, except that it would be tried about two years sooner in the municipal court than in the supreme court.

Then, if there is an appeal, the appeal is not on questions of fact but is upon points of law, and, if there is any difference between the capacity of the municipal court and supreme court and their infallibility, the appeal from the municipal court on points of law would go to the Court of Appeals of the District, just the same as it would have gone from the supreme court to the court of appeals. But, again, it would reach that court long before it could have reached it in the present course of things. Therefore the cases will receive the same careful consideration that they would receive under present conditions, except that justice will be granted in season.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask for three minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The consideration of these cases will be better in the municipal court, because the supreme court has to hasten through their cases.

Mr. CRAMTON. It is not only that, if you wait two or three years the witnesses may die or remove, and conditions change. So really waiting two or three years is a denial of justice, whereas a prompt trial in the municipal court would be secured.

As to cases between $1,000 and $3,000 in amount, it is just as desirable to have prompt justice as if the amount was $999. Furthermore, if there is a case involving damages the complainant brings his suit, perhaps expecting to get $1,000 eventually—and no complainant ever asks when he brings his suit for just the amount he wants to get because he knows the habit of juries to scale things down—he will ask for $3,000, and therefore take it out of the jurisdiction given by the amendment—he is taken out of the jurisdiction of the municipal court and sent to the other court where he must wait two or three years, and eventually if the witnesses do not die, and he does not himself die, he will get a judgment for less than $1,000.

As to the capacity of the court it is my information that the members of this court must have been in practice for five years before they are appointed. In any event that is the fact as to the present court. They have been in active practice from 6 to 10 years. Their work has been so satisfactory that they are indorsed by the chamber of commerce, and furthermore there is no criticism heard anywhere. I submit that every consideration for the welfare of litigants in the District would increase the jurisdiction of the court above the thousand dollars. I would prefer it to go to $3,000, but in any event it should not go below $2,000.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Chairman, I have not heard any reason advanced for limiting the jurisdiction of this court to $1,000, except that that is the general average limit of jurisdiction in cities approximating the size of Washington for courts of this character. But that rule it seems to me should not obtain in this case. There is no basis for it here because these judges are appointed by the President of the United States and must be, as has been said, attorneys in active practice in the city for at least five years.

I believe the usefulness of this court can be greatly increased by increasing the jurisdiction to at least $3,000. I believe that the judges who are serving are fully competent to try such cases. I sincerely hope that the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri, increasing the jurisdiction to $3,000, will be adopted.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUSTED. Yes.

Mr. DEMPSEY. I see by section 6 that these judgments of the municipal court are to remain in force for only six years. This becomes a court of record under this act with a seal, and six years is the ordinary time that judgments of courts not of record are in force.

Mr. HUSTED. I think that section should be amended to conform with the change in the character of the court.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. They can be made judgments of the Supreme Court of the District by being filed there. If you do not file the transcript in the supreme court it only remains in force six years, but if you file the transcript in the supreme court it has the force and effect of a judgment of the supreme court.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Is there not this difference, that probably, in order to retain the force of your judgment, you would have to resue it in six years?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Oh, no.

Mr. DEMPSEY. That is the result, as I understand it.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. No; when a judgment from a municipal court is filed in the supreme court it becomes practically a judgment of the supreme court. My understanding is that then the limitation that would apply to a judgment of the supreme court would apply to the municipal judgment. Where you do not file it, it expires in six years.

Mr. DEMPSEY. From decisions in the State of New York upon practically similar facts I should be inclined to doubt that, unless the gentleman had some other authority. I would say another word to the gentleman from New York [Mr. HUSTED] if I may. In addition to the arguments advanced by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. HUSTED] you have this state of facts: During the war we brought here an enormous number of people for temporary employment in the departments. Many of these people have causes of action arising out of accidents and other circumstances. They should have their causes of action tried while they remain residents of this District and not be compelled to come back here to enforce their causes of action after the forces in the departments have been reduced, and they have gone long distances from the city of Washington.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I understand there is an amendment pending to increase the jurisdiction from $1,000, as provided by the committee, to $3,000 offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. IGOE]. I hope the amendment will not prevail. Practically the only testimony heard by the committee—I think with a single exception—was from the judges who preside over this court, and who, of course, want to increase the dignity of their position. If you increase this jurisdiction to $3,000 you may as well merge this court into the Supreme Court of the District and do away with the municipal court—transfer all of the jurisdiction of the municipal to the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, or else make this a division or branch of the Supreme Court of the District. This is a municipal court, and we have here in the District two appellate courts practically from that court, the supreme court and the court of appeals. I submit that by attempting to help out the supreme court, the docket of which is rather crowded, we ought to be a little bit slow in increasing the jurisdiction of the municipal court, because if you are not the result will be that you will find a mighty crowded docket in the municipal court, and we will be besieged as we have been in the last three or four years to appoint additional judges to that court and also to increase their salary. If we are going to attempt to take care of the municipal court needs of the District of Columbia I think we have gone far enough in increasing its jurisdiction to $1,000. I do not believe there are a half dozen States in the Union where a purely municipal court is vested with jurisdiction over causes of action amounting to $3,000.

As I recall it, there is one State where I think the jurisdiction is $2,500, but in most of the States it is either one or two thousand dollars. There has been no overwhelming amount of testimony presented to the committee as to why we should increase this jurisdiction for this amount proposed by the gentleman from Missouri. The committee heard a member of the bar association, one of the judges of the supreme court, and I believe one or two judges of the municipal court, and the committee, after full and careful consideration, although the bill provided for a jurisdiction of $2,000, reduced that amount to $1,000. There is no good reason why even the amount provided in the bill should be increased by $1,000, and I certainly trust the amendment will not prevail.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. HUSTED. Does not the gentleman think that the fact that the supreme court calendar is congested is a good and sufficient reason for increasing the jurisdiction of this court, if you have men who are competent and machinery which is capable of passing on those cases just as well as the supreme court?

Mr. WALSH. No; I do not. This cry of a congested calendar you can hear from every United States court throughout the country. The cry is that the calendar is congested; that they can not get rid of the cases; that they must have more judges or less work to do. The situation in the District is no different from what it is anywhere else.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. GARD. I note on page 12 of the hearings, where Mr. Brown said that the desire was for the judges of the supreme court to have all of the time to give to the important cases of the Government, and that that should be the class of cases they should try. I submit that is not the usual idea in respect to the Supreme Court of the District.

Mr. WALSH. Certainly not. Their duty is to take care of all of the cases that come within their jurisdiction. The fact that the Supreme Court of the District has a congested calendar is no reason why we should enlarge the jurisdiction of an inferior court, in expectation that you are going to be able to take care of that class of cases. While I have not the honor of the acquaintance of any of these judges and never have seen any of them except the two who appeared before the committee—and I would not cast any reflection on their ability or integrity—yet I submit that as the general proposition, whether the judges be appointed by the governors or by the President, judges appointed to the position of municipal courts are not, as a rule, as capable as those who are nominated and appointed to superior courts or courts having jury trials or of appellate jurisdiction.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, the argument of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] seems to be directed, first, to the fact that the committee has not had sufficient hearings. What are sufficient hearings?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEMPSEY. It is not necessary to have prolonged hearings——

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEMPSEY. In a moment.

Mr. WALSH. But the gentleman ought not to start off with a misstatement. I never said that.

Mr. DEMPSEY. The gentleman said they had very limited hearings.

Mr. WALSH. I did not make any such statement, as my remarks will show.

Mr. DEMPSEY. I was listening, and my understanding was that the gentleman's first criticism was in respect to the extent of the hearings. I say that hearings of a particular volume are not necessary. The only point to be reached by hearings is to convince the committee of the fact which is to be proven, and I did not hear the gentleman from Massachusetts question at all the statement, and it seems to be admitted by everyone here that the supreme court calendar is congested and that you have to wait from two to three years to get a case to trial, a very undesirable condition of affairs.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. The hearings convinced the committee that the jurisdiction should be reduced from $2,000, as provided in the bill, to $1,000, as reported by the committee.

Mr. DEMPSEY. The hearings convinced the committee that the jurisdiction should be enlarged, and the committee reached the conclusion that it should be a certain amount. Now, the question before the Committee of the Whole is whether that committee reached a correct determination as to what the amount should be, and we find on discussing it that gentlemen here have convinced us that if you are to afford any genuine relief to the supreme court, if you are to enable these causes which are pending for trial and should be tried in justice to the claimant to be tried, you will have to enlarge your jurisdiction, make it more than $1,000; make it at least $3,000. This is plain from the testimony. It is immaterial that the committee as a whole may have reversed the subcommittee, and said it should be $1,000 instead of $2,000. The real question is what should the amount be, and a fair conclusion seems to be that the amount should be at least $3,000.

Mr. CRAMTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEMPSEY. I will.

Mr. CRAMTON. The gentleman from Massachusetts having suggested that customarily judges of the greatest capacity are not found in the municipal courts, would it not be the fact that having made it a court of record and of greater jurisdiction and having given it a greater dignity, as a result the greater the capacity in the men we will be able to secure to serve on the court, and that all litigants before it will benefit therefrom?

Mr. DEMPSEY. I agree with the gentleman. I was going to come to that point in my discussion.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. If the gentleman will yield further, the gentleman from Massachusetts made some statement in reference to the usual amount of jurisdiction. In my State municipal courts have a jurisdiction for any amount, and I have known causes involving $100,000 to be commenced there.

Mr. DEMPSEY. I am glad to hear that. Now, let us come to this point of the discussion of the gentleman from Massachusetts on the fitness and capacity of these judges to adjudicate causes which come before them. I say as to that, first, as to the judges who are in office there has been an investigation by the chamber of commerce or some other like body of the District, and upon an impartial investigation, conducted solely with the object of ascertaining fitness, without any bias or prejudice, having that object in view alone, they find that the present judges are fit for the duties which they will have to perform under this enlarged jurisdiction. Second, as to the future, as the gentleman from Michigan justly observed, the appointing power will take into consideration in making appointments the more arduous, the more important, duties to be performed by these judges, and they will make their selections in accordance with the duties to be performed. Another thing, and I briefly referred to it in my question to the gentleman from New York, we have taken on here a very large body of people who live here temporarily. They came here from the districts of all of us. They have had to reside in the District of Columbia. They have come into positions where they have causes of action which have been brought to my personal attention. Now, when they are soon to lose their positions, when they are certain to go to their distant homes, are they to be forced to one of two alternatives, either to lose an honest cause of action, to be deprived of a debt which is honestly owing them, or be obliged to come back here at a large and unnecessary expense to fight these actions which they can not have tried because we neglect this opportunity to confer adequate and proper jurisdiction upon this court?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I trust that the committee will sustain the amendment which the committee recommends. The main desire upon the part of the Committee on the Judiciary, endeavoring to speak for the people of Washington on this matter, is that there shall be created here a real municipal court. The one we have at the present time is hardly worthy of that name. It is nothing more than an ordinary justice of the peace court, that is well known in many of the States in this Union. We want to establish a real, genuine municipal court, something along the line of the one which is now established in the city of Chicago, and which every city in this Union ought to have at the earliest possible date.

The amount of jurisdiction, so far as this legislation is concerned, is secondary. After we have created here a real municipal court, one with real jurisdiction, with real authority to act, and where its acts will be of force and effect, and where it will not be necessary to take up the work and review it and try it over by the supreme court, thus relieving the supreme court of a great deal of work, it will then be an easy matter to increase the jurisdiction if it is found necessary. I believe that the Judiciary Committee in limiting this to $1,000, after we had heard those who appeared, ought to be sustained. The subcommittee of the Judiciary Committee, which first had this matter in charge, and of which I am the chairman, gave consideration to it carefully. We heard those who desired to be heard upon the matter, and it was again taken up in the full committee. It was the judgment of the committee that jurisdiction at the present time should be fixed at $1,000, with the understanding that if the municipal court becomes a real vehicle of justice and expedition of public business we can then easily increase jurisdiction to $2,000 or $3,000 if found necessary. At this time we ought not to do it, and the committee's recommendation of $1,000 ought to be sustained.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I would like to arrive at some agreement as to time.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I will ask for only a few minutes.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I ask unanimous consent that at the end of 12 minutes the debate on this amendment and amendments thereto be closed.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment and amendments thereto close in 12 minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MOORE] is recognized.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I have looked at the hearings, and, so far as the report furnished me discloses, there has been no effort whatever made by any of the judges of the municipal court to affect this legislation, directly or indirectly. I think my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] is mistaken in assuming that there is any purpose, or desire, or gesture on the part of the municipal court or any of its judges to aggrandize power. Now, it is conceded that there ought to be an increase of the jurisdictional limit. And what is the evidence upon the question of amount? As I understand, the business interests of the District of Columbia advocate a higher limit than $1,000. The bar of the District of Columbia advocates a higher sum. Unless I misread the hearings, the distinguished chairman of the Judiciary Committee himself indicates a trend of mind in favor of more than $1,000. There does not seem to be a scintilla of evidence offered before the committee that combats the expediency of making the amount $3,000 or, at least, $2,000.

If that is the situation, why should not such an increase in the jurisdictional limit be provided? Are not the people of the District of Columbia entitled to be heard here and to have some consideration here upon a matter of this sort?

If we stop at $1,000 and at the same time provide that the court shall have authority to try certain torts, cases of assault and battery, malicious prosecution, and breach of promise, over which at this time it has no authority, the provision will be mere brutum fulmen, because plaintiffs having causes of action of that character will not go into a court whose jurisdiction is limited to $1,000.

We will do a vain thing if we pass legislation specifying $1,000. We will not accord any right of substantial value to litigants who have claims growing out of the torts enumerated in this section, or locate in any cases of that kind in the municipal court. Why should not the amount be $2,000 or $3,000, as asked by the people of the District of Columbia? The judges of the municipal court are men of capacity and character, and, as I understand, good lawyers, and that is just as apt to be true in the future as it is now. The judges are as well qualified and competent to try $2,000 or $3,000 cases as those who are serving as judges in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Yes, sir.

Mr. WALSH. Following the gentleman's line of argument, why not make the jurisdiction $10,000?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. You can not decide these matters in any absolutely logical way. We have to employ our experience and general knowledge in determining the limit.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has expired.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, this proposed amendment as made by the gentleman from Missouri brings us face to face with what is the attitude of this House as expressed in the Committee of the Whole. In other words, do we want to maintain a municipal court which was graduated into that title from a court of justices of the peace, or do we want to practically merge, as the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] has said, the municipal court into the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia?

I think that the trouble in the District of Columbia regarding the accumulation of litigation is that the very small cases are allowed to be appealed directly from the municipal court to the supreme court, and from the supreme court to the court of appeals, so that necessarily the docket of the supreme court is apparently crowded with these small appellate cases.

Now, there is not much big litigation in the District of Columbia. The population here rather precludes such elements of large litigation; and the trouble that exists here is in the fact that if you start a small case the man who is aggrieved by the verdict or the judgment has a right to make appeal to the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, and thence to the court of appeals, whereas there should be exclusive jurisdiction up to a reasonable amount in the first court. In other words, the municipal court should have the exclusive and conclusive jurisdiction except upon writs of error in all of these very small cases. Now, that is the idea the Committee on the Judiciary had in mind, I am frank to say to the members of the committee. On the other hand, if it is the temper of the House now to go beyond that, and to say these five municipal court judges——

Mr. DEMPSEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARD. Very gladly.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Does not the gentleman find that throughout the several States the court of general jurisdiction and the county courts have a concurrent jurisdiction up to the limit of jurisdiction of the county courts? For instance, in the State of New York the supreme court has general jurisdiction and the county court has jurisdiction up to $2,000. So that to the amount of $2,000 the two courts have concurrent jurisdiction. And would not that be exactly what would be done if this amendment prevailed?

Mr. GARD. I am frank to say that my idea about this matter is this: I want to afford to the people of the District of Columbia every facility in the matter of courts—every possible facility. They are entitled to it, and they should have it; but what they need mostly is a municipal court which, up to $1,000, will have practically conclusive jurisdiction. Since now when the cases are tried—and they can be tried within a few days—they have the right of appeal, and cases are long-drawn out. But if these appeals were discontinued and those cases could be settled, they would not clutter up the docket of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia.

That is the condition that confronts the District of Columbia to-day. It is not the big litigation which crowds the docket of the supreme court, but it is the little stuff that comes up from the municipal court on appeal, which is allowed to accumulate there by reason of the fact, doubtless, that they do not have the time to try these little things which should have been disposed of in the court below.

Mr. ROSE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARD. Yes.

Mr. ROSE. Do I understand the gentleman to say that up to a certain amount he would deny the right of appeal to a higher court?

Mr. GARD. Yes; to the Supreme Court of the District. This bill does it now. It gives them the right to appeal to the court of appeals, which is the second appeal.

Mr. ROSE. I merely wanted to say in this connection that I agree with the gentleman in that attitude.

Mr. GARD. If a man brings a suit for $10 in the District of Columbia now and a judgment is had against the defendant the defendant can appeal to the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia and have absolutely a new trial all over again. That practice clutters it all up. And after that is done he can go to the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia and have a hearing there.

Mr. ROSE. I think it would be a step in the right direction, because if there is one thing that the lawyers of the country are up against it is the fact that the people are always complaining about the law's delay.

Mr. GARD. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, as indicated by the hearings, I was in favor of $2,000 as the maximum. I believe that is where we ought to fix it for the present. I do think it should be more than $1,000. I want the committee to understand my position in reference to the matter. If it is made $2,000 and we should find later on that it ought to go beyond that, we can then amend the law. The chamber of commerce asked for $3,000, the judges of the municipal court and of the supreme court and the other bodies interested agreed on $2,000, and I introduced the bill with that amount as the maximum.

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired. The question is on agreeing to the substitute amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. IGOE].

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I submit an amendment to the substitute to strike out the figures "$3,000," in the Igoe amendment, and insert "$1,500."

Mr. IGOE. I make the point of order, Mr. Chairman, that a substitute is already pending.

The CHAIRMAN. A substitute is in order.

Mr. WALSH. Strike out "$3,000" and insert "$1,500."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WALSH as a substitute for the amendment by Mr. IGOE: Strike out "$3,000" and insert "$1,500."

Mr. DOWELL. A point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DOWELL. The amendment suggested by the gentleman from Massachusetts is clearly an amendment to the one offered by the gentleman from Missouri. There can be no question about it. It simply changes the figures, and can only be designated as an amendment.

Mr. WALSH. It is a substitute.

Mr. DOWELL. Whatever you may term it, it is still an amendment.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOWELL. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Nobody is questioning but that a substitute is an amendment.

Mr. DOWELL. But this is in the third degree, and therefore it is not in order at this time.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Oh, Mr. Chairman, the rules specifically provide for an amendment, an amendment to an amendment, a substitute for the original amendment, and an amendment to the substitute.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. They are all amendments. Certainly, I yield.

Mr. DOWELL. But under that you can not introduce an amendment in the third degree and call it a substitute simply to get through under the rule.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. You can introduce an amendment in the fourth degree under that and call it an amendment to the substitute, because the rule specifically provides for that method of amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. Rule XIX is very specific in its definition of the right of amendment. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] states that the substitute he offers is actually an amendment. Under the rule this is perfectly proper and in order, as an amendment can be offered in the form of a substitute, which can also be amended. The Chair therefore overrules the point of order.

Mr. BRIGGS. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BRIGGS. If the substitute to the amendment and the committee amendment should be voted down, that would bring the original bill before the committee, would it not—$2,000?

The CHAIRMAN. It would. The question is on agreeing to the substitute amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH].

The question was taken, and the substitute was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the substitute offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. IGOE].

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. WALSH. A division, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. A division is called for.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 19, noes 22.

So the substitute was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now comes on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. WALSH. A division, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. A division is called for.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DEMPSEY. What are we voting on now?

The CHAIRMAN. On the amendment offered by the committee.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. To make it $1,000.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 9, noes 25.

The CHAIRMAN. On this vote the ayes are 9, the noes are 25, and the committee amendment is rejected.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of no quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts makes the point of no quorum. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Eighty-five gentlemen are present—not a quorum.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri moves that the committee do now rise.

The question being taken, Mr. DYER demanded a division.

Pending the division,

Mr. DYER. I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chairman appointed Mr. DYER and Mr. IGOE.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 4, noes 103.

The CHAIRMAN. A quorum is present. The committee refuses to rise. The question now recurs on the committee amendment.

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. WALSH) there were—ayes 25, noes 26.

Accordingly the committee amendment was rejected.

Mr. GARD. I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GARD: Page 2, line 4, after the word "of," strike out the word "all" and insert after the word "causes" the words "now pending in the supreme court which are of the classes and amounts over which the municipal court had jurisdiction immediately prior to the passage of this act and actions included by this act."

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this amendment is to clarify what I think is unquestionably the meaning of the committee, because under the law as it now stands the supreme court could transfer any class of cases—patent cases, Government cases, or any other cases—to the municipal court for trial. I do not think that was the intention of the committee. I do not think it should be the action of the House, and I offer this amendment to cover the hearing of cases which heretofore have been within the jurisdiction of the municipal court and are now in the supreme court, and the cases which come within its jurisdiction by reason of this amendment, so that the supreme court may transfer those down to the court below, assuming that it is an inferior court, for the purpose of being heard there.

Mr. DOWELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARD. Yes.

Mr. DOWELL. Assuming that there is a case on appeal, would this amendment bring it back to the municipal court to be retried there as an appeal case?

Mr. GARD. No; this is simply to provide for the transfer of the class of cases included under the bill that we are now passing. It does not automatically transfer anything, but it gives permission to the court to transfer cases in these amounts and of these classes to the court below.

Mr. WALSH. Does the gentleman see any difficulty or obstacle in that sort of a legislative provision transferring a suit from a court which at the time the suit was entered had original or exclusive jurisdiction of that cause, transferring it to a later tribunal which is given exclusive jurisdiction of the cause?

Mr. GARD. I think the language is probably necessary, because there might be some causes now in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, pending cases which should be transferred by reason of the passage of this act.

Mr. WALSH. Does not the gentleman think that the parties ought to have something to say about that? They brought their suits in the supreme court, and they have a right to expect them to be tried there.

Mr. GARD. If we give the municipal court this increased jurisdiction, I think it is very proper to transfer the cases, because if we give them the jurisdiction, and they do not have any cases, then they will not have anything to do.

Mr. WALSH. We give them the jurisdiction for the future, not for the past.

Mr. GARD. Oh, no; for pending cases.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARD. Yes.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Is not the matter simply a question of a change of procedure? It does not change rights at all, and you have a perfect right to change procedure at any time, have you not?

Mr. GARD. I think that is what it amounts to.

Mr. DEMPSEY. For instance, you can change a statute of limitation—a pending right—can you not?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. The transfer of cases from State courts to Federal courts or from Federal courts to State courts is a common thing, and no difficulty or embarrassment results in conducting the case in the tribunal which it finally reaches.

Mr. WALSH. If the gentleman will permit, it is very seldom that you hear of cases being transferred bodily from a superior court to an inferior court as the result of increasing the jurisdiction of the inferior court. The cases which at the time they were entered were within the exclusive jurisdiction of the court in which they were brought are usually tried in that court.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. If something of this kind is not done there will be no court to try these cases, because we give the municipal court exclusive jurisdiction of them. Consequently we ought to have some method of transferring these cases to some court that can try them.

Mr. WALSH. There is nothing in this to prevent the supreme court trying cases entered prior to the passage of this act. This does not deprive that court of jurisdiction in pending cases.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. It gives the municipal court exclusive jurisdiction in certain cases.

Mr. WALSH. I know; but that is on cases filed in the future.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD].

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. WALSH) there were—ayes 20, noes 7.

Accordingly the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That hereafter said municipal court shall be a court of record, shall have a seal, and shall have the same terms of court as those now obtaining, or as hereafter modified, respecting the circuit branches of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia. A memorandum of each action by the court shall be noted by the clerk of the docket and shall be a sufficient record thereof.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 2, line 11, strike out the word "of" and insert in lieu thereof the word "on."

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I should like to be heard on the committee amendment. It strikes out the word "of" and inserts the word "on." Yet you can not tell what it will mean after the committee amendment is agreed to, if it is agreed to. Here is a proposition to create a court of record which is not to keep records. While it is true the bill says that a memorandum of the action of the court noted on the docket shall be a record, the municipal court does that now. Every justice of the peace court anywhere keeps some kind of a docket and notes the action of the court on the docket, but that is not keeping a record of the court. How would you exemplify a record of this court? No judgment is entered excepting a memorandum on the docket, perhaps in pencil. Suppose you want to file a transcript of the judgment of the court to some other jurisdiction under the statutes of the United States. What will you find? What will the transcript consist of? A copy of the docket with a memorandum entered. I do not know what the memorandum will be. It may say "$500." That may be a memorandum noted by the clerk, or it may say a judgment for $500 entered on such and such a day.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. DEMPSEY. How would it do to strike out the words "a memorandum" and insert in place "minutes of the proceedings in." Then strike out "and shall be a sufficient record thereof," so that it will read:

Minutes of the proceedings in each action by the court shall be noted by the clerk on the docket.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I do not know, but, after all, the methods of keeping the records of courts throughout the United States are very similar. I do not know what advantage there is to be gained by adopting some sloppy method of keeping records, which never will be kept accurately, over the present system of properly keeping the records of the courts.

Mr. DEMPSEY. My understanding of the proceedings in all courts of record, as to the keeping of the record, provides that the real record is supposed to be the judge's record of the proceedings as the case progresses. The clerk keeps the record as a matter of course, but is supposed to be under the direction of the judge. I do not think that this sentence is at all necessary.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Ordinarily when a judgment is entered in court, formal entry is made as to the record of judgment, and is preserved. The dockets of the court may be preserved; they usually are for some length of time, but they contain only the notation of the proceedings of the court as the case progresses. The record of the judgment is a highly authenticated document. You get a transcript of the judgment of the record, and it recites that the court on such a day entered such a judgment, and that is a copy of the judgment entered. Here there is no copy, it is a "memorandum noted on the docket." Well, courts keep dockets, but the record is very different. I have not practiced law for so long that perhaps my judgment is not worth much of anything, but I do not believe that there is ever any advantage in trying to introduce informal methods of doing business, so that after they are introduced no one will be certain as to what has been done.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, my understanding of the method of keeping the records of courts of record is that the original record is supposed to be kept by the judge who presides at the particular term of court—of course, the clerk keeps the record of what transpires, under the direction of the court. But if there is any dispute as to what is the correct record we refer not to the minutes of the clerk but to the minutes of the judge. The record to which the gentleman from Illinois refers is a totally different record. It is a record which is entered in the office of the clerk upon formal judgment, and is filed after the case has been tried and determined. It is not my understanding that this bill deals with that record at all.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. If the gentleman will yield, I supposed that that was exactly what it did deal with. It says that "a memorandum of each action by the court will be noted by the clerk and shall be a sufficient record thereof." That means that he is not supposed to keep any other record.

Mr. DEMPSEY. I do not believe that it is intended for that purpose. If it is, I agree with the gentleman from Illinois that it is not proper. I do not see any necessity for the provision at all, and I think the act would be complete with that sentence stricken out. This is a court of record, and you will have a record kept. The formal judgment will be prepared by the attorney and entered in the proper office from the minutes kept by the clerk during the trial.

Mr. DOWELL. If the gentleman will strike out the language "it shall be a sufficient record thereof" and require the clerk to keep a memorandum——

Mr. DEMPSEY. I think it would be better to say a record of the proceedings of the court shall be kept by the clerk and stop right there.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 7, after the word "have," strike out the words "the same" and insert the word "such," and in line 8, after the word "court," strike out the balance of the section and insert the following: "for the transaction of business as it may prescribe," so that it will read:

"SEC. 2. That hereafter said municipal court shall be a court of record, shall have a seal, and shall have such terms of court for the transaction of business as it may prescribe."

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I offer this amendment to do away with the imperfect statement of what the court record shall be. It is idle to assume that a memorandum made on paper or a slate shall constitute a court record and be a sufficient record thereof in the way that a court record is generally understood by the courts of the United States, and they should be entirely competent within their own jurisdiction to determine what their record shall consist of. At any rate, the record should be so complete and final as to enable the reviewing court to determine the issue when it is brought to it for determination. Therefore, the amendment I have offered strikes out all language concerning the terms as relating to the circuit branch of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, strikes out the trivial stuff about memorandum, and provides that the court shall be a court of record, shall have a seal, and have terms of court for the transaction of its business, to be prescribed by it.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARD. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Does not the gentleman think that some terms ought to be prescribed by law rather than to let the court say when it will have its terms?

Mr. GARD. No; I think not. I think the court itself should have the power to determine.

Mr. WALSH. Why this court any more than the supreme court?

Mr. GARD. The supreme court, as I understand it, starts in with a term and recesses from time to time, the same term probably including the whole year.

Mr. WALSH. I mean the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia.

Mr. GARD. I thought the gentleman referred to the Supreme Court of the United States. This language would probably be modified by the language in section 4, which provides an additional term for a jury term, to be begun on the first Tuesday in August and terminate on the first Tuesday of the second month thereafter, but I am inclined to believe that the matter of the time of the beginning of the term can safely be left to the courts to determine.

Mr. WALSH. You will not relieve much congestion if you do that.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARD. Yes.

Mr. HUSTED. Can the gentleman inform us whether the time of holding the terms of the supreme court in the District is fixed by law? Does not the supreme court fix the time of holding its own terms? If that is true, the gentleman's amendment certainly should be agreed to.

Mr. GARD. I have the Code of the District here, but unfortunately I am not familiar enough with it to turn immediately to that.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARD. Yes.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Generally speaking, is it not a fact that courts of record in the several States do fix their own terms?

Mr. GARD. Yes; and I think they should.

Mr. WALSH. Generally speaking, they do not.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. The object is to have the terms of the municipal courts come at the same time as the terms of the supreme court. The gentleman can see the reason for that. There is a provision in this bill that the jurors are to be certified from the supreme court to the municipal court, and consequently the two courts should be in session at the same time, so that from time to time deficiencies may be made up in the panel of jurors that are sitting in the municipal court. For that reason I think it better not to change the language in question.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. The Code of the District of Columbia seems to provide that there shall be a general term of the Supreme Court of the District, and gives the court discretion to fix such special terms as it thinks proper from time to time, and it has power to change those terms from time to time.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I think in view of that fact it is better to leave the language as it is written in the bill.

Mr. GARD. I think the language of the amendment I suggest covers the situation.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. So far as the language in respect to the memorandum is concerned, I do not see any objection to it. The judges would order an entry of judgment, and the clerk make a memorandum of the order. It makes it unnecessary for the judges, as is customary in courts of record, to write out the order and file it. To expedite matters, whoever drew this bill—I did not draw it; I introduced it at the request of Judge McCoy and others—evidently thought that it would expedite matters and avoid a lot of unnecessary red tape.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VOLSTEAD] is in error as to what the proceeding would be. A judge ordinarily, if he enters judgment himself, or even where he enters judgment after a finding by a jury, will order a judgment to be entered for such and such an amount. He may or may not, and in most cases he does not, make the entry himself upon anything, either pencil minutes or otherwise. That is something that is done by the clerk. The clerk proceeds to enter the judgment in form. Take, for instance, the House here. We pass a bill. We do not in fact pass a resolution that the Senate be requested to concur in the bill, but we send a message to the Senate stating that we have done so and we enter it in that way in the Journal. That is a part of the duty of the Clerk of the House. Certain formal entries are made both in the House and in the Senate by the Clerk of the House and the Secretary of the Senate. When the judge says he gives a judgment for a certain amount of money in a court of record the clerk enters a formal judgment of record in a book that is kept for that purpose. I would have no objection whatever to saying that the clerk shall keep the minutes, and that is all this amounts to, but if you say that the keeping of the minutes by the clerk is a sufficient record of the court, that simply balls up everything.

Mr. HUSTED. Why does not the gentleman propose his amendment? We will all vote for it.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I was going to say to the gentleman that I do not see the reason for this sentence:

A memorandum of each action by the court shall be noted by the clerk on the docket and shall be a sufficient record thereof.

The court will require the clerk to keep a memorandum of the action of the court, and then he would require the clerk to enter formal entries whenever necessary. I do not suppose this court has jurisdiction over chancery cases.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. It has not.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I do not know whether it has or not, under the language of this bill.

Mr. TILSON. What does the gentleman understand a "sufficient record" to mean?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. It means that nothing else should be required.

Mr. TILSON. Required for what?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. A thing that is sufficient is enough for all purposes. That is all. That is what sufficient means. That is the reason I think it is inapplicable here.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, I am unable to understand just what construction the chairman of the committee has placed on this language. He stated a few moments ago that it was sufficient to have the clerk enter a judgment, and that this refers to the final action of the court. I can not conceive that this has any such meaning. It occurs to me its only purpose is to require the clerk to keep a docket of his cases. That can be done under order of court, as has been suggested by the gentleman from Illinois. I can not see any reason for any part of this language, and I can not understand how the chairman of the committee can misconstrue this language into the meaning that it is to be a final record of the court. I think he has entirely misunderstood this language. I think the one who framed this bill never intended this language should mean anything except to say to the clerk that he should keep a docket of the cases pending in the court. If we are to permit this court to take jurisdiction of cases involving $2,000, we should require the court to enter the judgment, the same as any other court, and this would be final and conclusive everywhere. I can not conceive that the chairman of the committee, if this language means what he has misinterpreted it to mean, would favor such a proposition, and I am certain that the language will not bear the construction that he has seen fit to place upon it, and I think the entire paragraph should be stricken out.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Line 9, page 2, strike out the word "respecting," the second word in the line, and insert the word "of." Line 10, after the word "Columbia," strike out the balance of the line, and strike out lines 11 and 12.

Mr. GARD. May we have the section read as it will appear as amended?

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman will permit a suggestion from the Chair, it would seem to the Chair that the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York is more properly a substitute to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. HUSTED. Then I offer it as a substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers a substitute for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Substitute for the amendment offered by Mr. GARD. Page 2, line 9, strike out the word "respecting" and insert in lieu thereof the word "of"; and, in line 10, after the word "Columbia," strike out the remainder of the section.

Mr. GARD. If the gentleman will permit a suggestion in that respect, if the gentleman desires to be technically correct in the use of language in his substitute, where he strikes out the word "respecting," would he not use the word "in" instead of the word "of"?

Mr. HUSTED. Well, we always speak of terms of court.

Mr. GARD. The preceding language is "those now obtaining, or as hereafter modified" by the circuit court.

Mr. HUSTED. Oh, yes; the gentleman is quite correct; I did not notice that. I ask unanimous consent to modify my amendment by substituting the word "in" for the word "of," in line 9.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to modify his amendment as indicated. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a division of the two propositions. The one in line 9 is separate and distinct from the one striking out the balance of the section after the word "Columbia," in line 10.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks there should be a division.

Mr. RAKER. There is an amendment before the House.

Mr. WALSH. Two of them.

The CHAIRMAN. There is an amendment and a substitute for the amendment.

Mr. RAKER. Which is the first one? I want to be heard on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now arises on the substitute.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be heard on the substitute. In reading this bill I want to submit a question to some members of the committee, preferably the chairman, who has it in charge. I desire to ask him if it is not a sort of makeshift to add additional judges to the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. No; this would not add new judges, but this takes a lot of work from the supreme court and transfers it to the municipal court.

Mr. RAKER. I will put it the other way. You have now a complete procedure of the courts properly constituted, known to the litigants, wherein they may go to the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia to have their rights adjudicated, fully known to all since the last amendment the gentleman had placed upon the law some time since. Now, it appears to me that by this you get the procedure mixed up, and it appears to me that by raising the jurisdiction of the municipal court, originally $2,000 and now $1,000, you simply make it a misfit and create a municipal court a court of record with the intention of trying to relieve litigation.

Mr. CRAMTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. In an endeavor to relieve this congestion, do you not make it a sort of botched-up affair instead of placing, say, four more judges on the bench and creating that many more departments where business can be successfully transacted, and, I believe, with less expense than this system proposed here?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. This is just what they are doing all over the country. In every large city they have a court of this kind. This court has been created by the name common to that class of courts that we are trying to create here, and we are trying to give this court jurisdiction so that it may relieve the supreme court, which is very greatly in need of relief.

Mr. RAKER. Does not the relief come just the same in a State where you have a district court, or what answers for it, a superior court, and instead of trying to give a justice of the peace or a police magistrate added jurisdiction they increase the judges upon the circuit court or the superior court, whereby they will expedite the business instead of having this additional court?

Mr. CRAMTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. I yield.

Mr. CRAMTON. On that point possibly the gentleman would be interested in knowing that just prior to his arrival the jurisdiction of the court was increased from $1,000 to $2,000, by a majority of one.

Mr. RAKER. That makes it even worse. This is a practical fact, and there is no need of disguising it, that men are better satisfied and you get better results, the litigants are better satisfied, counsel are better satisfied, and above and beyond all—and that is what the legislation should always be for—is the quietude of the community and the satisfaction of the public that you have a court so ranking in standing and ability that if it is $1,000 or $10,000 each man has the right to have his case adjudicated by the same judge, in the same court, under the same law, instead of trying to adjudicate a man's case where the amount involved is a little less than $2,000—say it is $1,900—and many complications involved, many law questions, and you bring it down to the justices of the peace court or the municipal court and say, "Because you only have a claim of $1,900 you do not get the consideration of the man that has a little larger amount." That is the trouble with all the legislation of that kind. That is one thing that the people are opposed to. It is a discrimination that ought not to be tolerated. A man who has a claim of $1,000 ought to go into court with the same standing, over the country, and with the same judges on the bench and with the same sanctity surrounding him, as a claimant with a larger claim, and not try to pick out a little court for him and say that we are going to give him the same jurisdiction as in the other court.

Mr. CRAMTON. Would the gentleman be in favor of doing away with other courts, and have one court to handle juvenile and police court and civil cases of all sizes?

Mr. RAKER. There is no judicial system in which there is a municipal court, or a justice of the peace court, that has jurisdiction of amounts exceeding $300.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. RAKER. I would like to have two or three minutes more.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. The gentleman is not talking on this amendment at all.

Mr. RAKER. I will come right down to the substitute. I would like just five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent for five minutes more. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. RAKER. And then classify all the jurisdiction that has been demonstrated to be the most successful, where all other jurisdiction, original and appellate, from the lower courts is conferred upon the higher courts—there is no question about it—where the court has jurisdiction of all criminal matters, of civil matters, including divorce, guardianship, and estates, and including writs of certiorari, habeas corpus, or whatever they may be. And all you have got to do then is to create additional judges and other departments whereby you keep a constant process on the work and on the matter——

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman is not proceeding to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will proceed in order.

Mr. RAKER. That is relating to the substitute. That all applies specifically to the substitute, for this reason. It says:

A memorandum of each action by the court shall be noted by the clerk on the docket and shall be a sufficient record thereof.

Think of that. What is the fact? What is the object of it? In any case brought in court we know the clerk files the complaint, and of necessity must enter it on a docket. He enters it on the docket in the clerk's office; he enters it on the trial docket after the demurrer or answer has been filed. It goes to the judge. He keeps the judge's docket up and the clerk's docket up. And why legislate upon a procedure and a practice that must be followed by the clerk in every matter? Having designated in the prior part of the section that this is a court of record, that ends the whole thing. Of course, the clerk then keeps the necessary record. Some clerks do a little better than others and some clerks a little poorer than others. But having designated that this is a court of record, there follows the usual procedure, where any citizen may go in and say, "What are the papers in the case No. 200?" And he can get the original papers and look them over. He goes to the docket and he finds when the complaint has been filed and the summons issued, and when the demurrer and the answer have been filed, and he has a complete record.

And, getting back again—and this shows the impracticability of it—this is a matter fundamentally of adding a makeshift to a court already constituted, with all the necessary legal procedure surrounding it, to the end that it might work out immediately or with rapidity justice to the citizens by a judge of known ability and standing, because, being a member of the supreme court, you get results. So I think this substitute ought to be agreed to and that particular language ought to be taken out.

Now, I trust that my dear friend the chairman of the committee will not get impatient. I have taken but a moment of time here, and the bill is worthy of consideration. It is matter of procedure. It applies to us, and this is a matter in which the people of the United States, no matter where they come from, are interested—in our home government, and that home government is the government of the District of Columbia.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has again expired.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have this debate closed, but first I desire to make an explanation of this proposition. It is evident to me that its purpose is misunderstood. This language to the effect that a memorandum of each action shall be noted on the docket by the clerk is designed to continue the ordinary justice-court practice. Everybody who is familiar with justice-court records will know what this means. In a justice's court you are not required to make written pleas. You may make your plea on the docket, and the clerk under this provision would act in the place of a justice and enter your complaint. The defendant would answer orally and the clerk enter the answer upon the docket.

No written pleas are required. Everything appears on the docket in that fashion. When the time comes for entering a judgment, it is entered by the justice upon the docket.

It is perfectly evident to me that that is the form of procedure sought to be preserved by this provision, so that a man can go into this court, at least in the minor cases, state his case orally, just as he has been in the habit of doing, then let defendant answer orally, and have the pleas entered in the form of a memorandum made by the clerk in the same way as it has been customary in the justice's court.

Mr. RAKER and Mr. HUSTED rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I will yield first to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. HUSTED. I would like to ask the gentleman if he has considered this merely a matter of practice, which would be carried out in any event, and that a statute is not necessary to do it?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I think the object of it is to enable the court to do business in the old fashion, so as to save costs and expenses, because this is going to be a poor man's court, the same as it has been.

Mr. HUSTED. That could all be done by the court under the practice. Does not the gentleman think there is any danger in stating that this memorandum shall be a sufficient record of the proceedings in the case?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. It is a sufficient record in the justice's court, and the judgment will be a good judgment anywhere in this country where the law authorizes it, notwithstanding that this is made a court of record. We ought to leave this provision in so as to continue the old practice of having suits tried informally and with as little expense as possible. That is the only object of it. It does not mean that you always have to do it in that fashion.

The court may say, if the amount is large, that litigants file written pleadings, because there is a provision in this bill authorizing the court to determine what the rules of practice shall be. It does not say that in every instance a court must authorize this sort of a record, but in these small suits why not let the court proceed in the way that is customary in justice's courts in this country?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Yes.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The language of the bill is "it shall be noted by the clerk"; that that shall be a sufficient record. Does not that make it obligatory that this method shall be pursued in every case, no matter how much the amount involved may be?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. The court may determine the extent of that memorandum. It does not state what shall go into it; and, besides, we have later on a section in this bill providing that this court may prescribe what the practice and procedure shall be.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Under this the court may tell the clerk to do something, and the clerk may or may not do it. The statute here tells what shall be done. It says here "a memorandum of the action shall be made," not a copy of the judgment, but "a memorandum of the action." You can not make a court of record out of the justice of the peace proceedings, and if you undertake to give a justice of the peace court the right to enter judgment in cases involving several thousand dollars, you ought to have it proceed on the basis of a court of record. You want to give validity to those proceedings.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. It would be valid just the same.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I do not think it would be, if you wanted to take an exemplified copy. It is a sloppy way of doing business.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. You can get an exemplified copy of a judgment entered under this provision.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Well, the gentleman has another guess coming. He can not do it.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. There is no difficulty about that at all.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I submit to the committee that the criticism of this section by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is well founded, and that the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD] or something equivalent to it ought to be adopted.

Now, let us see what this section proposes. It proposes, first, to make this municipal court a court of record, and we perfectly understand what that means.

Secondly, it proposes to authorize this court to use a seal. Nobody raises any question as to that.

Thirdly, it requires that the terms of this court shall correspond with the terms of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia.

Now, in reference to what shall constitute the record in a case, we have here a provision that is exclusive and final, to the effect that "a memorandum of each action by the court shall be noted by the clerk on the docket, and shall be a sufficient record thereof." This excludes as a part of the record the pleadings, if there be any; it excludes the entries on the minute book; and for all purposes it confines the record to a mere memorandum entered upon the docket. Now, I do not think that anything of that sort was ever heard of before in establishing a court, or defining the procedure of a court, and I do believe that to retain the language used here might lead to doubt and difficulty and embarrassment in the municipal court and in appellate tribunals. It strikes me that we will do everything that is substantially necessary if we provide that this shall be a court of record; that it shall have a seal; and shall have authority to fix such terms for the transaction of business as it may think proper to prescribe. We can trust it to make terms, if desirable, that will correspond with the terms of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia. If that is considered undesirable by the court, we will leave it free to make other terms. We unhesitatingly vest in the court increased jurisdiction so far as the amount is concerned, and we need not fear to place within the discretion of the court other matters to which this section applies, among them the power to fix the terms for the transaction of its business.

Mr. DEMPSEY. I agree with practically all of the very able argument of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MOORE]. I have only one suggestion to make. The chairman of the committee suggests that, owing to other provisions in the bill with regard to summoning jurors and sending them from one court to the other, the terms of the two courts should be identical. That would seem to present a practical obstacle to doing away with that particular provision. In all other respects I agree entirely with the gentleman's argument.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. With deference to the distinguished chairman of the committee, I wish to say that it is doubtful whether he is correct in that view; but if he is correct in it, the practical consideration will appeal just as strongly to the judges of the municipal court as it appeals to him, and we can certainly leave the municipal court free to make its terms correspond with the terms of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I understand there is an amendment pending and a substitute. May we have the amendment and the substitute reported?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, let us see if we can agree on closing the debate on this paragraph. I ask unanimous consent that debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent that debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Reserving the right to object, let us have the amendment reported first.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD] and the substitute offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. HUSTED.]

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GARD: Page 2, line 7, strike out the words "the same" and insert in lieu thereof the word "such," and, after the word "court," in line 8, strike out the remainder of the section and insert in lieu thereof the following: "for the transaction of business as it may prescribe."

Amendment offered by Mr. HUSTED as a substitute for the amendment of Mr. GARD: Page 2, line 9, after the word "modified," strike out the word "respecting" and insert in lieu thereof the word "in"; in line 10, after the word "Columbia," strike out the remainder of the section.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. That is, it is proposed to strike out the language beginning with the words "a memorandum of each action." That is what I wanted to get at. I wanted to make the same motion. It seems to me that language certainly ought to go out.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, that substitute ought to be divided.

The CHAIRMAN. It is suggested that the substitute of the gentleman from New York be divided. The second part of the gentleman's substitute would cover the point made by the gentleman from Virginia. The Chair will put the question as suggested by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VOLSTEAD]. The question is on the first portion of the substitute offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. HUSTED].

Mr. MANN of Illinois. What portion? Let us have it reported.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 9, after the word "modified," strike out the word "respecting" and insert in lieu thereof the word "in."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the portion of the substitute which has been read.

The question being taken, the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the remainder of the substitute.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now comes on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD], as amended by the substitute of the gentleman from New York [Mr. HUSTED].

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. That hereafter when the value in controversy in any action pending in said municipal court shall exceed $20, and in all actions for the recovery of possession of real property, either party may demand a trial by jury. The trial judge shall conduct such jury trial according to the course of the common law and according to the practice and procedure now obtaining, or as hereafter modified, respecting the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, and shall have the same power to instruct juries, set aside verdicts, arrest judgments, grant new trials, etc., as said supreme court.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 2, line 22, after the word "judgments" insert the word "and," and after the word "trials" strike out the words "and so forth."

Mr. RAKER. I move to strike out all of the section and to substitute in place thereof the following:

That the said municipal court shall be governed by the law——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will please submit his amendment in writing.

Mr. BANKHEAD. A point of order against that amendment.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Has the committee amendment been adopted?

The CHAIRMAN. It has not.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I submit that it should first be adopted.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I desire to submit a perfecting amendment.

Mr. RAKER. This is a perfecting amendment.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Is not my perfecting amendment in order before the motion to strike out the entire section?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks so.

Mr. RAKER. Let my amendment be read. I move to strike out all of the section and offer as a substitute——

Mr. WALSH. A substitute is not in order.

Mr. RAKER. As an amendment then.

Mr. WALSH. We ought to act on the committee amendment first.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood that the gentleman from California desired to offer a substitute for the committee amendment, but evidently he does not, and therefore the question is first on the committee amendment.

The question being taken, the committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RAKER. Now, I move to strike out the section and insert the following as a substitute.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I desire to offer a perfecting amendment to the original section, which I think has precedence.

Mr. RAKER. Let mine be read, and then the gentleman from Alabama can follow it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California requests that his amendment be read for information. Then if the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] desires to submit a perfecting amendment, that will be in order. The gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. RAKER: Page 2, line 13, strike out all of section 3, and insert in lieu thereof the following as a new section:

"That the said municipal court shall be governed by the law, rules, and regulations now in force, and that may hereafter be enacted or adopted, relating to the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia."

Mr. BANKHEAD. I offer an amendment, in line 13, to strike out the word "value" and substitute the word "amount."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 13, strike out the word "value" and insert in lieu thereof the word "amount."

Mr. VOLSTEAD. The word "amount" would not cover it. If you say value or amount——

Mr. BANKHEAD. When you render a judgment on a controverted question of that sort you do not render it in value, you render it in a specific amount.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. When the value in controversy in any action is involved——

Mr. BANKHEAD. It is unusual and extraordinary language to use the word "value."

Mr. VOLSTEAD. If you used the words "value or amount in controversy," perhaps it would be well.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I insist on my amendment.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the amendment. After the word "amount," add the word "claimed" and strike out the words "in controversy," so that it will read, "that hereafter when the amount claimed in any action," and so forth. I want to be heard on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 13, after the word "the," strike out the word "value" and insert in lieu thereof the words "amount claimed," so that it will read: "hereafter when the amount claimed in controversy," etc.

Mr. RAKER. I move to strike out the words "in controversy" and insert "in any action."

The Clerk read as follows:

Modified amendment by Mr. RAKER: Page 2, line 13, after the word "the," strike out the words "value in controversy" and substitute the words "amount claimed in any action."

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I want to call attention to the effect of the amendment as it is. The amendment the gentleman offered is in the right direction, but the amount in controversy must be determined. It is the amount claimed in the complaint which will settle the question of jurisdiction. No matter what the value of the property is, if the complainant claims the amount, then that settles it. It is in every proceeding, every law in the United States, and that is the jurisdictional test.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. What would be the amount claimed in a replevin case for a donkey?

Mr. RAKER. If he put the value at $19, the real value might be $100. He alleges what is the value, and that is the amount in controversy. If you want to get a case transferred from a State court to the Federal court, the amount claimed is the test.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. Yes.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Where a replevin suit is brought and you do not get possession of the property, the amount claimed is important. But suppose the plaintiff in a replevin suit fixes the value at $1 when in fact it is $10,000? If he gets possession of the property he does not care at what value he puts it. Under this amendment will the defendant have any chance for a jury trial?

Mr. RAKER. He must allege the value of the property and must give bond.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. If he gets possession of the property he does not care what the value is put at. If he does not get possession, the value is important; but what chance would the defendant stand for a jury trial?

Mr. RAKER. In a replevin suit the complainant alleges the value of the property.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Of course; and he may allege it to be worth $10 when in fact its value is $10,000.

Mr. RAKER. He gives a bond, and if he wants to retain the property pending the suit the sheriff holds it a certain number of days, and if the defendant desires it he gives a bond to have it returned pending the suit.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. But if he gets possession of the property, the value cuts no figure.

Mr. RAKER. Let me call the gentleman's attention to this fact. If you use the word "value" how can anyone know the value of the property except by the declaration in the complaint? It is the value claimed.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Everybody sees the point to that, but the gentleman has not answered my question, whether if the complainant alleges the value of the property to be $10, whereas in fact it is worth $10,000, whether that would prevent the defendant getting a jury trial.

Mr. RAKER. If the value of the property in fact is $10,000, and the plaintiff alleges it to be $19, and the property at the beginning of the action is replevined, the officer must hold the property 10 days—the time differs in different States—and the defendant by giving a bond twice the value of the property——

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The defendant does not give the bond.

Mr. RAKER. In most of the States he can. The plaintiff can not get possession of the property except through the officer. The officer holds it for a number of days, which the statute provides——

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The defendant does not give a bond in a replevin suit at all.

Mr. RAKER. Then he can not take the property.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Of course, he can not take the property.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to modify my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to modify his amendment. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, instead of striking out the word "value" I propose to modify the amendment by adding the words "amount or" before the word "value."

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I would accept that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the modified amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Modified amendment by Mr. BANKHEAD: Before the word "value" insert the words "amount or."

The CHAIRMAN. The question now comes on the substitute offered by the gentleman from California.

The question was taken, and the substitute was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I suppose the committee used the language under discussion, following the seventh amendment to the Constitution of the United States. It is the language that is used in legislation of this character ordinarily and to which a very definite meaning attaches.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, it may be necessary to make this change suggested by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], but Article VII of the Constitution of the United States provides:

In suits at common law, where the value in controversy shall exceed $20, the right of trial by jury shall be preserved.

It may be that the makers of the Constitution did not know just what they were doing, because it has resulted in a lot of ridiculous trials by juries in the United States courts, but nevertheless that is the language used.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. And may I say if it will not disturb the gentleman, that in the case of Callan against Wilson, the Supreme Court of the United States passed upon that provision of the Constitution with reference to jurisdiction of inferior tribunals in the District of Columbia, and that the reason why we are saying now that there must be a jury trial in every instance where the amount in controversy is over $20 is because of that decision.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. And because of that provision of the Constitution.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Exactly.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, in view of the citation of that argument, which had not occurred to me, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. REED of West Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend, in line 19, by striking out the word "respecting," after the word "modify," and substituting therefor the word "in," so that it may correspond with the other amendment in section 2.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from West Virginia offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. REED of West Virginia: Page 2, line 19, after the word "modified" strike out the word "respecting" and insert in lieu thereof the word "in."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from West Virginia.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that section 3 might be amended so as to make it clear and simple and yet express what is meant by striking out the language of the last paragraph and inserting something of this sort:

Every jury trial shall be conducted and the verdict dealt with according to the law and procedure governing jury trials in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia at that time, but this requirement is subject to the provision contained in section 11 of this act.

The proviso will be necessary, if you are going to maintain section 11 of the bill, because section 11 gives to the municipal court the right to make its own rules of practice and procedure. Except for section 11 the requirement of section 3 might be limited to the same sort of procedure obtaining in the supreme court, but I can understand it may be necessary for the municipal court to vary rules of procedure of the supreme court by adopting its own rules of practice, and the amendment that I suggest, which I am not going to press, as I am merely suggesting it for the consideration of the chairman of the committee, would simply require that the municipal court shall follow the procedure that obtains at the time the case is tried in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, as to conducting the trial and disposing of the verdict, unless that procedure is inconsistent with the rules of practice that the municipal courts may have meanwhile established under the authority granted in section 11.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. The Supreme Court of the United States establishes equity rules for all of the courts in the United States.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. Controlling 110,000,000 people; and here you are going to make a court of record to try cases that are tried now before the supreme court. Why should not the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia adopt these rules, and why should not the municipal court adopt them, instead of having one set of rules for one court and another set of rules for another court?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. That might be desirable. What I have drafted is with a view of taking care of what is provided by section 11, where the right is given the municipal court to adopt rules of practice varying from the rules of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia.

Mr. RAKER. Would not the adoption of section 11 be detrimental?

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from West Virginia.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now comes on the substitute offered by the gentleman from California.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of the amendment is this: It seems to me that you have now jury trials in the supreme court and jury trials in the municipal courts, and that in view of that there should be one set of rules governing the trial of cases in the supreme court and in the municipal court. They ought to be the same. A man becomes familiar with the trial of a case before a court and jury in the supreme court and he is then familiar with the trial and procedure in the municipal court. Why should there be two sets of rules established? Why should we complicate and add to a system that is already to a certain extent somewhat complicated? It is clear enough, but it takes a great deal of time to get it into one's mind, and we now propose to change it and make it still more complicated. It seems to me that we are doing something that is quite unnecessary, and it would be merely taking up the time of the court and the time of the counsel unnecessarily.

Mr. CRAMTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. I will.

Mr. CRAMTON. Does not the section expressly provide that the trial shall be conducted according to the practice and procedure in the Supreme Court of the District? It provides exactly what the gentleman is arguing.

Mr. RAKER. Here you have a whole lot of complications. Why not substitute how the whole proceeding of the court from beginning to end shall be conducted?

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the substitute.

The question was taken, and the substitute was rejected.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to section 3. Line 17, page 2, after the second word "trial," strike out the words "according to the course of the common law."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. HUSTED: Page 2, line 17, after the second word "trial," strike out the words "according to the course of the common law."

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Chairman, I offer this amendment because I am informed the common law has been changed in the District, and this provision as it is in the bill might be dangerous. It would require the conduct of all suits in accordance with the course of the common law, which has been changed in many respects, and the provision might be open to interpretation that this reenacted the common law in the District.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JOHN W. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed out of order for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that he may proceed out of order. Is there objection?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I do not think——

Mr. JOHN W. RAINEY. I would ask the chairman not to object. I do not inflict myself upon the membership of the House very frequently, and I want at this time to get a statement in the RECORD. I shall not take more than about three minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. JOHN W. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, some time ago I suggested to the membership of the House that the district I had the honor to represent was frequently the target of criticism, and when criticism was just I welcomed it, but when unjust attacks were made upon my district or upon my constituents I would resent same. I so advised the citizens and business men of my district, suggesting to them that at any time they felt unwarranted and unjust attacks had been made upon them or their industries to advise me, and I would see that the Members of the House and the people of the country would get the real facts. Swift & Co., one of the industries of my district, forwarded an answer to the statement made by Representative BENJAMIN F. WELTY, of Ohio, reported on page 988 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of January 7. It is very short, and I am going to ask that it be inserted in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the way indicated. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The statement is as follows:

[Answer to statements of Representative BENJAMIN F. WELTY, of Ohio, as reported on page 988 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of January 7, by Swift & Co.]

Hon. BENJAMIN F. WELTY is quoted on page 988 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of January 7 as follows:

"If I remember correctly, investigations were made at the close of the Spanish-American War because the Beef Trust killed hundreds of our soldiers by feeding them embalmed beef; but while the investigation was going on it was learned that a certain Senator from Ohio had sold one of his boats on the Great Lakes to the Government at a fabulous price, and for some reason nothing came of the investigation. No prosecutions followed, and I understand that the boat that the Senator from Ohio sold to the Government was sunk by Hobson, thus hoping to drown even the memory of the scandal."

This or similar charges have been brought to light periodically since the Spanish-American War, and it is likely that many Members of Congress would appreciate a statement of the facts as obtained from official records.

The subject of chemically processed meats first came to the attention of Army officers through copy of a letter dated May 25, 1898, in which Alexander B. Powell proposed to process meats for the Government by "purifying the germs of meats so that they will withstand the destroying elements of any climate and keep in perfect condition for from 4 to 10 days." He quoted as references the managers of various southern hotels who had used meats under the process. He proposed to treat meats at a price of one-half cent a pound for the Government.

There was a great deal of criticism directed by the public press at the administration for the unsatisfactory handling of the soldiers in camps and on transports. The correspondents, no doubt, came across the letter previously referred to, or had heard of it, and in their zeal for sensation magnified a supposition into a reality and permitted the impression to get out broadcast that all meats furnished the Government were chemically treated. The agitation of the public became so pronounced that Mr. Alger, then Secretary of War, requested President McKinley, under date of September 8, to appoint a commission empowered to investigate the conduct of the War Department in the War with Spain.

During the proceedings of the hearings before the commission there was only one testimony among hundreds submitted that did not agree that the quantity of food was not only abundant but also of unusually good quality.

The exception was the statement of Mr. W. H. Daly, major and chief surgeon, United States Volunteers, on staff of Gen. Nelson A. Miles, who supported Daly in his testimony. Dr. Daly's report of September 21, 1898, follows:

"I have the honor to report, in the interest of the service, that in several inspections made in the various camps and troop ships at Tampa, Jacksonville, Chickamauga, and Porto Rico that I found the fresh beef to be apparently preserved with secret chemicals, which destroys its natural flavor, and which I also believe to be detrimental to the health of the troops."

Gen. Miles stated before the commission:

"There was sent to Porto Rico 337 tons of what is known as so-called refrigerated beef, which you might call embalmed beef."

Dr. Daly testified that a sample of broth taken by him from a kettle of boiling beef on being analyzed exhibited the characteristics of boric and salicylic acids.

Testimony by Gen. Weston disposes of the charge that the beef seen by Dr. Daly at Tampa was furnished by contractors or issued to the troops. Gen. Weston testified that it was permitted to Messrs. Edwards & Powell, who were interested in a preserving process, to place a few carcasses of beef aboard the Comal at Tampa for a demonstration of the keeping qualities under severe tests, but that none of the meat so treated was rationed out.

Report by Brig. Gen. Charles P. Eagen, of the Subsistence Department: "Our investigation showed that rations were issued as per published schedules, and always on hand in abundance. The department exercised great vigilance in the inspection of all articles and obtained, so far as we can ascertain, the best quality for the price paid." (p. 151, Commission Report.)

There were also numerous tests made by outside chemists, at the instigation of the commission, of both fresh and canned beef, and reports throughout specified that no trace of preservatives was discovered.

These official reports prove that these accusations are without basis of fact. They merely demonstrate the damage which can result from the spreading of rumors and gossip without taking trouble to ascertain the facts.

Mr. JOHN W. RAINEY. Now, to reiterate, Mr. Chairman, whenever any of the citizens or industries of my district are unjustly or unwarrantably attacked, I am going to get the facts and present them to the Members of the House and to the country. [Applause.] I believe in justice, consequently both sides of the case should be presented.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. That jurors for said municipal court shall be drawn and selected under and in pursuance of the laws now obtaining, or as hereafter modified, concerning the drawing, selection, term of service, mode of filling deficiencies in a panel; shall be subject to the same duties and liabilities, and shall receive the same compensation as petit jurors in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, as fully as if such laws directly referred to said municipal court, excepting that in said municipal court there may be an additional term of service to begin on the first Tuesday in August of each year, and to terminate on the first Tuesday of the second month thereafter. Section 73 of the Code of Law of the District of Columbia, relating to bills of exceptions, shall apply to said municipal court as well as to the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia. At least 10 days before the term of service of jurors shall begin, the clerk of the supreme court of said District shall certify to the said municipal court, for service as jurors for the then ensuing term, the names of 26 persons, drawn as directed by law. Deficiencies in any panel of any such jury may be filled according to the law applicable to jurors in said supreme court, and for this purpose any judge of said municipal court shall possess all the powers of a judge of said supreme court and of said court sitting as a special term.

Whenever the judges of the municipal court shall certify in writing that the business of said court requires the services of additional jurors and shall file such certificate in the office of the clerk of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, the justices of said supreme court shall direct the clerk of the said supreme court to certify to said municipal court for service as jurors for the then ensuing terms the names of such number of other persons as may be necessary for such service, which names shall be drawn as directed by law.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by striking out in lines 9 and 10 the words "the second month thereafter," and insert in place thereof the word "October," and in line 17 strike out "26" and insert "36."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, line 9, strike out the words "the second month thereafter," and insert in lieu thereof the word "October," and in line 17, page 3, strike out "26" and insert in lieu thereof "36."

Mr. GARD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. GARD. I will be glad to have the gentleman's observation in regard to the increase of the number of persons from 26 as set out in the bill?

Mr. WALSH. If we are going to preserve the right of trial by jury and transfer this large number of cases to the municipal court from the congested docket of the supreme court, it seems to me we will not make very much progress with a jury panel of 26 persons to draw from. I think we ought to have a sufficient panel, so that they might possibly have two jury trials going on simultaneously, and to do that they ought to have at least 36 persons. Now, it might be that it would be impossible to have more than one jury with only 26 on a panel.

Mr. GARD. I will state to the gentleman from Massachusetts it seems to be the opinion of those who spoke on behalf of the bill, those representing the bar associations and the bench, that but one jury would be used by this municipal court.

Mr. WALSH. Well, of course, we have increased the jurisdiction to $2,000 and we are providing that a lot of these cases are going to be transferred downstairs.

Mr. GARD. Does the gentleman think they are going to try many cases in Washington in the hot weather in August and September that this new term provides for?

Mr. WALSH. Well, no; I think perhaps if they had tried more in warm weather heretofore we would not have this legislation, perhaps.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts yield?

Mr. WALSH. I will.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. What is the reason for the suggestion of the use of the word "October" instead of the phrase "the second month"?

Mr. WALSH. Well, is not October the second month after the first Tuesday in August?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. It is; but what is the advantage of the phrase?

Mr. WALSH. Well, I thought it made it more explicit. It said "the first Tuesday in August," and then I found it said "the first Tuesday of the second month thereafter," and I thought we had better say "the first Tuesday in October."

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I figured that is practically the same, but I wanted to know if it was a question of phrasing.

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I could not figure out the difference in the meaning.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The reason is that I first thought on reading the bill it meant September, and I think the gentleman offered the amendment in order to make it clear enough for me to understand.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. If he wanted to bring it within the comprehension of the gentleman from Illinois, it is all right.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment to perfect the language. In lines 2 and 3, strike out in line 2 the comma after the word "service" and insert the word "and"; and in line 3, after the word "panel," strike out the semicolon and insert the word "and." It is simply to straighten out the language and make it a little clearer.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. CRAMTON: Page 3, line 2, after the word "service," strike out the comma and insert the word "and"; page 3, line 2, after the word "panel," strike out the semicolon and insert the word "and."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out, on page 3, line 18, after the word "law," all the balance of the paragraph which includes the balance of the language on line 18, and the language in lines 19, 20, 21, and 22.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. GARD: Page 3, line 18, after the word "law," strike out the remainder of the paragraph.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan a moment ago served to very well clarify what is probably the true intent and meaning of the section—that there should be no question that the method of drawing juries and selection, and so forth, in filling deficiencies in a panel, should be under the laws of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia. Now, in view of what I have said in regard to that language that I have offered to strike out, and the succeeding language, which provides that they shall certify in writing, and so forth, that they require additional jurors, I do not see that the language I have moved to be excluded means anything in the general consideration of the section.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GARD. Yes, sir.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Suppose the court is endeavoring to empanel a jury where objection is made, and the jurors are excused. What would happen? How would they get a jury if this language was stricken out?

Mr. GARD. It would be like it says here, that the jury shall be drawn and selected under and in pursuance of the laws now obtaining, or hereafter modified, concerning the drawing, selection, term of service, mode of filling deficiencies in the panel, as it appears in lines 2 and 3, which was clarified by the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan. So to that should be coupled up the fact that the method was the method prescribed for drawing juries and supplying deficiencies in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I am frank to say that I did not hear the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan. I was discussing another matter.

Mr. GARD. His amendment was to strike out the semicolon after the word "panel."

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Strike out the semicolon where?

Mr. GARD. After the word "panel," in line 3. So that the unquestioned intent in the drawing of a jury, the selection of term of service, and the filling of deficiencies should relate to the method in vogue in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. That has reference to the drawing of jurors, so as to make the panel required under the law?

Mr. GARD. Yes.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. But there is a subsequent provision in this section directing that there shall be certified a certain number of jurors to this municipal court from the supreme court. There is no authority to certify any more than that number from the supreme court. And it seems to me that governs the number that can be drawn from the supreme court. All this preliminary is really a recital of existing law as to the drawing of juries in the supreme court and does not give to this court, as I understand it, any jurisdiction over the empaneling of jurors at all. Now, suppose they are one man short of a full jury. How are they going to get him?

Mr. GARD. In the same manner as they do in the supreme court, because the word "panel," as used in line 3 and in line 18, and the word "deficiency," as used in the same connection, brought the idea to my mind that this language in lines 18 and 19, and so forth, was a mere repetition, which added nothing to the language of the section.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Now, one thing of the two is quite certain, either that the language at the top of page 3 does not authorize the municipal court to draw jurors itself or else the language in the middle of page 3, directing the clerk of the supreme court to certify 36 jurors to the municipal court, ought not to be in there. If the municipal court is to select its own jurors, in the first place, there is no occasion for certifying jurors from the supreme court, it seems to me.

Mr. CRAMTON. Will the gentleman from Ohio yield for a suggestion?

Mr. GARD. Yes.

Mr. CRAMTON. It seems to me that section 4 is to be read as if, after the word "selected," in line 23, the words "by the supreme court" were written in. So that the meaning shall be that the jurors for said municipal court shall be drawn by said supreme court for the municipal court.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I agree with the gentleman. The purpose of that language is to declare that these jurors, when certified by the clerk of the supreme court, have been legally drawn. But if there is a shortage of jurors and there is no authority to certify any more from the supreme court, and you are empaneling a jury and you have not any panel to draw from, what do you do? The court sends out and gets more men to serve.

Mr. GARD. That is very true.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Without that authority, what can you do?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD] has expired. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD].

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, may it again be reported?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will again be reported.

The amendment was again read.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment by inserting, after the word "of," in line 17, page 3, the words "not to exceed," so that it will read "not to exceed 26." It may be that you will not need 26 jurors, and consequently there should be a provision to authorize the drawing of a less number.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. VOLSTEAD: Page 3, line 17, after the word "of," insert the words "not to exceed," so that the line will read "as jurors for the then existing term, the names of not to exceed 26 persons."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment: Page 2, line 25, after the word "selected," insert "by the supreme court."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WALSH: Page 2, line 25, after the word "selected," insert the words "by the supreme court."

Mr. BRIGGS. Of the District of Columbia.

Mr. IGOE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. IGOE. I have just glanced hastily over the section, and as I understand the law as to juries they are drawn by the clerk of the court under the direction of the court, and it seems to me that the language that is in there now, since it practically puts in force the present law, would sufficiently cover it.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I ask leave to withdraw my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be withdrawn.

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. CRAMTON having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message, in writing, from the President of the United States, by Mr. Sharkey, one of his secretaries, informed the House of Representatives that the President had, January 10, 1920, approved and signed joint resolution of the following title:

H. J. Res. 263. Joint resolution extending the time for filing final report of the Joint Commission on Reclassification of Salaries, created by section 9, Public, No. 314, Sixty-fifth Congress, approved March 1, 1919, to a date not later than March 12, 1920.

ENLARGING THE JURISDICTION OF THE MUNICIPAL COURT OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The commitee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 5. That if neither party demand a trial by jury, or if the value in controversy shall not exceed $20, the case may be tried and determined by any member of the court, and his finding upon the facts, which may be either general or special, shall have the same effect as a verdict of a jury, with the same right of either party to take an exception to any ruling of the court, and have the same embodied in a bill of exceptions, as in case of a jury trial.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, in line 10, page 4, I offer an amendment to strike out the word "member" and insert the word "judge."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WALSH: Page 4, line 10, strike out the word "member" and insert the word "judge."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Just a moment, Mr. Chairman. This court is made up of six judges. They are assigned in the morning to the cases they will try. Probably this language would change that rule.

Mr. WALSH. How?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I am not sure how. I did not get the point just where the language came in.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. This is only doing what is invariably the case where a number of justices constitute a trial court. Each judge sits in the court.

Mr. WALSH. Instead of "any member of the court" it should read "any judge," which would be better phraseology.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment: In lines 11 and 12, page 4, strike out the words "which may be either general or special."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. RAKER: Page 4, lines 11 and 12, strike out the words "which may be either general or special."

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman from Minnesota will agree with this amendment, because when a judge of a court settles a case without a jury he comes to a final determination and his findings are on the facts, and he disposes of it without any further complication. Will the gentleman give me the benefit of his study of this bill as to what that particular language means?

Mr. WALSH. To whom is the gentleman addressing his request?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I suppose that is quite common. Unless the law expressly provides that it shall be special, a general finding is ordinarily all right. It seems to me you might as well leave it in this condition. This is the ordinary common-law rule.

Mr. RAKER. When the court settles the case he is not bringing in any special verdict, as a jury might, but he finally determines the case.

Mr. BRIGGS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. I yield.

Mr. BRIGGS. As I understand it, the determination of causes under the courts may be by a general judgment or on a specific finding of facts upon which they base their conclusions of law. It would seem that it is under that that this provision of the bill is incorporated.

Mr. RAKER. When the court makes a finding on specific facts—not upon all the facts—he would do it on a specific fact, because the court in this instance, sitting in place of the jury, must make an ultimate finding of the whole case, so that the judgment might be rendered upon the facts, whether general or special, before the judgment is rendered.

Mr. BRIGGS. But there is nothing mandatory in this provision. It would not be assumed that the court in a $20 case would go to the trouble of setting out the specific findings. It might be that $2,000 is involved, and then the litigant might want the conclusions of the court.

Mr. RAKER. That might be so in the case of a larger amount. Mr. Chairman, I will withdraw my amendment under the circumstances.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to withdraw his amendment. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I do not see any reason why the word "same" should be in line 13. You should give the right to either party and have the same embodied in a bill of exceptions.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. That is in the case of a jury trial.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I do not see that the word "same" carries any necessary meaning.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. That would be the same as in a jury trial.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. If you should use the language "as in the case of a jury trial," it would carry the same meaning.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. "The same as" would carry the same meaning.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. FORDNEY having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message, in writing, from the President of the United States, by Mr. Sharkey, one of his secretaries, informed the House of Representatives that the President had, on January 15, 1920, approved and signed bills of the following titles:

H. R. 5818. An act for the retirement of public-school teachers in the District of Columbia;

H. R. 8661. An act to authorize the Kingsdale Lumber Corporation to construct a bridge across Lumber River, near the town of Lumberton, N. C.;

H. R. 9947. An act to authorize J. L. Anderson and H. M. Duvall to construct a bridge across Great Pee Dee River at or near the town of Cheraw, S. C.;

H. R. 10135. An act for the construction of a bridge across Rock River at or near East Grand Avenue, in the city of Beloit, Wis.;

H. R. 10558. An act granting the consent of Congress to the Connecticut River Railroad Co., its lessees, successors, and assigns, to construct a bridge across the Connecticut River in the Commonwealth of Massachusetts;

H. R. 10847. An act granting the consent of Congress to Marion County, State of Mississippi, to construct a bridge across the Pearl River, in Marion County, State of Mississippi; and

H. R. 11025. An act to authorize the construction, maintenance, and operation of a bridge across the Tombigbee River, near Iron Wood Bluff, in Itawamba County, Miss.

ENLARGING THE JURISDICTION OF THE MUNICIPAL COURT OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 6. That all judgments hereafter entered by said municipal court shall remain in force for six years and no more after their rendition, unless the same shall have been docketed in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia as provided by existing law, and no judgment shall become a lien upon any lands, tenements, or hereditaments until so docketed.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment which I should like to offer.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BANKHEAD: Page 4, line 19, after the first word "the," insert "office of the clerk of."

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I want to call the attention of the chairman of the committee to this amendment. The law with reference to the enforcement of liens is, of course, always very strictly construed. The language of the section as it now stands is—

That all judgments hereafter entered by said municipal court shall remain in force for six years and no more after their rendition, unless the same shall have been docketed in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia.

That is rather unusual language. In most of the States, of course, the provision is that the judgment shall be recorded in the probate office or some place of record; but the section of the municipal code, section 1214, to which I called the attention of the chairman of the committee with reference to liens, provides that they shall be recorded "in the office of the clerk of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia," and it seems to me this language ought to follow the language of the municipal code. Otherwise it might be deemed sufficient to go and attempt to docket this lien upon the trial docket of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia; and although I have no interest in the matter whatever, it seems to me it ought to be specific and definite and to follow the language of the municipal code with reference to the validity of liens.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WALSH. I offer the following amendment:

Line 17, page 4, strike out the language "and no more after their rendition" and insert in place thereof the words "and no longer."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WALSH: Page 4, line 17, after the word "years," strike out the words "and no more after their rendition" and insert in lieu thereof "and no longer."

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me the present language is not correct phraseology:

That all judgments hereafter rendered by said municipal court shall remain in force for six years and no more after their rendition.

Mr. IGOE. Suppose that the language was stricken out and nothing inserted, how long would the judgment remain in force?

Mr. WALSH. Probably six years.

Mr. IGOE. And with the language inserted that the gentleman proposes, how long will the judgment remain in force?

Mr. WALSH. Probably six years. I will say that when I obtained recognition from the Chair I did not intend to insert any language after that stricken out, but out of the atmosphere came the suggestion that I proposed.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. If you do not insert some language, it will read:

Shall remain in force for six years unless the same shall have been docketed in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia.

And I defy anybody to say how long it would remain in force.

Mr. CRAMTON. Will the gentleman consent to accept this language "and for no more prolonged period of years"?

Mr. WALSH. No; I would not consent to that.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH].

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. WALSH) there were—ayes 22, noes 0.

Accordingly the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the chairman of the committee this question: Suppose a judgment is obtained, as provided in this bill, and it is docketed in the office of the clerk of the supreme court, what length of life will that docketing give it?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Twelve years.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Is that 12 more years?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. No; 12 years is the limit, as I understand.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. This is what I have in mind: Suppose a judgment has been obtained pursuant to this bill and it is allowed to run five years. It is then docketed in the office of the clerk of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia. Will that docketing give the judgment a supplemental life of 12 years, so that the total life of the judgment will be 17 years?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. No; I do not so understand it.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Is it clear what life this docketing would give the judgment—that it would only give it seven years more?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. It is 12 years in all.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Then the docketing would give it seven years more.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. For the period of 12 years only from the date when execution might first be issued thereon, or from the date of the last revival thereof.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. This is a judgment of a court of record that is limited to a life period of six years, provided something is not done. But during that period it may be recorded in the office of the clerk of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia. I have suggested a case in which, after running five years, it is recorded. How much more life will that docketing give to that judgment?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. My impression is that it gives it the life of a justice's court judgment, which would be 12 years from the date when the execution could first be issued upon it. Of course, the execution, I presume, could have been issued immediately upon the entry of the judgment, unless stayed in some way.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Then it will be only 12 years in the aggregate?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Twelve years in the aggregate, which is the life of a judgment of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, so it makes it the same as that.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GARD: Page 4, line 16, after the word "that," insert "section 1212 of the Code of Law of the District of Columbia shall apply to."

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, this amendment will require the elimination of some language afterwards; but what I desire to call attention to is the fact that we provide here in this section for the life of a judgment of this municipal court, which has jurisdiction to the extent of $2,000, to be 6 years, whereas section 1212 limits the life of a judgment in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia to 12 years. It would seem to me that the same rule should prevail and that a judgment for $2,000 in the municipal court should have the same life as a judgment for $2,100 obtained in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARD. Yes.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The gentleman's amendment is not complete.

Mr. GARD. I understand it is not. I said that it would mean the striking out of the language "shall remain in force for 6 years and no more after their rendition unless the same shall have been docketed in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, as provided by existing law."

I would include the language "and no judgment shall become a lien upon any land, tenement, or hereditament until so docketed," because the supreme court has to do with the question of title and the sale of land.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. This bill provides that a judgment of the municipal court shall not be a lien on real estate unless it is docketed in the supreme court or collected at once.

Mr. GARD. That is what it means at present. That is what I am trying to rectify.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. That is what the provision means; when you say the judgment shall not be a lien on real estate it means that it is of no value unless you can collect it at once, or unless you transfer it and docket it in the supreme court. If it is docketed in the supreme court it has a life of 12 years. I do not think it makes any difference whether the judgment of the municipal court has a life of five years or six years or one year if it is not a lien on real estate.

Mr. GARD. It may be collected from after acquired personal property. At present it stands that a judgment of the municipal court is good for 6 years for $2,000, and a judgment of the supreme court for $2,100 is good for 12 years.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. And is a lien.

Mr. GARD. And is a lien. Why such a discrepancy, why should not the judgment of the municipal court for $2,000 have the same force and effect that a judgment of any other court for $2,000?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I thought the gentleman said he did not wish to give them the same effect; that he did not wish to give them a lien on real estate. I wondered why a judgment for $2,000 in the District of Columbia should not be a lien on real estate. Is there any State in the Union where a man obtains a judgment in a court of record and that judgment does not become a lien on real estate?

Mr. GARD. I am inclined to think the gentleman is correct. The whole section can be cared for by inserting the language I have used.

Mr. DOWELL. Will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, I want to suggest to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD] that he may make this a lien on real estate by filing it with the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia. Then it becomes a lien for 12 years, the length of the term of a judgment in the supreme court.

Mr. GARD. Why not provide that the life of a judgment in the municipal court, of $2,000, shall be the same as a judgment of the supreme court?

Mr. DOWELL. Because you provide a method by which it may be made the same length as that of a judgment in the supreme court by filing it with the clerk of the supreme court. That is all that is necessary. It gives the parties an opportunity to file the judgment in the supreme court and have the same term of life that would be had if the judgment had been rendered in that court.

Mr. TILSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOWELL. Yes.

Mr. TILSON. It seems to me that the provision to the effect that before a judgment becomes a lien on land it shall be recorded in the supreme court will diminish the number of records that one will have to search in order to find out whether there is any encumbrance on real estate. Under this provision one would not have to go to the records of the municipal court at all. It would be sufficient to examine the records of the supreme court, for if it is an encumbrance on land it must be there.

Mr. DOWELL. That is a good reason for making the records all in one place, and it provides a simple method by which one may enter the record in the supreme court.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Is that of any value except to the abstract company?

Mr. DOWELL. If anyone desires to know whether there is an encumbrance on real estate he can find out at one place.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. They will not be all in one court. Nobody looks for a lien on real estate except the abstract company.

Mr. DOWELL. The abstract company charges everyone for whom it makes an abstract, and so this affects everybody who wants to secure an abstract. It seems to me that requiring the litigant to file a judgment in the supreme court is a very reasonable provision.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word so as to ask the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VOLSTEAD] a question. How long do judgments of the municipal court under existing law continue in force now?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. This, as I understand it, is a continuation of the existing law.

Mr. WALSH. This is a reenactment of the present law?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Yes; as I understand it.

Mr. WALSH. Is there any provision in the present law for the docketing of judgment in the municipal court?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. There is.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia: Page 4, line 20, after the word "law," insert "but the said judgments shall not remain in force for more than 12 years from the date of their rendition."

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Of course if that amendment is adopted a formal amendment will follow. It will be necessary to strike out the word "and," and begin the word "no" with a capital letter. I asked the chairman of the committee if he understood that the effect of this section would be to give a life of only 12 years to these judgments. He replied that was his understanding. He might be right about that, but it is merely an implication, and this amendment will make positive that implication.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman intends that that shall refer to judgments docketed in the supreme court?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Yes. We might say, "no judgment so docketed," and I will ask unanimous consent to so modify my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to modify his amendment in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. DOWELL. That merely discriminates against the judgment of the municipal court.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. But we are already doing that.

Mr. DOWELL. No. If this amendment is not adopted, then a judgment in the municipal court filed in the supreme court has exactly the same effect as a judgment in the supreme court.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. But that is precisely the effect that the chairman of the committee said it would not have.

Mr. DOWELL. But I desire to differ with him. The bill as it is presented here is exactly that case, and as soon as the judgment is filed with the supreme court it has exactly the same effect as though it had been rendered in the supreme court.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. The gentleman is merely raising the same question that I raised by my inquiry some moments ago.

Mr. DOWELL. According to the document just read by the chairman of the committee, it runs for 12 years from the time when an execution might issue. An execution may issue at the time it is filed in the supreme court.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. It might issue at the time it is rendered in the justice court.

Mr. DOWELL. In that court; yes.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. The only objection there could be to the language proposed by the gentleman from Virginia is the fact that a judgment might be entered and there might be a stay of execution; there might be an appeal. If there was an appeal, it would probably be set aside. I do not know what the proceeding here is. So that it might shorten the time. If the gentleman will use the language of the code, so that it will be 12 years after the execution has been issued——

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I have just said that I thought the amendment I had prepared had the approval of the committee. Originally, I intended to phrase the amendment affirmatively.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I would very much prefer to have it the way you have the code.

Mr. IGOE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. IGOE. I would suggest to the gentleman that I think that under his amendment he might cut out the right to have the judgment revived.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I am going to rewrite it. As I have stated, I thought the language I adopted had been approved by the chairman of the committee.

Mr. IGOE. I think the intention was that the judgment when filed in the supreme court should be governed by the present laws relating to judgments as contained in the code.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. But a very wide difference of opinion developed as to the meaning of the language used.

Mr. IGOE. The present law provides for 12 years after an execution might have been issued. The execution might be issued while it is in the municipal court. The 12 years is running, but when it is filed it is a lien.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has expired.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I understand that it is the unanimous consensus of opinion that a judgment of the municipal court runs for 12 years, and if the gentleman wants to make this effective and in simple language he could make it cover just what the committee wants by using the following language:

That all judgments hereafter rendered by such municipal courts shall remain in force for 12 years, and no longer, from the date of the entry. No judgment of the municipal court shall be a lien on any lands, tenements, or hereditaments until the judgment has been docketed in the office of the clerk of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, as provided for by existing law.

You cover both questions in that way. It is in force for 12 years whether it is docketed or not, and if you want a lien upon the real estate you do not get a lien until it is docketed. You may wait until the eleventh year. If you docket your judgment it becomes a lien, but not until then. I offer that suggestion.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, in view of the suggestions that have been made, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I intend to rewrite it, and I ask unanimous consent that we may return to this section later.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent that this section be passed temporarily. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 7. That nonresidents of the District of Columbia may commence suits in said municipal court without first giving security for costs, but upon motion may be required to give such security in pursuance of section 175 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the chairman of the committee if the substance of section 7 would not really become a part of the bill even if it were not formally embodied in the bill? That is to say, having provided, by section 3, that the procedure in the municipal court shall correspond with the procedure in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, would not the provisions of section 175 of the Code of the District of Columbia automatically apply? There is a good deal to be said along that line, not only with respect to section 7 and section 8—which are covered by sections 175 and 176 of the District Code—but other sections of the bill which relate to matters of procedure.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I can not perhaps tell the gentleman definitely why those who drew the bill—for while I introduced it, as I said awhile ago, I did not draw it; it was drawn by very good lawyers, and I think that they thought it was safer to put those provisions in.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I do not propose to move to strike out or to offer an amendment either to section 7 or section 8, but I would like to direct attention of the conferees, if there should be a conference, to what I am suggesting. We can perhaps shorten and simplify the proposed legislation by considering the course I have taken the liberty to suggest and, if it has not yet been done, adopt a general provision that will bring about the application to the municipal court of the law and procedure enforced in the District Supreme Court, except as the same may be modified.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I think the gentleman is correct in that.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to ask the chairman a question. Do residents of the District of Columbia have to give security for costs in bringing suit in the municipal court?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I presume that is the law. The supreme court——

Mr. WALSH. No; the municipal court.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. In bringing suit in the supreme court that is the rule. That section, as I remember, does not specifically apply to any other court but the supreme court.

Mr. WALSH. No; this says, "that nonresidents of the District may commence suits in said municipal court without first giving security for cost, but upon motion may be required to give such security." Now, from the way that is phrased you would think residents of the District had to give security for costs.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. May I answer the question, as I have just looked at the Code of the District of Columbia? It contains no provision requiring a resident of the District to give security for costs, although he is required to make a deposit. A nonresident can be required to give security if there is application therefor after service of notice.

Mr. WALSH. That is provided in section 175?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Yes, sir.

Mr. WALSH. Why should this be reenacted?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. My observation awhile ago was that the legislation might be very much shortened by taking the general course the gentleman has in mind.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I think section 175 only applies specifically to the supreme court as it reads now.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 8. That suits may be prosecuted by poor persons in the discretion and upon the order of the court, or of one of the judges, passed upon satisfactory evidence of inability to make deposit of costs, without the prepayment or deposit of costs.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 5, line 3, after the word "that," strike out the balance of the section and insert:

"Upon satisfactory evidence being presented to the court, or one of the judges thereof, that the plaintiff in any suit is indigent and unable to make the deposit of costs, such court or judge may, in its or his discretion, permit the prosecution of such suit without prepayment or deposit of costs."

Mr. BANKHEAD. Does not the gentleman think the word "security" ought to be added there? The preceding section provides for security.

Mr. GARD. I have no objection.

Mr. HICKS. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GARD. Yes.

Mr. HICKS. The purpose I had in addressing the Chair before the gentleman from Ohio offered the amendment was to ask this question: Is a provision such as this already in the law in the District, or is this a brand new provision?

Mr. GARD. There is some such provision, but it seems to me the language is not chosen very advisedly, and I am frank to say the language I have used in the amendment I have offered is the same language, in effect, as exists in the Code of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, and I have offered it in a trifling different phraseology.

Mr. HICKS. Can the gentleman give any information in regard to the number of people who avail themselves of this provision as applied to the supreme court?

Mr. GARD. I do not know how many, but I would presume there would be quite a number of applications, owing to the complex character of the population.

Mr. HICKS. In the gentleman's opinion, it is well to have this provision put in?

Mr. GARD. I think so.

I personally am inclined to afford every possible opportunity for every person, no matter how poor he may be, to present his case to the court properly. If he has not money to pay the costs or give security for costs, or make any deposit for costs, and he can show that to the court, and he is honest in so showing, I think he should be permitted to go ahead with his case.

Mr. HICKS. I agree with the gentleman from Ohio in regard to that fully, but I was wondering just what evidence the court would ask for as to whether or not a person was unable to pay those fees.

Mr. GARD. It is in the discretion of the court. It would be such as would be necessary in the conduct of the business of the court, I presume. Nobody can say what the court would demand.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee if the word "passed" should not be "based"?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. That has all been stricken out.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 10. That the marshal of the United States in and for the District of Columbia shall designate two of his deputies to take charge of the jurors in the municipal court, under the direction of the trial judge, and who shall perform such other services as the judge may require. Said municipal court shall have power to appoint two additional assistant clerks, to be known as jury clerks, at an annual salary of $1,200 each, payable in monthly installments; and the said clerks shall note the attendance of each juror, administer oaths when required, and perform such other duties as the trial judge shall direct.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment:

Line 20, page 5, strike out the word "who" and insert the word "he."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WALSH: Page 5, line 20, after the word "and," strike out the word "who" and insert in lieu thereof the word "he."

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, this reads that the marshal of the United States in and for the District of Columbia shall take charge of the jurors under the direction of the trial judge, and "who shall perform such other services as the judge may require." I ask to modify my amendment by using the word "they" instead of the word "he."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to modify his amendment. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. WALSH. Now, I would like to ask the chairman of the committee——

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MOORE], who is familiar with the code and the procedure in the District, if the United States marshal has charge of the jurors in the supreme court now, under existing law?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I would say that I have had very little to do with the situation here for a great many years, and can not speak from any knowledge, but my belief is that he is correct in the assumption that the United States marshal for the District of Columbia has charge, and he of course has his assistants—bailiffs and others. I think the chairman of the committee is probably aware that that is the condition.

Mr. WALSH. Then, as I understand it, we do not provide for any court officers or other deputies except those under the jurisdiction of the United States marshal in and for the District of Columbia?

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment: Line 22, page 5, strike out "two" and insert "one."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HUSTED: Page 5, line 22, after the word "appoint," strike out "two" and insert in lieu thereof "one."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Chairman, I would like to modify that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to modify his amendment. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HUSTED. I want to add to that amendment, to strike out the word "clerks," and also to strike out the words "to be known as jury clerks," in line 23; strike out the word "each" in line 24, and strike out the word "clerks" and insert the word "clerk" in line 25.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HUSTED: Page 5, line 22, after the word "appoint," strike out the word "two" and insert in lieu thereof the word "one"; line 23, strike out the word "clerks" where it appears the first time and insert the word "clerk"; and strike out the words "to be known as jury clerks"; in line 24 strike out the word "each"; and in line 25 strike out the word "clerks" and insert in lieu thereof the word "clerk."

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, apparently this amendment, if it is agreed to, would limit the authority of the court to employ more than one additional clerk over the number that are now being employed, and certainly if you are going to give the municipal court of the District of Columbia exclusive jurisdiction of all causes arising in the District under a value of $2,000, you have got to have more than one additional clerk over the number of clerks the courts now have.

This bill provided for two additional jury clerks. I do not know whether two additional jury clerks are requisite or not. It made no limitation, at least, upon the number of other clerks that might be provided by an appropriation law. But if you put this in the law you have got a limit on the number of clerks that can be employed in the municipal court, and if the Committee on Appropriations brings in a bill, as they will, providing for more clerks in the municipal court, they go out on a point of order in the House.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HUSTED. I would ask the gentleman if he has not overlooked the limitation in line 25, on page 5, and in lines 26 and 27, on page 6. The duties of this particular clerk are set forth. It says that he "shall note the attendance of each juror, administer oaths when required, and perform such other duties as the trial judge shall direct."

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Very well. That does not answer the proposition. Those probably will not be the only things that he does. But if we specifically provide by law, as a legislative proposition, that the Department of Labor, for example, can employ one more clerk, then they could not go above that. Where Congress specifically by law legislates and covers a certain thing there is no guesswork after that.

Mr. HUSTED. Then if the gentleman will permit, I will ask unanimous consent to modify my amendment by retaining the words "to be known as jury clerk" after the word "clerk," in line 23, so that he will be designated as a jury clerk.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I have no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York to modify his amendment?

There was no objection.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, may we have the amendment read as modified?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will read the amendment as modified.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HUSTED: On page 5, line 22, after the word "appoint," strike out "two" and insert "one" in lieu thereof. In line 23 strike out the word "clerks" where it first appears and insert the word "clerk," after the word "assistant." In the same line, after the word "jury," strike out the word "clerks" and insert "clerk." In line 24 strike out the word "each." In line 25 strike out the word "clerks" and insert in lieu thereof the word "clerk."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, a division.

The CHAIRMAN. A division is asked for.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 16, noes 0.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 12. That no appeal shall hereafter lie from the municipal court to the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia. Any party aggrieved by any final judgment in an action to recover possession of real property, or by any final order or judgment of said municipal court where the amount or value involved, exclusive of interests and costs, exceeds the sum of $100, or by any interlocutory order whereby the possession of property is changed or affected, such as orders dissolving writs of attachment and the like, provided the amount or value involved exceeds the sum aforesaid, may appeal therefrom to the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia. If the amount or value involved does not exceed, exclusive of interest and costs, the sum of $100, the court of appeals may allow a special appeal, whenever it is made to appear to said court, upon petition, that it will be in the interest of justice to allow an appeal. The time for and manner of taking, perfecting, and prosecuting appeals, and substituting parties shall be the same as now obtaining, or as hereafter modified, for appeals from the supreme court of said District to said court of appeals. No appeal by the defendant in an action for the recovery of possession of real property shall operate as a stay of execution or supersedeas, unless within six days, exclusive of Sundays and legal holidays, after the judgment the appellant shall file in the clerk's office of the municipal court a bond with surety or sureties, to be approved by the said court or a judge thereof, conditioned to abide by and pay the judgment rendered by the municipal court, if it shall be affirmed, together with the costs of the appeal, and to pay all intervening damages to the leased property and compensation for the use and occupation thereof from the date of the judgment appealed from to the date of its affirmance. The penal sum of said bond shall be fixed by the municipal court or a judge thereof.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend, on page 6, line 16, by striking out the word "interests" and inserting the word "interest."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WALSH: Page 6, line 16, strike out the word "interests" and insert in lieu thereof the word "interest."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 13. That each of the present judges of said municipal court shall serve until the expiration of his present commission and until his successor is duly appointed and qualified. Each judge hereafter appointed shall serve for the term of six years and until his successor is duly appointed and qualified.

With a committee amendment, as follows:

Strike out all of lines 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, and 24, on page 7.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, the amendment of the committee which would strike out all of section 13 should, I think, have the careful consideration of the Committee on the Judiciary and of the Committee of the Whole.

Section 13 contains two propositions. One is to provide that the judges of this municipal court, either those now in office or those hereafter to be appointed, shall serve the period for which appointed and until their successors are appointed.

The other proposition is to extend the term from four years to six years. The term at present is four years. Section 13 would provide for an extension of that term to six years, but that extension would not affect those now holding office. It is expressly so drawn that it would have no effect except as to those hereafter to be appointed.

It seems to me that we might very well provide for that extension of time from four to six years for judges of this court hereafter appointed, for the reason that we are giving the court a greater responsibility and a greater dignity, and it should have a corresponding period of service, so that you will not be continually breaking in new judges, and inexperienced judges, perhaps.

Furthermore, the terms of the judges of the police court and the juvenile court are six years, and certainly neither of those courts is of greater importance than this municipal court will be under this new law. The justices of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia and of the court of appeals are appointed for life. It would seem only proper to give the judges of the municipal court as long a term as the judges of the juvenile court and the police court.

But I am not so much concerned about that as I am about the other proposition in the paragraph. I think that section 13 should be retained, even if the committee should feel that they wanted to change the word "six" to "four," because the dispatch of business in the court is largely involved. Under the present law the terms of several of the judges expire at one time. If there is a delay in the appointing of their successors, they do not hold until their successors are qualified, and the business of the court is greatly crippled because of the vacancies. Only a short time ago that very thing happened, and for a period of several months only one judge of the court remained who was eligible to continue the work. The other judges were reappointed eventually, but for several months between the expiration of their terms and the time of their reappointment their positions were vacant. I hope, therefore, that the committee will feel that they can yield on that point and retain section 13.

Mr. WALSH. In response to the suggestion of the gentleman from Michigan, who takes issue with the amendment proposed by the committee, I will say that the committee were very strongly of the opinion that we ought not to increase the terms of the judges of the municipal court. I do not think there would be very much disposition to question the passage of a provision permitting them to serve during their terms and until their successors were duly appointed and qualified.

Mr. TILSON. What does the gentleman understand to be the present law? If we pass nothing on this subject whatever, would not these present judges continue to serve until their successors were appointed?

Mr. WALSH. No; they step out of office at 12 o'clock noon on the day of the expiration of their commissions, and that leaves a vacancy. I think we should enact the first three lines of the section. That would provide that each of the present judges of the municipal court shall serve until the expiration of his present commission and until his successor is duly appointed and qualified.

Mr. CRAMTON. I will suggest that even if we are to limit the term to four years, the entire paragraph should be retained, the second sentence as well as the first, changing the word "six" to the word "four," because the first sentence would apply only to those now in office and not to those hereafter appointed. I do not know just how to get the issue properly before the committee. I do not myself like to offer to amend section 13 by changing the word "six" to "four," because I favor the term of six years.

Mr. WALSH. Would the gentleman seriously combat a motion to change "six" to "four" if the committee amendment were voted down?

Mr. CRAMTON. I would not. I would be glad to allow the committee to use its best judgment on that.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment.

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. CRAMTON) there were—ayes 22, noes 6.

Accordingly the committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CRAMTON. I offer to insert a new section, to be known as section 13, which will be identical with the section stricken out, except that the word "six" will be changed to "four."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CRAMTON: Page 7, line 19, insert a new section as follows:

"SEC. 13. That each of the present judges of said municipal court shall serve until the expiration of his present commission and until his successor is duly appointed and qualified. Each judge hereafter appointed shall serve for the term of four years and until his successor is duly appointed and qualified."

Mr. GARD. Reserving a point of order, does the gentleman from Minnesota desire to make a point of order on that?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. No; but I offer an amendment to it that will carry out the idea that I think should be properly embodied in the bill. Under the present law when the term of a judge expires he does not hold until his successor is appointed and qualified, and I am informed that we did have an instance when there was only one municipal judge in this District, because the terms of the others expired and their successors were not appointed.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order. If the chairman of the committee wants to offer an amendment let him offer it. It is very unusual to offer an amendment containing the language of a section which the committee has just stricken out.

Mr. CRAMTON. If the gentleman will permit, I am offering an amendment which does not contain the same proposition that has been stricken out. The proposition to strike out contained a provision for the extension of the term from four to six years, and in my amendment it is four years, as it is under existing law. I have offered the amendment that does not provide for any extension of the term except from the time of the expiration until the successor is appointed.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The gentleman's amendment differs in substance from the committee amendment?

Mr. CRAMTON. It does.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment which will cover what the gentleman from Michigan has in mind and not repeat any unnecessary language.

The Clerk read as follows:

Line 19, add:

"SEC. 13. That each of the judges of the said municipal court shall serve until his successor is duly appointed and qualified."

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I accept the substitute.

Mr. IGOE. Might not the effect of that be to destroy any definite period for the service of the judges?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. No; because the law is in effect now.

Mr. IGOE. This is a change of existing law and to that extent repeals it. I am inclined to think that the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan is the better amendment, if this is what you want to accomplish—that they shall serve four years and until the successor is appointed and qualified.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the substitute offered by the gentleman from Minnesota.

The question was taken, and the substitute was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 14. That this act shall not take effect until 90 days after its approval.

The following committee amendment was read:

Page 8, line 1, strike out "14" and insert "13."

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, I suggest that this amendment ought to be voted down, in view of the fact that we have just inserted section 13.

The committee amendment was rejected.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move, on page 8, line 1, to strike out the word "not," after the word "shall," and the word "until," after the word "effect," and in line 2 strike out the word "approval" and insert in lieu thereof the word "passage."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 15. That all acts and parts of acts inconsistent herewith are hereby repealed: Provided, That nothing herein shall be construed so as to deprive the Supreme Court or the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia from reviewing and finally determining such cases as may be pending on appeal or certiorari at the time that this act goes into effect: Provided further, That nothing herein shall be construed to deprive the said municipal court of any jurisdiction possessed by said court at the time of the passage of this act.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 8, line 3, strike out the figures 15 and insert 14.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was rejected.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 8, line 12, after the word at the end of line 12, add the following:

"Provided further, That nothing in this act shall be construed to supersede or modify any of the provisions of the public resolution, No. 31, Sixty-fifth Congress, entitled 'Joint resolution to prevent rent profiteering in the District of Columbia,' approved May 31, 1918, nor of any of the provisions of public law No. 63, approved October 22, 1917, entitled 'An act to amend an act entitled "An act to provide further for the national security and defense by encouraging the production, conserving the supply, and controlling the distribution of food products and fuel," approved August 10, 1917.'"

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, on that I reserve the point of order.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. What is the point of order?

Mr. LONGWORTH. It is clearly not germane.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, the bill we are now considering relates to the jurisdiction of the municipal court of the District of Columbia, to matters connected with the trial of cases, and to appeals from judgments of that court. The bill mentions one subject of which the court has or is to have jurisdiction, the trial and determination of cases relating to or involving the title to and the possession of real estate, including, of course, rental property in the District. The joint resolution referred to in the amendment I offer, also the rent law referred to, deal with the same matters. The examination I have made of the bill before us and my knowledge of the joint resolution—the Saulsbury resolution—and of the rent law lead me to say that, in my judgment, there is or may be conflict between the bill on the one hand and the resolution and the rent law on the other hand. The bill provides for the manner of trial of cases relating to real estate and personal property also in the District court, for the taxing of costs in such cases, for appeals from the judgments to the Court of Appeals of the District, for the manner of taking such appeals, and for the effect of such appeals. The rent law has several provisions relating to all these things, and as to some of them, and in certain important respects, the provisions of this bill and the provisions of the rent law are different. That is, cases relating to the possession and control of property, taken to the Municipal Court of the District by appeal from the Rent Commission, must, under the rent law, be tried and disposed of in one manner, while cases properly originating in that court must be tried, determined, and disposed of in another way. It may be thought by some that all lawsuits of a similar nature, whether they originate in the court or reach there by appeal from the Rent Commission, should stand on the same footing, and that all laws and all procedure and rules of court ought to be the same as to both classes of cases.

That sounds all right and is right as a general proposition, but the Saulsbury resolution and the rent law were passed to meet an emergency; they seek to prevent profiteering in rents by the landlords in the District, and it seemed to the Congress justifiable and necessary to provide for court proceedings in such of the cases as may reach the court somewhat different in some respects from the course pursued in the trial and disposition of other cases. The provisions of the rent law were carefully worked out, and in my judgment they are wise. They ought at least to be given a fair trial. And while that law is on trial the Congress ought not to enact a law which by any kind of construction may supersede it or conflict with it. It is suggested here that the Saulsbury resolution has been repealed or is not now in effect. The regular rent law, if I may so call it, provides that the Saulsbury resolution shall remain in full force and effect for 60 days after the confirmation of the appointees to the commission by the President, so the Saulsbury resolution is now running and will run for some time; the regular rent law is in force and operating. As I look through the bill that the House is now considering it seems to me that unless some such amendment as I offer is adopted there may be some conflict. It is simply that nothing in this act—in this bill—shall be so construed as to supersede or modify the provisions of the joint resolution or the rent law. I believe my amendment is germane, and I trust it will be agreed to.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I do not insist upon the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the words "so as" in line 5 on page 8.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. BANKHEAD moves to amend by striking out, on page 8, line 5, the words "so as."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, if this section is completed, I desire to say that a reservation was made in respect to section 6, and permission granted to return to the same. A question arose as to the meaning of this section, and considerable debate ensued. The varieties of interpretations submitted, indicated that there was a wide difference of opinion as to the meaning of this portion of the bill. I have offered an amendment which affirmatively places these judgments on the same basis as judgments of justices of the peace, so that their life will not be more than 12 years from the date at which executions could be sued out.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report. The Chair will inquire whether the amendment is a substitute for the entire section?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. No; the amendment should be inserted in line 20 after the words "existing law." It covers the same points that I had in mind in the amendment heretofore offered, but the essential proposition is affirmatively, not negatively, stated.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia: Page 4, line 20, after the word "law," insert "in which event they shall be liens as provided in chapter 38 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia, for judgments of justices of the peace."

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. The effect of that language will be to limit the life of these judgments to 12 years from the time that executions could be sued out, and to give these judgments the same rights that are provided in the chapter for judgments of justices of the peace.

Mr. WALSH. Do I understand the last words of the gentleman's amendment were "for judgments of justices of the peace"?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. What does that mean?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. The amendment is designed to make clear the meaning which the chairman of the committee said this section was intended to carry. The chapter cited provides for the life of judgments of justices of the peace when they are docketed, for scire facias and other proceedings, and for certain limitations not to be considered in counting the time of the life of the judgment.

Mr. WALSH. This is, "in which event they shall be liens as provided in chapter," and so forth, "of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia for judgments of justices of the peace"?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. I do not think that hitches on there just right.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Why not?

Mr. WALSH. "For judgments of justices of the peace." What does it refer to?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. It refers to all of the provisions of the chapter relating to judgments of justices of the peace. In other words, it puts these judgments, in the event they are docketed, on the same footing as judgments of justices of the peace, with all the rights enjoyed under this chapter by such judgments.

Mr. WALSH. I do not think that is necessary, and it looks to me that it does not harmonize with the rest.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. This language affords the precise meaning that the chairman said was intended, namely, that these judgments should have a life of 12 years as provided for judgments of justices of the peace.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman means to say that the chapter——

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. That chapter 38, so far as it relates to judgments of the justices of the peace and docketing same, shall apply to these judgments, if they are docketed under this section.

Mr. WALSH. I think the gentleman might say, "in which event they shall be liens as provided in chapter 38 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia relating to judgments of justices of the peace."

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I will say to the gentleman I first drew my amendment and used the words "relating to" and then struck them out, for the reason that this chapter does not relate exclusively to judgments of justices of the peace. I have no objection in the world to using the words "relating to" except as stated that the chapter cited does not exclusively relate to justices of the peace.

Mr. WALSH. I have no objection to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Now, Mr. Chairman, there are two little consequential amendments. There should be a period at the end of the amendment just adopted, the word "and" in line 20 should be stricken out, and the word "no" should begin with a capital. I move to strike out the word "and," and the word "no" shall begin with a capital "N".

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia: Page 4, line 20, after the word "laws," strike out the comma, insert a period, and strike out the word "and," and insert a capital letter to the word "no."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill to the House with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Thereupon the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. TREADWAY, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 10074, and had instructed him to report the same to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and amendments to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I demand a separate vote on the first committee amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts demands a separate vote on an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 3, strike out "$1,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$2,000."

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I do not think it has been reported correctly by the Clerk. There has been no such amendment reported to the House.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, the committee amendment was stricken out and no amendment was made to that part of the bill.

Mr. CRAMTON. No amendment of that kind was reported to the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair, of course, does not know what transpired in the committee. What does the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] claim?

Mr. WALSH. I was under the impression that the first committee amendment which was voted down in the committee could now be voted upon separately in the House, but I see that I am mistaken, and I will endeavor to secure a vote on that question in another manner.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them en gross.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I move to recommit the bill to the Committee on the Judiciary, with instructions to report the same back forthwith with an amendment striking out, in line 7, page 1, the figures "2,000" and insert in place thereof the figures "1,000."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the motion to recommit.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. WALSH moves to recommit the bill to the Committee on the Judiciary with instructions to that committee to report the same back forthwith with the following amendment: Page 1, line 7, strike out "$2,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$1,000."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recommit.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the Chair was in doubt.

Thereupon the House divided; and there were—ayes 14, noes 18.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of no quorum.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 19 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Saturday, January 17, 1920, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting report of all promotions in United States Army since November 11, 1918, in response to H. Res. 425 (H. Doc. No. 610); to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed.

SENATE.

SATURDAY, January 17, 1920.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we desire the work of this day to go into the record as a transcript of Thy own thought concerning us. Lest Thy spirit may be with us send us not hence. Fit us for the duties of this day, that we may reflect in our thought, word, and character the purpose of God in us as individuals and as a Nation. We ask it for Christ's sake. Amen.

NAMING A PRESIDING OFFICER.

The Secretary (George A. Sanderson) read the following communication:

UNITED STATES SENATE,
PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE,
Washington, D. C., January 17, 1920.

To the Senate:

Being temporarily absent from the Senate, I appoint Hon. REED SMOOT, a Senator from the State of Utah, to perform the duties of the Chair during my absence.

ALBERT B. CUMMINS,
President Pro Tempore.

Mr. SMOOT took the chair as Presiding Officer and directed that the Journal of yesterday's proceedings should be read.

On request of Mr. LODGE, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of yesterday's proceedings was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

SALMON FISHERIES TREATY WITH GREAT BRITAIN.

Mr. LODGE. As in open executive session, I ask unanimous consent to submit an order for the return of what is known as the salmon fisheries treaty, pursuant to a communication from the President, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, saying:

To the Senate:

I transmit herewith a communication from the Secretary of State relating to the convention between the United States and Great Britain, signed September 2, 1919, relating to the protection, preservation, and propagation of salmon fisheries. I beg to request that this treaty be returned to me for further consideration.

WOODROW WILSON.

I send the following order to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the order will be read.

The order was read and agreed to, as follows:

Ordered, That the Committee on Foreign Relations be discharged from the further consideration of the convention signed September 2, 1919, between the United States and Great Britain, providing effective measures for the protection, preservation, and propagation of the salmon fisheries in the waters contiguous to the United States and the Dominion of Canada, and the Fraser River system, transmitted to the Senate on the calendar day of September 3, 1919, and printed as Executive H, Sixty-sixth Congress, first session, and that it be returned to the President of the United States.

Mr. LODGE. I ask to have printed in the RECORD the message from the President and the letter from the Secretary of State explanatory of the order just passed. The treaty has already been made public, and I ask also that it be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

To the Senate:

I transmit herewith a communication from the Secretary of State relating to the convention between the United States and Great Britain, signed September 2, 1919, relating to the protection, preservation, and propagation of the salmon fisheries. I beg to request that this treaty be returned to me for further consideration.

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE,
15 January, 1920.

The PRESIDENT:

The undersigned, the Secretary of State, has the honor to lay before the President, with a view to its transmission to the Senate, if his judgment approve thereof, the following suggestion with regard to the convention for the protection, preservation, and propagation of the salmon fisheries, signed September 2, 1919, and submitted to the Senate by the President on September 3, 1919.

Article II of such convention has been objected to by representatives of the fishery interests in the State of Washington, and since it would seem that such objections might be met by redraft of this article without prejudicing the treaty as a whole, it is suggested that the treaty be withdrawn for the purpose of taking up the revision of this article with the Government of Great Britain.

Respectfully submitted.

ROBERT LANSING.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, January 13, 1920.

The Senate:

I transmit herewith, to receive the advice and consent of the Senate to its ratification, a convention between the United States and Great Britain, signed September 2, 1919, providing effective measures for the protection, preservation, and propagation of the salmon fisheries in the waters contiguous to the United States and the Dominion of Canada and in the Fraser River system.

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE,
September 3, 1919.

SEPTEMBER 2, 1919.

The PRESIDENT:

The undersigned, the Secretary of State, has the honor to lay before the President, with a view to its transmission to the Senate, if his judgment approve thereof, to receive the advice and consent of the Senate to its ratification, a convention signed September 2, 1919, between the United States and Great Britain, providing effective measures for the protection, preservation, and propagation of the salmon fisheries in the waters contiguous to the United States and the Dominion of Canada and in the Fraser River system.

Respectfully submitted.

ROBERT LANSING.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington.

The United States of America and His Majesty George V, of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, and of the British Dominions beyond the Seas, King, Emperor of India, equally recognizing the desirability of uniform and effective measures for the protection, preservation, and propagation of the salmon fisheries in the waters contiguous to the United States and the Dominion of Canada and in the Fraser River system, have resolved to conclude a convention for this purpose, and have named as their plenipotentiaries:

The President of the United States of America, the Hon. Robert Lansing, Secretary of State of the United States of America, and

His Britannic Majesty, the Hon. Ronald Lindsay, his charge d'affaires at Washington, and the Hon. Sir John Douglas Hazen, a knight commander of the Most Distinguished Order of St. Michael and St. George, chief justice of New Brunswick, and a member of his Privy Council for Canada,

Who, having exhibited their full powers, found to be in due form, have agreed to and signed the following articles:

ARTICLE I.

The times, seasons, and methods of sockeye-salmon fishing in the waters specified in Article III of this convention, and the nets, engines, gear, apparatus, and appliances which may be used therein, shall be limited to those which are specified in the regulations appended hereto, and/or which may be specified in revised, modified, or substituted regulations provided for in Article VI and promulgated in accordance with the terms of Article II.

ARTICLE II.

The high contracting parties engage to put into operation and enforce by legislative and executive action, with as little delay as possible, the provisions of this convention and said regulations, and the date when the said regulations shall be put into operation shall be fixed by concurrent proclamations of the President of the United States and of the Governor General of the Dominion of Canada in council. Each of the high contracting parties may, by appropriate legislation, provide for the trial, conviction, and punishment within its jurisdiction of any person found there who has contravened any of the provisions of this convention, and/or said regulations within the jurisdiction of the other high contracting party, and who has not been punished for such offense within the latter jurisdiction.

ARTICLE III.

It is agreed that the provisions of this convention and of said regulations shall apply to the waters included within the following boundaries:

Beginning at Carmanagh Lighthouse on the southwest coast of Vancouver Island; thence in a straight line to a point 3 marine miles due west astronomic from Tatoosh Lighthouse, Washington; thence to said Tatoosh Lighthouse; thence to the nearest point of Cape Flattery; thence following the southerly shore of Juan de Fuca Strait to Point Wilson, on Quimper Peninsula; thence in a straight line to Point Partridge, on Whidbey Island; thence following the western shore of the said Whidbey Island to the entrance to Deception Pass; thence across said entrance to the southern side of Reservation Bay, on Fidalgo Island; thence following the western and northern shore line of the said Fidalgo Island to Swinomish Slough, crossing the said Swinomish Slough in line with the track of the Great Northern Railway; thence northerly following the shore line of the mainland to Point Grey, at the southern entrance to Burrard Inlet, British Columbia; thence in a straight line to the southern end of Gabriola Island; thence to the southern side of the entrance to Boat Harbor, Vancouver Island; thence following the eastern and southern shores of the said Vancouver Island to the starting point at Carmanagh Lighthouse, as shown on the United States Coast and Geodetic Survey Chart No. 6300, as corrected to July 20, 1918, and also the Fraser River and its tributaries.

The high contracting parties engage to have prepared, as soon as practicable, charts of the waters described in this article, with the international boundary line indicated thereon; and to establish such buoys and marks for the purposes of this convention as may be recommended by the commission referred to in Article IV.

ARTICLE IV.

The high contracting parties agree to appoint, within two months after the exchange of ratifications of this convention, a commission to be known as the International Fisheries Commission, consisting of four persons, two to be named by each party. This commission shall continue to exist so long as this convention shall be in force. Each party shall have the power to fill, and shall fill, from time to time, any vacancy which may occur in its representation on the commission. Each party shall pay its own commissioners, and any joint expenses shall be paid by the two high contracting parties in equal moieties.

ARTICLE V.

The International Fisheries Commission shall conduct investigations into the life history of the salmon, hatchery methods, spawning-ground conditions, and other related matters, and shall observe the operation of the said regulations appended hereto, and shall recommend to their respective Governments any modifications of, additions to, or substitutions for the appended regulations which may be found desirable.

ARTICLE VI.

The regulations appended to this convention shall remain in force for a period of eight years from the date of their promulgation, as provided in Article II, and thereafter until one year from the date when either of the high contracting parties shall give notice to the other of its desire for their revision, or until the termination of this convention, whichever shall first occur. Immediately upon such notice being given the International Fisheries Commission shall proceed to make a revision of said regulations, which revised regulations shall be incorporated in a special agreement between the high contracting parties. It is understood that such special agreement shall, on the part of the United States, be made by the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate thereof. Such special agreement shall be binding only when confirmed by the two Governments by an exchange of notes. Such special agreement shall be promulgated as provided in Article II hereof, and shall remain in force for a period of five years and thereafter until one year from the date when a further notice of revision is given as above provided in this article, or until the termination of this convention, whichever shall first occur.

It shall, however, at any time be in the power of the high contracting parties by special agreement, upon the recommendation of the International Fisheries Commission, to make modifications of, additions to, or substitutions for any of the regulations in force, and (or) to make the provisions of this convention, and any regulations promulgated in accordance with the terms thereof, operative in the waters specified in Article III of this convention, as to any or all of the other species of salmon, including steelhead. It is understood that such special agreement shall, on the part of the United States, be made by the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate thereof. Such special agreement shall be binding only when confirmed by the two Governments by an exchange of notes. Such special agreement shall be promulgated as provided in Article II hereof.

ARTICLE VII.

This convention shall remain in force for a period of 15 years, and thereafter until two years from the date when either of the high contracting parties shall give notice to the other of its desire to terminate this convention.

ARTICLE VIII.

The present convention shall be duly ratified by the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate thereof, and by His Britannic Majesty, and the ratifications shall be exchanged at Washington as soon as practicable.

In faith whereof the respective plenipotentiaries have signed the present convention in duplicate and thereunto affixed their seals.

Done at the city of Washington this 2d day of September, in the year 1919.

"APPENDIX.

"International regulations for the protection and preservation of the sockeye-salmon fisheries of the Fraser River system.

"SECTION 1.

"The following regulations shall apply to the waters described in article 3 of the convention of September 2, 1919, between the United States and Great Britain, to which these regulations are appended, to wit:

"Beginning at Carmanagh Lighthouse, on the southwest coast of Vancouver Island; thence in a straight line to a point 3 marine miles due west astronomic from Tatoosh Lighthouse, Wash.; thence to said Tatoosh Lighthouse; thence to the nearest point of Cape Flattery; thence following the southerly shore of Juan de Fuca Strait to Point Wilson, on Quimper Peninsula; thence in a straight line to Point Partridge, on Whidbey Island; thence following the western shore of the said Whidbey Island to the entrance to Deception Pass; thence across said entrance to the southern side of Reservation Bay, on Fidalgo Island; thence following the western and northern shore line of the said Fidalgo Island to Swinomish Slough, crossing the said Swinomish Slough in line with the track of the Great Northern Railway; thence northerly following the shore line of the mainland to Point Grey, at the southern entrance to Burrard Inlet, British Columbia; thence in a straight line to the southern end of Gabriola Island; thence to the southern side of the entrance to Boat Harbor, Vancouver Island; thence following the eastern and southern shores of the said Vancouver Island to the starting point at Carmanagh Lighthouse, as shown on the United States Coast and Geodetic Survey Chart No. 6300, as corrected to July 20, 1918, and also the Fraser River and its tributaries.

"SECTION 2.

"DEFINITIONS.

"'Drift net' shall mean a floating gill net that is neither anchored nor staked, but that floats freely with the tide or current.

"'Trap net' shall include a pound net.

"'Commission' shall mean the International Fisheries Commission, appointed under the convention to which these regulations are appended.

"'Treaty waters' shall mean all waters described in article 3 of the convention to which these regulations are appended.

"SECTION 3.

"(a) Fishing for sockeye salmon in the treaty waters within the territorial limits of the State of Washington shall not be permissible except under license from such State, and in the treaty waters of Canada except under license under the provision of the fisheries act of Canada.

"(b) No greater number of licenses for any class of fishing appliance shall be authorized in any year in the treaty waters within the territorial limits of the State of Washington than were issued for such class for the season of 1918, up to August 31, inclusive thereof, and in the treaty waters of Canada the number of gill nets that may be licensed in any year shall not exceed 1,800.

"(c) No license shall be granted to any person or partnership in the State of Washington unless such person or each member of such partnership shall be an American citizen, resident in said State, and no license shall be granted to any joint-stock company or corporation in said State unless the officers, directors, and the holders of a majority of the stock thereof are American citizens, or unless it is authorized to do business in the said State; and no license shall be granted to any person, company, or firm in the Province of British Columbia unless such person is a British subject, resident in the said Province, or unless such company or firm is a Canadian company or firm, or is authorized by the provincial government to do business in the said Province of British Columbia.

"(d) No one other than a British subject who owns or leases land on either side of the Fraser River above New Westminster Bridge, and who actually permanently resides on and is cultivating such land, shall be eligible for a license to fish for sockeye salmon between New Westminster Bridge and Mission Bridge, but fishing under such license shall not be carried on below New Westminster Bridge.

"SECTION 4.

"The use of nets other than drift nets, purse seines, and trap nets shall not be permitted in treaty water for the capture of sockeye salmon.

"SECTION 5.

"No net fishing or fishing of any kind, other than with hook and line, except for hatchery purposes or scientific purposes, shall be permissible in the Fraser River above the down-river side of Mission Bridge.

"SECTION 6.

"During the years 1920 to 1927, both years inclusive, no one shall fish for, catch, or kill any salmon from the 20th day of July to the 31st day of July in each year, both days inclusive; and during this close time no nets or appliances of any kind that will capture salmon may be used in these treaty waters: Provided, however, That salmon fishing for hatchery or scientific purposes may be authorized during this period.

"SECTION 7.

"The weekly close time for salmon fishing shall be from 6 o'clock a. m. Saturday to 6 o'clock p. m. Sunday in Canadian waters, excepting in that portion of the Fraser River between New Westminster Bridge and Mission Bridge, where the weekly close time shall be from 6 o'clock a. m. Saturday to 6 o'clock p. m. on the following Monday, and in the treaty waters of the United States from Friday at 4 o'clock p. m. to Sunday at 4 o'clock a. m., and during this close time no salmon fishing of any kind other than for hatchery or scientific purposes shall be permissible, and during the full period of each weekly close time or annual close season, each trap net shall be closed by an apron placed across the outer entrance to the heart of the trap, which apron shall extend from the surface to the bottom of the water and shall be securely connected to the piles on either side of the heart of the trap net, fastened by rings not more than 2 feet apart on taut wires stretched from the top to the bottom of the piles, and such apron, or the appliance by which it is raised and lowered, shall be provided with a signal or flag, which shall disclose whether the trap net is closed, and which shall be of the form and character approved by the commission: Provided, That in addition to the foregoing requirement, such trap net shall be equipped with a V-shaped opening, to the satisfaction of the commission, and in the lead of such trap net next to the entrance to the heart and immediately adjacent to the apron, of at least 10 feet in width at the top and extending below the surface at least 4 feet below low water, which V-shaped opening shall remain open and unobstructed during the full period of each weekly close time or annual close season. For the purpose of assuring full compliance with this regulation, the owner or operator of each trap net shall constantly maintain during the weekly and annual close times a watchman, whose duty it shall be to cause each trap net to be kept closed and the lead to be kept open, as above provided.

"SECTION 8.

"All salmon trap nets shall be limited to a total length of 2,500 feet, with an end passageway of at least 600 feet between one trap net and the next in linear series, such distances being measured in continuation of the line of direction of the leader of such trap net, but in no instance shall more than two-thirds of the width of any passageway at any point be closed by trap nets. There shall also be a lateral distance of at least 2,400 feet between one trap net and the next.

"SECTION 9.

"A salmon purse seine shall not exceed 1,900 linear feet in length, including the lead and attachment, measured on the cork line when wet.

"SECTION 10.

"(a) No purse seine shall be cast or placed in the water for fishing purposes within 2,400 feet of any trap net.

"(b) The use of purse seines for the capture of sockeye salmon shall be confined to the treaty waters southward and westward of a straight line drawn from the lighthouse on Trail Island, British Columbia, to the northwest point of Whidbey Island, State of Washington.

"SECTION 11.

"A salmon drift net shall not exceed 900 linear feet in length, and the vertical breadth thereof shall not exceed 60 meshes, and the size of the mesh shall not be less than 5¾ inches, extension measure, when in use."

FEDERAL BOARD FOR VOCATIONAL TRAINING (H. DOC. NO. 615.)

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SMOOT) laid before the Senate a communication from the Federal Board for Vocational Training, transmitting, pursuant to law, a statement showing the travel of officials and employees of the board from Washington to points outside the District of Columbia during the fiscal year 1919, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I present a memorial from the Chamber of Commerce of Sumter County, Ga., with reference to certain routes that are now being operated with Government vessels. The memorial urges that the routes be continued. I move that it be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PHELAN presented a petition of the California Manufacturers' Association, of Oakland, Calif., praying for a revision of the so-called antitrust law, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. NELSON presented a petition of the City Council of Virginia, Minn., praying for the enactment of legislation for the suppression of sedition and the deportation of undesirable aliens, which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

Mr. CAPPER presented a memorial of Local Lodge No. 204, Anti Horse Thief Association, of Fontana, Kans., remonstrating against compulsory military training, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

AMERICAN MINING CONGRESS (S. DOC. NO. 180).

Mr. MOSES, from the Committee on Printing, to which the subject was referred, reported the following resolution (S. Res. 281), and it was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to:

Resolved, That the resolution introduced and passed by the American Mining Congress, which recently met in St. Louis, together with an address in support of it before the Federal Trade Commission by Hon. George L. Nye, be printed as a public document.

NATIONAL FOREST RESERVATION COMMISSION (S. DOC. NO. 179).

Mr. MOSES, from the Committee on Printing, reported the following resolution (S. Res. 282), which was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to:

Resolved, That the annual report of the National Forest Reservation Commission for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1919, be printed as a public document.

REPORT OF GEN. JOHN J. PERSHING.

Mr. MOSES. From the Committee on Printing I report back House concurrent resolution No. 40 favorably with amendments, and I ask for its present consideration.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the concurrent resolution.

The amendments were, in line 3, to strike out the word "without" and insert in place thereof the word "with"; in lines 3 and 4, to strike out "one hundred thousand" and insert "fifty thousand"; in line 4, to strike out "thirty thousand" and insert "fifteen thousand"; and in line 5, to strike out "seventy thousand" and insert "thirty-five thousand," so as to make the concurrent resolution read:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the final report of Gen. John J. Pershing, Commander in Chief American Expeditionary Forces, be printed as a House document with the accompanying maps and charts, and that 50,000 additional copies be printed, of which 15,000 shall be for the use of the Senate and 35,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives.

Mr. PHELAN. May I inquire what is the document?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The final report of Gen. John J. Pershing, made to the War Department. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The concurrent resolution as amended was agreed to.

NATIONAL ENCAMPMENT, GRAND ARMY OF THE REPUBLIC.

Mr. MOSES. From the Committee on Printing I report back favorably House concurrent resolution No. 41, and I ask for its consideration.

The concurrent resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there shall be printed as a House document 1,500 copies of the journal of the fifty-fourth national encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic for the year 1920, not to exceed $1,700 in cost, with illustrations, 1,000 copies of which shall be for the use of the House and 500 for the use of the Senate.

Mr. KING. I should like to inquire of the Senator from New Hampshire whether this is the usual number of the publications ordered?

Mr. MOSES. I will state that this particular report is one of the publications provided for by statute, and if the Senate is going to be a law-abiding body it will have to print the report.

The concurrent resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. FERNALD:

A bill (S. 3738) abolishing the United States Housing Corporation and other agencies, and authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to sell or otherwise dispose of property acquired or constructed pursuant to the power and authority granted by the act of Congress entitled "An act to authorize the President to provide housing for war needs," approved May 16, 1918, and other acts and parts of acts amendatory thereof, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. SMOOT:

A bill (S. 3739) to correct the military record of Joseph B. Forbes; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. SHERMAN:

A bill (S. 3740) to authorize the extension and widening of Fourteenth Street from Montague Street to its southern terminus south of Dahlia Street, Nicholson Street from Thirteenth Street to Sixteenth Street, Colorado Avenue from Montague Street to Thirteenth Street, Concord Avenue from Sixteenth Street to its western terminus west of Eighth Street west, Thirteenth Street from Nicholson Street to Piney Branch Road, and Piney Branch Road from Thirteenth Street to Blair Road, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. JOHNSON of California:

A bill (S. 3741) to provide for the establishment and maintenance of a forest experiment station in cooperation with the University of California; to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

By Mr. McCORMICK:

A bill (S. 3742) permitting the acceptance of first-class matter for transmission in the mails without postage stamps affixed, under certain conditions; to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

THE COMMITTEE ON INTERSTATE COMMERCE.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 283), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Interstate Commerce, or any subcommittee thereof, acting under the resolution of the Senate (S. Res. 126) agreed to August 15, 1919, be, and hereby is, authorized to employ counsel and accountants, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

CONDITION OF THE NATIONAL BANKS.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I ask to have printed in the RECORD a very brief statement of the condition of the national banks on January 1, 1920.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NATIONAL BANKS EARN A BILLION DOLLARS IN 1919—RESOURCES SHOW GREATER INCREASE IN PAST SIX YEARS THAN IN ENTIRE PERIOD FROM 1863 TO 1913—EXACTLY 8,000 BANKS NOW UNDER COMPTROLLER'S SUPERVISION—NO FAILURE INVOLVING LOSS TO ANY DEPOSITOR IN LAST FISCAL YEAR.

"The number of banking institutions under the supervision of this office at the close of business to-day is exactly 8,000, including 7,948 national banks in the United States, Alaska, and Hawaii, and 52 savings banks, building and loan companies, and trust companies in the District of Columbia. There have been chartered under the present administration, or since March 4, 1913, more than 1,000 new national banks.

"The year which is just closing has been for the national banks of the country the most successful in their history. The resources and deposits of these banks have shown unprecedented growth. On the date of the November 17, 1919, call, the compilation of which is not yet completed, national bank resources approximated $22,500,000,000—nearly $1,000,000,000 more than ever before reported.

"These banks have grown more in the past six years, or say from August 9, 1913, to November 17, 1919, than they did in the entire 50-year period from the inauguration of the national banking system in 1863 up to 1913.

"The increases in deposits and total assets are scattered widely throughout the country. The increase in resources of the 'country' banks, those national banks outside of the reserve cities since June 30 last, has been close to $800,000,000. The 'country' banks of Texas alone have increased in the past six months $134,000,000, or 34 per cent, and in North Carolina the increase in these six months has been over $51,000,000, or 38 per cent.

"The record for immunity from failure for the 22 months from January 1, 1918, to the close of the last fiscal year, October 31, 1919, was 30 times, or 3,000 per cent, better than the record for the 40 years prior to 1914. There was no failure involving a dollar's loss to depositors of any national bank in the fiscal year closing October 31, 1919.

"The earnings of the national banks for the past year have also exceeded all previous records and will approximate a billion dollars gross, and not far from $300,000,000 net.

"The record furnishes added testimony to the high efficiency and invaluable aid of the Federal Reserve System to the country's commerce, industry, agriculture, and business of every kind."

THE LEAGUE OF NATIONS.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I ask to have printed in the RECORD a letter to the London Times by W. Alison Phillips, the historian of the treaty of Vienna and that period, a great authority on the subject, relating to the League of Nations. It is a very interesting paper.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the London Times, Dec. 27, 1919.]

THE LEAGUE OF NATIONS—A MUDDLED PROCEDURE.

TRINITY COLLEGE,
Dublin, December 23.

To the EDITOR OF THE TIMES.

SIR: The great authority of Sir Thomas Holland needs no reinforcing, but perhaps I may be allowed to express my agreement with the views on the peace treaty put forward by him in your issue of the 18th instant. Lord Robert Cecil assumes that his proposal involves the destruction of the alliance and of that international organization for the regulation of labor questions, which has already done valuable work. But Sir Thomas Holland does not propose their destruction; he only suggests that those portions of the treaty dealing with questions of international organization should be subtracted from it and made the subject of further discussion, the results to be embodied in a new treaty or treaties.

That the League of Nations needs further discussion is hardly open to question. The covenant was originally drawn up by Gen Smuts "in a hurry" and was adopted by the conference after less than a fortnight's committee work, almost without alteration and under the false impression that it represented the views of the most powerful prospective member of the league—the American Nation. The net result of this precipitate action has been that the organs of the alliance at Paris have been atrophied, and that the world's agony is being prolonged pending the outcome of the struggle between President Wilson and the representatives of the majority of the American people—a struggle which involves the whole long-contested question as to where under the American Constitution the ultimate control of foreign policy resides. In the whole history of the world there has surely never been a more disastrous illustration of the danger of mixing up speculative experiment with practical policy.

It would have been better if the Paris conference, which in many respects followed the precedents set by the Congress of Vienna, had in the matter of the treaties also based its action on the precedent of 1815. On November 20, 1815, two treaties were signed at Paris. One, the second treaty of Paris, settled the terms of peace with France. The other, the treaty of alliance, renewed that of Chaumont against France, but with a new article—6—which extended the scope of the alliance to all questions of common interest. This article constituted the nucleus of a league of nations, and it was under its terms that France was herself admitted to the alliance in 1818. But the treaties which formed the basis of the peace settlement, including the final act of Vienna, were kept separate and distinct, and were not even placed under the guaranty of the alliance.

What was the result? The alliance, composed of heterogeneous and mutually antagonistic elements, first cracked and then broke up. But the treaties survived and continued for many years to play a useful part in helping to preserve the peace of Europe. Had they been inextricably interwoven with the "international organization" they would have shared its fate, and Europe would not have enjoyed the long period of peace which the treaties, and the treaties alone, made possible.

The covenant of the league is, in my opinion, a danger to the future peace of the world, or at least no adequate safeguard of its peace, because its "automatic commitments" may, and probably will, on occasion strain the faith of nations to the breaking point. The urgent need of the moment is not an elaborately organized supernational authority, but the settlement as quickly as possible of all outstanding territorial and other questions by which the world's peace is still disturbed, and the continuance of an association of friendly powers strong enough to insure that whoever shall attempt to violate this settlement shall do so at his peril.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,

W. ALISON PHILLIPS.

CESSION OF THRACE TO GREECE.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I apologize for making the inquiry, but may I inquire of the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations if there is any probability of an immediate report from his committee on the resolution dealing with the question of Thrace? If not, I have a resolution lying on the table, and I should like to take it from the table and ask the Senate to express its views upon that matter.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I was not forgetful of the Senator's resolution. We had a meeting of the committee on Wednesday. I had some difficulty in getting a quorum, and it was a very sparse quorum when we got it. I brought that matter up, but the last resolution the Senator introduced has not as yet come to us.

Mr. KING. It is lying on the table.

Mr. LODGE. It was lying on the table, so that we could not deal with it. Although I brought up the matter, I was unable to get the action of the committee on Wednesday. I am in sympathy with the resolution, as the Senator knows.

Mr. KING. I would not want to do anything that might be considered as an act of discourtesy to the Foreign Relations Committee and to the distinguished chairman. I know his sympathetic attitude upon this question. In view of the situation of the peace conference in dealing with this matter, I do think the Senate of the United States ought to express itself, and express itself forcibly, in favor of giving to Greece the entire portion of Thrace except the city of Constantinople. I hope the Senator will be able to have the committee report favorably upon the resolution.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I do not wish to delay the resolution at all. The committee has had the Senator's first resolution before it for some time and has had it up for consideration. There have been objections to it and no action has been taken. If the Senator chooses to discuss the resolution, personally I shall make no objection.

Mr. KING. I should not feel like doing that unless it met with the entire approval of my distinguished friend from Massachusetts; and I should not ask to take it up for discussion unless there was a probability of its being passed.

Mr. LODGE. I shall endeavor to get it up next Wednesday. Of course, the resolution to which the Senator now refers has not come to the committee, so we could not consider it. We can only consider the first resolution. If the Senator wishes to have the resolution now on the table go to the committee, I will call a meeting of the committee for the purpose of considering it.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I move that the resolution which I submitted a few days ago, in which is expressed the view of the Senate that all of Thrace, except the city of Constantinople and the territory lying west of and contiguous to that city, be given to Greece in the peace settlement, be taken from the table and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah moves that Senate resolution 276 be taken from the table and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations. Without objection, that order will be entered.

AMERICANIZATION OF ALIENS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Morning business is closed.

Mr. KENYON and Mr. HARRIS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa.

Mr. KENYON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 3315, being the unfinished business.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask the Senator from Iowa to yield to me, in order that I may ask to take up Senate resolution 247, which was not finished on yesterday, because of the expiration of the morning hour.

Mr. KENYON. I will ask the Senator from Georgia if the resolution for which he now asks consideration is the same resolution which was before the Senate on yesterday?

Mr. HARRIS. It is the same resolution.

Mr. KENYON. So far as I am personally concerned, I should be perfectly willing to yield for the consideration of the resolution, but I think the Senator from Georgia must understand from the proceedings of yesterday that taking up the resolution would simply result in losing the whole morning hour, as there seems to be a determination to debate the resolution until 2 o'clock. Consequently it would be only a waste of time.

Mr. HARRIS. I hope the Senator is mistaken in his view. I think we can finish the resolution within a few minutes.

Mr. KENYON. Another thing I wish to say to the Senator is that his colleague, the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH], is compelled to leave the city this afternoon, and he is desirous of speaking on the bill which is now the unfinished business. That is another reason why the resolution should not be now considered. Would the Senator from Georgia object to deferring his request until later in the afternoon, when the Senator from Georgia shall have completed his speech? Then, so far as I am concerned, I shall offer no objection to the resolution.

Mr. HARRIS. I shall be very glad to do that, and I hope the Senator will yield later on for that purpose.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, the resolution of my colleague, of course, went to the calendar on yesterday at 2 o'clock, and it would require a motion to take it from the calendar now, just as it would require a motion to take up a bill. I am glad that my colleague agrees not to make that motion until a little later, for while I do not wish to address myself at any considerable length to the bill which is the unfinished business, I wish a few moments to discuss it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Iowa to proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 3315, being the unfinished business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3315) to promote Americanization by providing for cooperation with the several States in the education of non-English-speaking persons and the assimilation of foreign-born residents, and for other purposes.

Friday, January 16, 1920.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I desire to present to the Senate as briefly as I can the bill which is now the unfinished business. I was instructed by the Committee on Education and Labor unanimously to report the bill. In my judgment it is one of the most important bills the Senate will have to consider, but that does not mean that I think the Senate will give it very much attention.

We have just passed the water-power bill, which is in a way a conservation measure to conserve the water power of the United States. The pending measure is likewise a conservation measure to conserve the human power of the United States. Its ultimate purpose is to assist in eliminating illiteracy in the country. Every illiterate man and woman is really an undeveloped resource of the Nation.

I appreciate that objections will be raised to the bill. First, the argument that we hear so much in the Chamber that State responsibilities are breaking down, that the Government is trying to do too much, and that matters of this kind should be left to the States. We hear that argument on nearly every bill that is presented.

Secondly, that this is no time to expend this much money. Before Senators make up their minds about the expenditure of moneys provided for in the bill, I desire to say to them that in talking with those who will be responsible for the work of Americanization, notably the Secretary of the Interior, I have suggested that it would be impossible, I thought, to secure an appropriation of the size contemplated by the bill. I think he is quite ready with his assistants to undertake the work on less than the amount set forth in the bill. Speaking for myself,

I shall raise no objection to an amendment cutting in two the appropriation, though I believe that I can demonstrate to the Senate the necessity for the entire amount. At a time when we are spending or preparing to spend $1,500,000,000 on the Army and Navy, it would seem that the Government might undertake to spend $12,500,000 a year for a limited number of years on education of illiterates.

I think it is fundamental that the greatest enemy of democracy is ignorance, and our best work for democracy is to try to get rid of illiteracy and of ignorance. But I am going to raise no objection to cutting the appropriation asked for in the bill. I think we have reached the point where we should cut every dollar that we can from the national expenditures, without injuring the real work that we should do.

I think it is economy, if the foundation of a building is falling down and a man has no money, to borrow the money to replace the foundation, or if the buildings on a farm need painting, to borrow the money to repaint them. That is not extravagance. That is merely common sense. I join with those who insist on keeping down the expenses of the Government. All of us are apt to feel that the particular bill in which we are interested is the particular one on which money should be expended and that we need not practice economy upon that. I confess to a feeling of that kind about the pending bill.

We are spending in this country for education in our public schools and colleges—public institutions, not private—a little under $900,000,000 a year. I will give the figures that the Government is spending. They are very small. The appropriation for the Department of Education has been ridiculous in such a Nation as this.

Some say we can not afford it. We can not afford not to educate aliens who are coming into our country and to help educate, in cooperation with the States, the illiterates in the various States. It is not a State problem more than it is a national problem.

The genesis of the bill is this: A bill was introduced in somewhat similar form by the distinguished Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] at the last session. It was reported out of the committee. It was along the line of all the splendid bills which he introduced on educational lines. There are so many of the Smith bills that it is almost impossible to enumerate them. When the good and genial Senator from Georgia has passed to his reward, which I hope may be a long, long time in the future, and his real praises then commence to be sung for what he has done for education, it would require a very large tombstone to have inscribed upon it the names of the different bills that he has introduced and which he has secured the passage of along educational lines. He will probably get his reward in another world if not in this.

There were pending before the Committee on Education and Labor bills known as the Smith-Towner bill and the Smith-Bankhead bill. We had had the Smith-Lever bill and the Smith-Hughes bill. The Smith-Towner bill provided a great plan of education involving the appropriation of $100,000,000 a year. It also carried within it a program for Americanization. The figures $100,000,000 a year were staggering, and the committee felt, while I think most of the members were kindly disposed to the bill, that there was no use of bringing in such a great plan of national education at this time in view of the condition of the public finances; but all were of the opinion that the question of Americanization should be treated by this Congress.

Mr. NORRIS. May I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. KENYON. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. I am very much interested in what the Senator is saying, and also in the bill which he is discussing. I understand that the bill to which he is now speaking is to apply to two classes of people; one the class which is known as the illiterate, who may be Americans, and the other class those who can not speak, read, or write the English language. Am I right?

Mr. KENYON. Yes; practically so. It applies to those who are unable to understand, speak, read, or write the English language; the illiterate and the non-English speaking class—put it in that way.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes. I think that puts it properly. Now, they are treated just the same all the way through the bill, are they?

Mr. KENYON. Yes. I will say to the Senator, however, that there is a distinction in the method of treating the aliens and the citizens.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes. The idea occurred to me that if the bill were rightly called an Americanization measure it, perhaps, ought to be confined to those provisions which deal with those who can not speak or write the English language. It seems to me I can see a difference in permitting the States to carry on their educational program as they see fit, with such assistance as we give them, under their laws, and the Americanization plan of the pending bill. Has the Senator from Iowa any figures which he could give the Senate to indicate the reduction in the appropriation which could be brought about if the bill were confined entirely to the class of people who can speak or write the English language?

Mr. KENYON. What is the Senator's question?

Mr. NORRIS. Can the Senator state what would be the amount involved if the bill were confined to the one class?

Mr. KENYON. Of course, an illiterate can not speak or read or write the English language.

Mr. NORRIS. An illiterate might speak the English language.

Mr. KENYON. That depends on your definition of an illiterate. Then, you would have to add those who can not speak, read, or write the English language to the number of illiterates in order to ascertain the total number. Of course, it would be much less if those two classes were differentiated, for we have five and a half million illiterates in this country and about three million of those who can not read or write the English language.

Mr. NORRIS. The man who can not read or write, but who speaks the English language and is an American citizen, born in this country, is just as much an American, probably, and may be just as patriotic, as is the man who is finely educated; but the man who comes from a foreign country and can not speak or read the English language, even though he be educated in his own language, has not fully reached the attainment that an American citizen ought to have. The one class of people, it occurred to me, might be treated by the States and the other class be treated as a national problem. It seems to me there is a difference between the two; and, under existing circumstances, the idea occurred to me that so long as we are hard up for money it might be well to confine our efforts, at least at the present time, to the class of people provided for in the bill who can neither speak, read, nor write the English language.

Mr. KENYON. I believe an illiterate, whether he be one born in this country or one coming from a foreign country, deserves the attention of the States or of the Federal Government. There may be more harm in an illiterate coming from a foreign country than there is in an illiterate in this country, but I doubt it.

I desire to say here that the teaching of the English language, or the speaking of the English language, does not make an American out of a person; that is not all there is to Americanization. That is simply a step toward getting a nation of 110,000,000 people to act and think without a foreign accent.

Mr. NORRIS. But it is an important step.

Mr. KENYON. Yes. Some of the most dangerous men to this Nation are splendidly educated, but may have no idea of what America means and no comprehension of American ideals, while some poor ignorant person, who can not speak the language at all, may understand the great purposes and objects of a Government such as this; but, generally speaking, the illiterate is the fertile field for every kind of propaganda against the Government. The exception proves the rule.

Mr. McCORMICK. I desire to ask the Senator if he does not think the problem to which he has just adverted is one for the Committee on Immigration rather than for the committee of which he is chairman?

Mr. KENYON. I think that may be so.

Mr. McCORMICK. If we import educated anarchists into this country, Americanization in any such form as is contemplated by the pending bill will not cure them.

Mr. KENYON. No; and deporting them will not cure them, either, I will say to the Senator, though they ought to be deported. You can deport anarchists; you can deport the Goldman's and the Berkman's; but you can not deport their ideas. While I am heartily in favor of deporting them, I am in favor of meeting bolshevik ideas with education. Let them know what the ideals of our country are and set them off against bolshevism; and so with anarchy.

Mr. COLT. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator what he means by the fundamental ideals of America as distinguished from the fundamental ideals of Italy or Greece or other nations of Europe governed by liberal institutions?

Mr. KENYON. I shall be very glad to answer the Senator's question.

Mr. COLT. Are not the fundamental ideals which lie at the foundation of western civilization rational law and orderly liberty, and do not the men who come from Italy or Greece come with the fundamental ideals of American society or government? Does the Senator think that the mere acquisition of the English language, while it may have a tendency to impress upon them American ideals, is an essential thing to nationality? Does the Senator believe that nationality is based upon language or religion or race or territorial boundaries?

Does he not think that nationality has something deeper than these; that it is based upon affinity; that it is based upon the attraction which a group of men have for one another, which may be due in part to the things which I have mentioned, but which is also encouraged by kind treatment, by opportunity, by breathing the very atmosphere of freedom, and that language, which may be important, as I have stated, is not the essential thing? I rose to ask the Senator this question. I notice that this bill provides that the States by penalty shall oblige aliens and illiterates to learn the English language. What does the Senator understand is the meaning of the word "penalty" there?

Mr. KENYON. The Senator has asked me a number of questions. I tried to count them, and I think they aggregate about 18. Which one does he desire me to answer?

Mr. COLT. I rose to ask the Senator whether he means by "penalty" force of some kind?

Mr. KENYON. I mean compulsory education as it is now applied in the States which have compulsory educational laws.

Mr. COLT. Does the Senator leave it to each State?

Mr. KENYON. The Senator, I presume, understands the philosophy of this bill. It is framed according to the plan of the vocational education bill, involving stimulation of State educational activities by the Federal Government. The Federal Government can not reach over and tell the States how they shall conduct their affairs, but it can say, "We appropriate to you for the purposes of education certain amounts of money, provided you formulate a plan such as may be agreeable, for instance, to the Secretary of the Interior. He will pass upon it. If you do not do that, then you shall have none of this appropriation. You do not have to do it; you can go ahead in your own way; but if you want this stimulation from the Federal Government, as in the case of the vocational education bill, you must do these things." One of those things is to provide for the compulsory teaching of English 200 hours per year to citizens from 16 to 21 and aliens up to 45.

Mr. COLT. Does that mean that the alien would be obliged to devote 200 hours a year to the study of English?

Mr. KENYON. It does.

Mr. COLT. Whether he is educated or not?

Mr. KENYON. Whether he is educated or not; yes; until he completes a course which may be laid down by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. COLT. Does the Senator realize that he is dealing with great classes of people?

Mr. KENYON. Exactly; that is one trouble in this country, namely, that great classes of people come into America; live their own lives; have their own schools, their own communities, and constitute little Austrias, little Hungarys, little Sérbias, and so forth, right in this country. We pay no attention to them. We have thought that our schools solved all these questions, and we do not even extend a kind hand to them; we pay no attention to them; and then when anarchy and bolshevism come among them we find fault. We are to blame ourselves; in many instances we have not given them a square deal.

That is the very thing we are endeavoring to get rid of—little foreign nations in this country, or, as Roosevelt described it, "a polyglot boarding house."

Now, I have answered that question. I should like to go back and try to answer some of the others.

Mr. COLT. I should like to ask the Senator, in view of what happened when the war broke out and we saw such an exhibition of patriotism as no other nation showed, and we had 37 or 38 different nationalities here, whether he believes that what he calls "little Italy" or "little Austria" is very harmful to our body politic in any way?

Mr. KENYON. Well, Mr. President, I can not be put into a position and this bill can not be put into a position of opposition to foreign-born people. I watched these regiments march away in the war—the boy from the German home, the boy from the Polish home, and the boy from the Irish home, marching in one step and under one flag; we watched them cross the sea, we watched them as they gave their lives in the trenches, and they are sleeping now on the fields of France. Brave boys they were. No; nobody can put this bill in a position of opposition to those people. We do not have to go back very far ourselves to all be foreigners. This is not aimed against foreigners. It is to help them understand what the ideals of America are—give them greater opportunity.

Does the Senator, whose judgment I value so highly, know that of the first million and a half of draftees in the Army, when a simple test was made as to whether they could read an order in English or write a letter home, of that million and a half there were 386,000 who could not do it? That was 24 per cent. One out of every four of those splendid boys could not read a common order in English or write a letter home.

The Senator may have seen in Washington the all-American regiment that paraded here. When those boys went into the war they were of all nationalities. They could not read or speak English, any of them, and this regiment was gathered together as an exhibition of what could be done in the way of teaching English, and they could all speak and write English. Now, there was not a list of honor—and we have seen them all over this country—of the boys who were killed in this war that was not full of foreign names, and they did noble service. There is no question about that; and while I do not think the Senator intends to do it, I will not permit this bill to get in a position of antagonism to our foreign-born. There is no such intention. I do say that language has something to do with national solidarity, and that a nation that speaks one language has more solidarity than a nation that speaks many languages. In some of the camps of the war orders were given in over 20 different languages.

Mr. COLT. Mr. President——

Mr. KENYON. The Senator asks me a great many questions, but I am glad to have him do so. I have no pride of opinion in this matter.

Mr. COLT. May I say that I think the Senator overestimates the effect of a common language?

Mr. KENYON. It may be.

Mr. COLT. I admit that it is an important element of nationality; but I should like to ask the Senator whether Belgium did not exhibit the highest form of patriotism, and whether he does not know, as a matter of fact, that in Belgium three languages are spoken—the Flemish, the German, and the French?

Mr. KENYON. I do.

Mr. COLT. Probably to-day there is no more united nationality than Switzerland, yet part of its cantons speak German, part Italian, and part French.

Now, I believe in the general provisions of this bill and in its object. According to my present light, however, I would hesitate to enforce nationality through this provision of compulsion. It seems to me to be antagonistic to the undertaking of bringing the aliens into the true spirit of nationality to force them, by a penalty, to study English. I realize how Germany for years tried to force the German language upon Poland, with the result that it only intensified the spirit of Polish nationality. I believe the true way to create the spirit of nationality is through liberty and opportunity, and I think the Great War has proved this in the case of America; as I have already stated, I am in favor of the general principles of this bill; I only hesitate at this particular provision. I will support any statute that seeks to make true Americans of our alien population along the lines of education, along the lines of equal opportunity, and along the lines of liberty.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I take it that the Senator does not find fault with those portions of the bill that may be called persuasive instead of compulsory.

Mr. COLT. I thank the Senator for using the right word.

Mr. KENYON. I anticipated that there would be some objection, of course, to that feature of the bill which sought to induce the States to pass laws that would be compulsory as to the teaching of the English language.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. KENYON. Certainly.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I am not quite prepared to say as yet whether or not I will favor this bill. I will say, however, and I hope the Senator will go into that discussion, that my objection to it at first blush is that it practically turns over the educational institutions of the several States to a bureau established here at Washington—that is, the Bureau of Education—and I am frank to say that I have not much confidence in that bureau. Of course there is very little said about the duties of the Bureau of Education, but there is a bait held out to the States in the form of a very large appropriation to each of the States which enacts certain legislation; but, in the last analysis, it seems to me that it practically transfers the educational systems of the several States over to this bureau. Possibly the Senator would reply that it only affects the illiterates, but I say that it will affect the whole educational systems of the different States.

Mr. KENYON. The Senator is mistaken about turning it over to the Bureau of Education. This bill does not seek to regulate the States in their systems of education. It is only if they desire to profit by the appropriation that they shall adopt, as to this illiteracy, such courses as the Secretary of the Interior may approve. They do not have to do it at all. It is true that that is carried on under the Commissioner of Education.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President——

Mr. KENYON. I yield.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. May I suggest that all of the pertinent and direct questions that have been asked have been discussed in the committee, and I think the Senator from Iowa will be in a better position to present the bill if he is given an opportunity to analyze it to the Senate first, and then have the questions propounded to him, because from what I know has taken place in the committee I fear that he will be repeating himself as the questions are put to him from time to time. Is not that so?

Mr. KENYON. I thank the Senator for the suggestion, but I want to say that I rather welcome these questions, and I think there is good in discussing these matters as we go along.

The Senator from Rhode Island asks, "What is Americanization? Is it teaching one language?" I say, "No." I think the man who gets 2,000 per cent profit in the coal business, as a distinguished ex-Cabinet officer has charged, needs Americanization. Americanization is getting into the foreigner who comes here the soul and purpose of America. I go further than the Senator as to what Americanization means, as to equal justice. It means the doctrine of equal opportunity, and to get that into these people, and let them know what chances there are for their children. I do not agree with the Senator that they come here always with kindly ideals about this Government. Some of them come with exactly the opposite views. They have been oppressed in their country; they have the idea of government that it is oppression; and when they come here they never have a chance to learn anything different. They get into these communities by themselves, so they grow up hating the Government, and you can not wonder at it.

How many hundreds of speakers do you suppose are going through this country to-day talking the doctrine of the "reds," and talking bolshevism and the soviet republic, and how many papers do you suppose are printing it in foreign languages; and how many are meeting it out through the country with lectures in their own language, or friendly talks in their own language, or visiting their homes and talking it over with them, or getting pamphlets to them? Hardly any. The ratio would be vastly more than 16 to 1 against those talking for Americanism.

Further, the statistics show that among those employed in mines and factories who can not speak the English language the injuries, the accidents, the deaths, are vastly more than where they can speak the English language. We saw, in the steel mills, safety signs printed in seven or eight different languages. The Bureau of Mines had a report some time ago showing the difference in the accidents in the mines of this country among those where the English language was spoken and where they did not understand it, and the figures were rather significant; it is estimated that 150,000 lives would be saved annually in this country, simply from accidents, if the men who were working could all understand the language of the country.

There are in this country five and a half million illiterates. I have had some charts prepared to show this situation. I take as the basis all those 10 years of age and over, and the census of 1910. We have no complete census since that time, nor any statistics that can be relied upon. At that time there were 5,502,351 illiterates who could not read or write any language. There were 3,089,723 non-English speaking persons who could read and write some other language, making a total of illiterates and non-English speaking people of 8,592,074 out of our population.

I do not believe the Senator from Rhode Island can believe that to be a good thing. That would be enough to populate the 18 States shown on this chart, or enough to populate these 14 States in 1910. I have no invidious distinctions to draw about these States. They are just arranged to come as near those figures as possible, to show the situation in regard to illiteracy in this country. I think I will read from the record the names of the 18 States to which I have referred: Nevada, Wyoming, Delaware, Arizona, Idaho, New Mexico, Vermont, Utah, Montana, New Hampshire, Rhode Island, North Dakota, South Dakota, Oregon, Maine, Florida, Colorado, and Connecticut.

I wish I might put those charts in the RECORD, but I do not see exactly how it can be done.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that a chart of that kind he can put in the RECORD.

Mr. KENYON. By photographing it?

Mr. SMOOT. We will put it in, not as a photograph, but we will just simply cut a plate for it and put it in just the same as we do the reading matter. There are no colors.

Mr. KENYON. I ask, then, that that particular chart, which I will call No. 1, be inserted in the RECORD. I will not ask to have all these charts put in.

Mr. SMOOT. I would like to have the Senator not only put that chart in the RECORD, but I would like to have him put the other charts in; that is, the charts upon which there are figures. But I do not know as to the map.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Those two sets of tables can be put in, with the names of the States, without any difficulty.

Mr. SMOOT. I was going to say there is no particular information given by the map.

Mr. KENYON. No; I present it more as a picture.

Mr. SMOOT. I hope the Senator will ask that the tables may be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. KENYON. I will. This map is meant as a picture, in order to try to impress my good friend from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT].

There were 14 of the great States of the Union in 1910 whose population equaled the population of the illiterate non-English speaking people of this country.

Then, when you come to the apportionment, I have a chart giving the number of illiterates among the non-English speaking people in each State for 1910. I will ask to insert those figures in the RECORD.

Then I have a chart showing the percentage of population 10 years of age and over in 1910 illiterate or unable to speak the English language. The figures are the same for Kansas and Iowa, the lowest per cent, but for reasons which need not be explained, Iowa was put first. It might have been more polite to put Kansas first. The figure for Iowa is 4 per cent; for Nebraska, 6 per cent; for Utah, 7 per cent; for California, 9 per cent; and the highest is in Arizona, which has 45 per cent, accountable, I suppose, to the large number of Mexicans and Spanish there who do not speak our language.

This next chart is rather interesting. It is estimated that in 1880 we had 3,150,000 illiterate Negroes. That has been rather coming down. In 1890 there were 3,042,668, and in 1900 there were 2,853,194. The line shoots down then rather rapidly, and in 1910 there were 2,227,731, and in 1915 there were 1,914,949.

In 1880 there were 2,255,460 native whites. That has been coming down, until in 1915 it was only 1,244,603.

The significant thing is that while the Negro illiteracy has come down and the native white illiteracy has come down, the foreign-born illiteracy has gone up very markedly. In 1880 we had 763,620 foreign-born white illiterates. The figure in 1890 had increased to over a million. In 1900 there were 1,200,000. About 1908 it crossed the native white line on its ascending progress, the figure being 1,650,000, until in 1915 it reached the figure of 2,461,000, approximately.

So that the problem as to the foreign-born white is and has been becoming more acute than as to the native born, either white or Negro.

This next chart shows that from 1900 to 1914 the immigrants coming to this country totaled 13,377,087. Those over 14 years of age numbered 11,726,006, while the illiterates over 14 years of age were 3,116,182, or a ratio of illiterates to the number over 14 was 26.55 per cent.

Southern Italy produced the largest number in the era from 1900 to 1905, the figures being 334,482. From 1905 to 1909 there were 458,415. From 1910 to 1914 there were 415,806, or a total of 1,208,763. So the line runs down.

I think it would be rather interesting to have that chart in the RECORD, and I ask unanimous consent that that chart be placed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[1] Than those named in this list.

Mr. KENYON. It may be that gentlemen may figure that there is no danger whatever to a Republic in a great mass of illiterate citizens, reaching to the figures of eight and one-half millions; and I have no question, if we take the Army statistics as a basis, that the illiteracy now runs up to thirteen or fourteen millions. The figures of the Army were the startling things to everybody.

I want to refer to the report of Secretary Lane on the subject. I am sorry that Secretary Lane is going to leave the Cabinet. I think if there ever was a high-minded public official, devoted to the interests of his country and, beyond that, to the interests of humanity, it is Secretary Lane. If he had been born in this country the Democrats would not have so much trouble about a presidential candidate. It is a distressing problem for them now, I know.

No man has given as much attention to this problem of Americanization as has Secretary Lane. He brought to Washington a short time ago the leading movie-picture men of the United States. We had a meeting before the committee, with the most interesting testimony I have heard. He has enlisted them in this cause. They are going into these foreign communities with stories on the moving-picture screens that will appeal to these people, showing them what American history means in language that they can understand, pithy American statements thrown on the screen which will reach 17,000,000 people a day in this country.

We had a wonderful spirit of concord in this country during the war. All were pulling together. There was not this unrest. But when the war ceased we seemed to have slipped loose from our moorings. National morale seemed almost destroyed. We got discord everywhere instead of concord—strikes, unrest, dissatisfaction. If we could only get back to the spirit of pulling together in this country!

Speaking of this Americanization question, he says in his report of 1918:

> The vitality of this question was put strongly to the Nation during the past year in a form that was not altogether agreeable, for the draft revealed the astonishing percentage of those in this country who were unable to speak our language or to read or write any language. Yet, I take it, there is no one thing so supremely essential in a government such as ours, where decisions of such importance must be made by public opinion, as that every man and woman and child shall know one tongue—that each may speak to every other and that all shall be informed.
> There can be neither national unity in ideals or in purpose unless there is some common method of communication through which may be conveyed the thought of the Nation. All Americans must be taught to read and write and think in one language; this is a primary condition to that growth which all nations expect of us and which we demand of ourselves.
>
> What should be said of a world-leading democracy wherein 10 per cent of the adult population can not read the laws which they are presumed to know?
> What should be said of a democracy which sends an army to preach democracy wherein there was drafted out of the first 2,000,000 men a total of 200,000 men who could not read their orders or understand them when delivered, or read the letters sent them from home?
>
> What should be said of a democracy which calls upon its citizens to consider the wisdom of forming a league of nations, of passing judgment upon a code which will insure the freedom of the seas, or of sacrificing the daily stint of wheat or meat for the benefit of the Roumanians or the Jugo-Slavs when 18 per cent of the coming citizens of that democracy do not go to school?
> What should be said of a democracy in which one of its sovereign States expends a grand total of $6 per year per child for sustaining its public-school system?
> What should be said of a democracy which is challenged by the world to prove the superiority of its system of government over those discarded, and yet is compelled to reach many millions of its people through papers printed in some foreign language?

I may say, parenthetically, that there are now in the city of New York, I am informed on most reliable authority, over 30 papers printed in foreign languages advocating sedition in this country. That is not in the Secretary's report. He continues:

> What should be said of a democracy which expends in a year twice as much for chewing gum as for schoolbooks, more for automobiles than for all primary and secondary education, and in which the average teacher's salary is less than that of the average day laborer?

May I parenthetically say that last year, of over 650,000 school teachers in this country, 143,000 left the profession. If this goes on, with the poor wages we pay school teachers, we will not have any left in a few years. One of the objects of this bill is to prepare school teachers and help to put them in this kind of work. A school teacher can get more for running an elevator than for teaching school. Pursuing Secretary Lane's report further, he says:

> What should be said of a democracy which permits tens of thousands of its native-born children to be taught American history in a foreign language—the Declaration of Independence and Lincoln's Gettysburg speech in German and other tongues?
> What should be said of a democracy which permits men and women to work in masses where they seldom or never hear a word of English spoken?
> Yet, this is all true of the United States of America in this year of grace 1918, wherein was fought the second Battle of the Marne and the Battle of the Argonne Forest.

Some States, some communities are spending more to teach foreign languages to Americans than to teach English to foreigners. At a meeting of the Americanization—I can hardly call it a society—but at an Americanization meeting in Washington a short time ago, it was discovered that in many schools they were teaching Washington's Farewell Address and Lincoln's Gettysburg speech in foreign languages, and that children were coming out of the schools without any knowledge of English.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator a question for my own information. I notice on page 3 of the bill where the age limit of the citizen is between 16 and 21 years, while on the other page the age limit of the foreigner is between 16 and 45 years. Why does the Senator make the distinction in the ages? I do not know what the object of it can be, and I merely ask that I may have light on it. In other words, the younger element of our population have already been to school when they reach 16 to 21 years of age. Down in my section of the country a great many people over 25 years of age can neither read nor write, and wonderful work is being done down there in the matter of adult schools. I do not understand the distinction which is apparently made in these ages.

Mr. KENYON. It is true that a great percentage of the illiteracy is among those over 20 years of age. The original bill, as presented by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH], did not make that distinction. I think it was thought by the committee that there was some question as to going above 21 years of age with citizens in the matter of compulsory education, but that Congress had the right to do whatever we desired as to aliens, provided we did not violate any treaty obligations. That is a question I am going to discuss after a while, because it is rather an acute question whether we can do that.

Mr. DIAL. Of course, a compulsory-education law would not apply to persons over 21 years of age in any places where they have compulsory-education laws.

Mr. KENYON. That was the idea, and that compulsion could apply to aliens. That raises the question whether we can treat the alien differently from the citizen.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I came in just as the Senator was referring to the teachers and their wages. I wonder if the Senator gave the average wage of the 400,000 school-teachers in the United States, which is disgracefully low?

Mr. KENYON. No; I did not.

Mr. CURTIS. I will state to the Senator that I had occasion to look up that matter a few days ago in a hearing before our committee, and found that the average wage was $543 per annum. In 25 States the average teacher's wage was below $543 per annum and in 23 States the average was below $300 a year.

Mr. KENYON. I think the figures are rather shocking.

Mr. CURTIS. Indeed they are shocking.

Mr. KENYON. It is a deplorable fact that we are turning over the whole coming generation to these teachers, expecting them to do the greatest work that can be done in the molding of the children of the country and yet not giving them a living wage.

I desire to call attention in this connection to some of the testimony of Mr. Herbert Kaufman before our committee. The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT] talked about the melting pot; that we are the great melting pot. So we are, but the pot is not going to do any melting if there is no fuel under it, and education is the fuel.

On page 18 of the hearings Mr. Kaufman said:

The melting pot calls for watchful care when we find that 94.3 per cent of Mexicans, 96.4 per cent of Bulgarians, 95 per cent of Roumanians, 92 per cent of Greeks, 95 per cent of Croatians, 76 per cent of Armenians, 67 per cent of Austrians employed by the concerns in question are not subjects of the flag.

That had reference to a number of industrial concerns to which he had written to ascertain the connection between illiteracy and their turnover. I think I have put these figures in, but I will state that of the 5,000,000 illiterates in 1910, 3,184,633 were white persons—practically 60 per cent. Of these, 28 per cent were native born, 30 per cent foreign born, and 40 per cent were negroes. The remaining 2 per cent were Indians, Chinese, Japanese, and others.

Of the total number of illiterates, 1,768,132 lived in urban communities and 3,748,031 in rural communities, small towns, villages, and the open country. Nearly one-half of the illiterate population—48.1 per cent—are between 20 and 45 years of age and can be taught to read and write without difficulty if an effort is made to reach them through their various occupations. Only those under 20 years of age, amounting to 16 per cent, can be reached by schools under any present law of compulsory attendance. I said before, I think, that illiteracy is one of the causes of the industrial unrest in this country. Immigrant illiteracy is a matter of concern to the United States. We can not understand the difficulties that arise from it, but it is a constant influence for evil.

Figures have been given on the charts of 8,500,000 people who are illiterate in the language of this country. That is more than the population of the Dominion of Canada; more than the population of the South at the time of the Civil War; more than all of the people living in 1910 in our three greatest cities, New York, Philadelphia, and Chicago; more than all the people living in 1910 in all the cities of the United States west of the Mississippi River except one; more than all the children of school age in 32 of our 48 States.

It may be that anybody who thinks there is a cause of national concern in the matter is unduly alarmed. I am not hysterical about the subject. I am simply presenting it, as I believe that national solidarity is dependent to a considerable extent upon one language. The instance of Poland is not in point. There was an oppressed people and an effort being made to force upon them the language of a conquering country. Here are aliens who come into our country. The door is open wide to them for their own benefit. We say to them, "If you are to enjoy the privileges and the opportunities of America, you must take some of the responsibilities of America and you must become able to think and to talk in our language."

I have referred to the fact that in some of the camps of the country orders had to be given in over 20 languages. I want to refer to the industrial situation as affecting that——

Mr. CURTIS. Before the Senator leaves that point let me ask him if he has referred to the fact that in one of the reports of the War Department it was stated that these aliens had been able within three months by proper instruction to receive orders—oral orders and written orders?

Mr. KENYON. I thank the Senator. I did not specify the time. I did refer to the fact that they had received instructions in English and had made wonderful progress.

Mr. CURTIS. The evidence before our committee showed that in three months many of them were able to receive orders in English.

Mr. KENYON. They have systems now of teaching English by objects, which I am told by the Department of Education are most successful. They have used the system with foreign classes in the mills and in the factories. They do not and you do not want "prissy" school-teachers out teaching these people. You have to get people who will teach them something besides just reading and writing and arithmetic, and through this system they do it. I had a very interesting illustration of that a short time ago showing how they do. The teacher announces to the class in the mill, "I rise from my chair," and gets up. They all say that. "I put on my hat"; and they say that. "I walk to the door"; and they say that. He does all these things as he says them. "I open the door"; and they all say that. Then he comes back and repeats them. The gentleman who had been giving instructions told me that inside of 35 or 40 lessons those foreigners had quite a little vocabulary of English just as a result of that simple way of learning the language. To just sit down with a book and try to drill it into them is not a successful method.

Former Gov. Brumbaugh, of Pennsylvania, was in my office to-day. He was, I think, the first superintendent of public instruction in Porto Rico. He said they oftentimes got the language into them through the medium of baseball games and sports of that kind. They have made wonderful progress in Porto Rico and in the Philippine Islands.

In these industries we have put the very heart of industrial America into the hands of the foreign born, most of whom are not citizens of the United States. When we were up at Pittsburgh and out at the little town of Clarenton, the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR] and I talked with a lot of the strikers. There must have been 150 of them, practically all foreigners. We tried to get them to understand the question, "How many of you are citizens of the United States?" That was translated around. There were only 3 in that group of 150 strikers who were citizens of the United States.

When we asked how many had bought Liberty bonds and war savings stamps every hand went up. When we questioned some of them as to whether they desired to attend school some of the brightest little fellows I have even seen, some splendid raw material for citizenship, said "Yes," but they could not work 10 or 12 hours a day in the steel mills and then attend night school, but they wanted to learn English.

We asked one bright little fellow how his country was governed. He said by a king. "How does it differ from this country?" "I do not know." "Do you not know how this country is governed?" He said, "My country is governed by a king, and this country is governed by a superintendent." He had nothing in his head but superintendent—the superintendent of the works. That is all he came in contact with and all he saw, and he thought it was the Government of the United States. I say that little chap—Piso, I think his name was—surrounded by the right influences, would make a splendid American citizen. You can not bludgeon these people into being American citizens. You have to win them by affection and by having them understand what America means to them as the land of equal opportunity and justice, affording a chance for their families, better milk for the babies, better living conditions, better chances to play, and all such things resulting in happier lives. They do not get those things from any other source, and they can not get them.

In the iron and steel industries of this country about 58 per cent of the employees are foreign born; in the meat-packing industry 61 per cent are foreign born; in coal mining 62 per cent; in the woolen-goods industry 62 per cent; in cotton goods 69 per cent; in clothing 72 per cent; in oil refining 67 per cent; in sugar refining 85 per cent. We have placed the very heart of American industry in the hands of men who are born in other lands, a small percentage of whom are naturalized and a large percentage of whom are illiterate, subject to insidious propaganda, which we are not organized to combat.

Some of the manufacturing concerns of the country are refusing to employ men who are illiterates. That works badly, I think. It turns them out upon the market; it makes a drug upon the market of labor, and does not operate very well. A small percentage of many of the alien races, to which I referred a moment ago in the testimony of Mr. Kaufman, are becoming naturalized. In 112 different industries 96.5 per cent of the Spanish remain aliens; 95 per cent of the Serbs remain Serbs. I have referred to the Mexicans and the Croatians. Ninety-six and four-tenths per cent of the Bulgarians remain Bulgarians; 92.1 per cent of the Greeks remain Greek, and so forth.

I have also referred to the safety question. Let me be a little more specific as to that. The Federal Director of Mines points out in a recent report that had the percentage of accidents among the foreign born last year been reduced, as among the native born, 930 lives would have been saved, more than 700 serious accidents averted, and an economic loss of over $4,000,000 in the mines alone would have been avoided. That covers but one of our many industries.

It has been estimated by some economic philosopher, who likes to deal in figures, that the average illiterate is worth at least $5 per week less to himself, to his family, to his employer, and to society than the man who can read and write. I do not know just how he arrives at those figures, but I think they are true. I have here some reports of experiments in industries showing where girls who could not speak English, when taught the English language became so much more efficient that their wages were raised to quite a considerable extent. I am going to put that into the RECORD.

If the statement I have quoted is true, then by making literate eight and a half million of these people who can not read and write we would be adding $2,000,000,000 annually to the potential wealth of the country. These people are like great mineral wealth of gold or copper or iron beneath the surface that never has been reached and never has been developed, and they simply need education to develop them, when they will add greatly to our potential national wealth.

Among these millions there is almost constant propaganda going on. They read their own languages; in a way they are organized; they work with enthusiasm. When we permit them to go off by themselves and have their own little communities we can not blame them if they do not absorb our ideas. What do these people know of the opportunities or the life of a Lincoln? It is a closed book to them. From a log cabin to the White House means nothing to them. What do they know of a Garfield rising from the towpath to great position in the world; or of Woodrow Wilson, from an humble Presbyterian parsonage to one of the great figures in the world; or of men in industry coming up from the very lowest to the highest positions? All that is a closed book to them and their children. Are we afraid to spend a little money to try to remedy those conditions and to give these people a fair showing and a fair chance in the race of life? The question is not answered by simply saying that that is a work entirely for the States to do. It is not entirely a State problem.

At this point I want to put into the RECORD an editorial from the Chicago Tribune on this subject. I am sorry the Senator from Illinois has gone out. I also desire to place in the RECORD an extract from that well-edited paper, the Omaha World-Record, which is owned by the distinguished leader upon the other side, the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK]. I will not stop to read these editorials, but they are up to the usual standards of the papers from which they are taken.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PHIPPS in the chair). Without objection, the editorials referred to by the Senator from Iowa will be inserted in the RECORD.

The editorials referred to are as follows:

TEACH AMERICANISM.

[From the Chicago Tribune.]

Deportation, exclusion, and punishment are only negative measures. We must add to them intelligent constructive action. We are suffering now from our neglect of the strangers within our gates. A good deal of radical talk of the exploitation of immigrants is buncombe. The great majority of the millions that have come to us in the last half century have bettered themselves. Much of the worst exploitation has been by their own race. But this is not relevant to our problem. We have not done what we should in common sense have done to teach our immigrants to make use of American opportunities. Instead of assuming they would breathe in Americanism from the air, we owed it to our own interest as well as theirs to protect them from exploitation and provide them with sound, practical instruction in American principles and institutions.

[From the Omaha World-Herald.]

Unfortunately we have those who assail liberty protected by law, do it sometimes violently, and sometimes under cover of law, and do it in the very name of that Americanism they profess to reverence. The bulwarks of our Americanism are free speech, a free press, the freedom of religious worship, the freedom of education, the right of peaceful assemblage, the right of petition, the right to be wise or foolish in our opinions and to express and urge them nevertheless so long as we rely upon reason and not upon lawlessness and violence to carry them into effect. The very spirit of Americanism is faith in the people, and it is expressed in their creation of a government to serve them as distinguished from a government made from above to rule over them. And there can be no true Americanism, as there can be no enduring democracy anywhere, that does not preserve and protect the just rights and liberties of minorities. Whoever loses sight of these basic facts, whoever assails them, on whatever pretext, whether violently or under cover of law, though he may believe he is serving Americanism in doing so, is in truth the assailant of American strength and unity of the ideals that have made us great.

Mr. KENYON. California has passed a compulsory law making provision for the instruction of people who are unable to read and speak the English language. Massachusetts, where evening schools are maintained, has also done so. New Hampshire has a compulsory law where evening or special day schools are maintained. New York has a compulsory law; Rhode Island has a compulsory law; South Dakota has a compulsory law; Utah has a compulsory law; and I think we have followed to some extent the Utah statute, which differentiates between the alien and the citizen.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. KENYON. Yes; I yield.

Mr. PHELAN. I desire to ask the Senator if he provides in his bill for the regulation in any way of the teaching of foreign languages in the schools?

Mr. KENYON. No; the bill does not do so.

Mr. PHELAN. Does the Senator think it would be wise to incorporate a provision under that head?

Mr. KENYON. It might be so; and I will say to the Senator that provisions of that kind are being adopted by States of the Union rather generally. We now have a situation where States have laws, passed within the last year or two, making English the only medium of education in the schools. Is that what the Senator refers to?

Mr. PHELAN. Yes. I have that in mind as well as the practice in California, with which the Senator may not be familiar, of the Japanese crowding the public schools during the school hours, and then, under direction of the Japanese consuls, who seem to control the movements of those people, instructing them in the Japanese language, in the principles of the Japanese Government and allegiance to the Japanese Mikado, both before and after the regular school hours; which is very hard upon the children and very prejudicial to the spirit of Americanism; for, it seems to me, that practically neutralizes the effect of the education which they receive in the public schools in the regular hours.

Mr. KENYON. I should like to ask the Senator a question as to whether the Japanese, to whom he refers, speak the English tongue?

Mr. PHELAN. They are taught English during the school hours, and in some schools in the rural districts the attendance is 60 per cent Japanese.

Mr. KENYON. Then, they have their own Japanese schools outside of that?

Mr. PHELAN. Outside of that, both in California and in Hawaii, they have their own Japanese schools. Recently in the Hawaiian Territorial Legislature a bill was introduced to check that, and there was considerable agitation; but finally the legislature refused to act, at the instance of the sugar planters, because they were afraid that it would disturb their relations with the Japanese who till their fields.

Mr. KENYON. But the Japanese are compelled to study English a certain number of hours per week or per month, are they not?

Mr. PHELAN. Yes; like other students in the schools, during the regular hours; but before those hours and after them private schools for the purpose of de-Americanizing them are conducted by the Japanese.

Mr. KENYON. This bill would not affect that situation, I will say to the Senator. It would not apply to that unless they are illiterates or non-English speaking.

Mr. PHELAN. Could the bill not provide that where schools are maintained outside of regular school hours its benefits shall not apply?

Mr. KENYON. This act applies to illiterates and non-English-speaking people. If the Japanese of whom the Senator speaks do not come under one of those heads they would not be affected by the bill. It is to compel the teaching of English for 200 hours a year. I appreciate that the situation of which the Senator speaks contains a good many difficulties, but I do not know how it could be reached by any Federal law.

Mr. PHELAN. I presume the State has jurisdiction over those matters.

Mr. KENYON. Undoubtedly the State could remedy the situation.

Mr. PHELAN. But when California undertook a few years ago to regulate it the Federal Government interfered, as the Senator will recall——

Mr. KENYON. I recall the incident.

Mr. PHELAN. Under the threat of using the Army and Navy to reduce California to subjection and submission.

Mr. KENYON. I think, however, that California manifested but little fear of the Army and Navy.

I started to refer, when the Senator from California asked me a question, to the States that within the last year or two have made the English language the only medium of instruction in both the public and private schools. The States which have made English the only medium of instruction in both public and private schools are Arkansas, Colorado, Delaware, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Kansas, Maine, Minnesota, Nebraska, Nevada, New Hampshire, New Mexico, Ohio, Oklahoma, Oregon, Pennsylvania, South Dakota, and West Virginia.

Then, certain States have prohibited the teaching of German as a subject of study in the elementary public schools, including Colorado, Delaware, Indiana—which also prohibits the teaching of German in high schools—Iowa, Nebraska, Ohio, and Oklahoma.

I have referred, I think sufficiently, Mr. President, to the question of safety in industrial life as embodied in this proposition, but I am going to ask to place in the RECORD as part of my remarks some letters from manufacturing concerns showing the connection between illiteracy and "turnover," which I think are rather interesting.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, permission is granted.

The letters referred to are as follows:

SCOVILLE MANUFACTURING CO.,
Waterbury, Conn., February 19, 1919.

Mr. HERBERT KAUFMAN,
Special Assistant Secretary of the Interior,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: We have your telegram, dated February 15 and received February 17, asking our opinion "as to the relation between illiterates and turnover, illiteracy and wages, illiteracy and production, and illiteracy and industrial unrest."

ILLITERACY AND TURNOVER.

We have made no very thorough study on these questions. Generally speaking, we believe that there is a relation between illiteracy and labor turnover, primarily because illiteracy usually goes with ignorance, and ignorance is usually gullible and is easily persuaded by the agitator or propagandist.

A study of several hundred employment cards from our employment bureaus of the "throughs" disclosed that 8 per cent of the through were illiterate. In December a factory census showed that 5 per cent of the employees on our pay roll were illiterate. Our illiteracy test is that of ascertaining whether a man or woman can read and write in any language. If not, they are called illiterate. These same through cards, gauged on the test as to whether they could read or write English, disclosed that 20 per cent were illiterate in this respect, while the census taken in December disclosed that 12.8 per cent of all of our employees could neither read nor write English. At that time we had a little over 9,000 employees on our pay roll.

ILLITERACY AND WAGES.

The largest per cent of illiterates, of course, are on common labor jobs with respect to both men and women. The record cards of the employees show that while these types of jobs are filled by employees classed both as illiterate and literate, that the literates show a rapid advancement with corresponding increase in pay, while the illiterates rarely receive advancement or increases in pay, excepting, of course, such increases as go with the increased cost of living and have no relation to the relative service rendered.

ILLITERACY AND PRODUCTION.

Most of our department heads feel very positively that illiteracy is a hindrance to production, due to the fact that the illiterates are apt not to fully understand or comprehend instructions. This tendency to a lack of understanding and comprehension, of course, interferes with quality as well as quantity.

ILLITERACY AND INDUSTRIAL UNREST.

We have had no industrial unrest in our organization and have, therefore, no data with respect to our own organization. Generally speaking, however, we should say that the natural gullibility of ignorance which is so closely related to illiteracy would make for industrial unrest should the agitator, disturber, and the propagandist be directing their efforts that way in a community where there was a large per cent of illiterants.

With relation to this whole question of the effect of illiteracy on production we have come to the conclusion that it is necessary for us in these days to take on to our pay roll a certain per cent of illiterate employees, and that it is good business for us to put these employees through classes in English, simple reading and writing, and arithmetic, and we have had as high as 250 in classes of this kind at one time, with an average attendance of between 90 per cent and 95 per cent. The classes cover periods of one hour and are given on the company's time and taught by teachers employed by the company. This is done both for the reason of inducing a larger percentage to attend and in order that we may control the studies involved in the course and make thus a better rounded out course for their needs, because if the subjects to be taken were optional they would take only those subjects they are interested in.

These classes are made up of non-English speaking, as well as illiterate, employees. Some of the illiterates make good progress. Most of the illiterates who are non-English speaking make very rapid progress and we find that 100 lessons of one hour each makes a very great difference.

We are now attempting to devise a plan which will enable us to give all of our employees of that character at least 100 lessons and cover the whole number of non-English speaking and illiterates within two years. We are also seriously considering, in case of all new employees of any kind, letting them understand thoroughly that we may call upon them at any time we see fit to take any course of study which we may see fit to ask them to take on the company's time and thus be able to, if thought wise, exercise some degree of compulsion.

We do not feel that we are rendering toward the community the proper spirit if we refuse to employ illiterates and non-English-speaking employees. Many of them are of good character and will make good citizens, and we are endeavoring to do our share in this work, not because it is philanthropy, but because we believed it is good business. The classes are held during the regular working schedule in the daytime, and include both men and women.

We are sorry we are unable to give you more specific answers to the specific questions you have asked, but have done the best we can and trust that it will be of some assistance to you.

Yours, truly,

SCOVILL MANUFACTURING CO.,
JOHN H. GOSS.

NATIONAL SAFETY COUNCIL,
Chicago, Ill., February 17, 1919.

Mr. HERBERT KAUFMAN,
Special Assistant to the Secretary,
Department of the Interior, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: The National Safety Council is in hearty sympathy with the movement to Americanize foreigners who have come to our shores and to educate them to speak English and to read it. In this national movement for the conservation of life and limb our members have found that one of the greatest stumbling blocks and difficulties in the way of progress among the foreign-born element has been their inability to read English. It would be a great gratification to the members of the National Safety Council to have a definite policy of education established, and education in English speaking would be of the greatest possible assistance in carrying the message of safety to the foreign born. The council, being a nonpolitical organization, is unable to take any active steps regarding legislation, but wishes to assure you of its hearty sympathy with the entire movement.

Sincerely, yours,

F. W. PARDEE,
Business Manager.

Peoria, Ill., February 14, 1919.

Mr. HERBERT KAUFMAN,
Special Assistant to the Secretary,
Department of the Interior, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. KAUFMAN: I have your letter of the 10th instant, inclosing copies of bills introduced in Congress by Senator SMITH and Congressman BANKHEAD appropriating money for the education of foreign illiterates of this country. I am very heartily in accord with the objects of these bills. It is gratifying to know that these efforts are being made. I hope in both of my publications to be of some service in the matter.

Yours, very sincerely,

HENRY M. PINDELL.

INTERNATIONAL BROTHERHOOD OF BOOKBINDERS,
OFFICE OF PRESIDENT,
Indianapolis, Ind., February 17, 1919.

Mr. HERBERT KAUFMAN,
Special Assistant to the Secretary,
Department of the Interior, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. KAUFMAN: Yours of the 10th instant came to hand in due time, and I am writing to say that we will keep your letter, pamphlet, and circulars before us. You can rest assured that we will make use of every opportunity to do anything in the way of carrying out the progress provided by the Americanization bill of Senator SMITH and Congressman BANKHEAD. Certainly our organization looks with favor upon the proposition.

Cordially, yours, WALTER REDDICK, President.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I referred a little while ago to an experiment in connection with the question of efficiency. Miss Lizzie E. Rector is principal of public school No. 4 in New York City, in the neighborhood of Twenty-first Street. New York State and New York City have done great work along Americanization lines. There were girls employed in a factory in that vicinity, about 10 per cent of the 400 employed being illiterate. They were assigned to two groups and were taught English, reading, writing, arithmetic, American history, geography, personal hygiene, practical information about food, fire protection, and the evolution of the undergarment. Practice was given in the writing of letters of a friendly and business nature, keeping expense accounts and budgets, and in making out work slips and reports. The girls learned the practical application in daily life of adding, subtracting, multiplying, and dividing; they were taught how to deposit money in savings banks and how to draw it out.

At the end of 32 weeks their earnings had increased from an average of 19.5 cents per hour to 22.2 cents per hour, while the earnings of those who could not avail themselves of the class instruction remained practically unchanged. In other words, a short period of education—32 weeks—of these illiterate girls resulted in increasing the earning capacity of those who were illiterate and took these courses from 19 to 22 cents an hour, while those who did not take the courses received the same wages as formerly. They were taught in the English language, hygiene, some of the civics, some of the lives of statesmen—and also Members of Congress—the origin of legal holidays, mathematics, application of language, the alphabet as a guide to common things. They were taught common-sense things. That, I think, is an illustration that has in it some argument for the efficiency of literacy.

Now, what are we doing about it? What progress are we making?

When President McKinley sent men to Porto Rico to establish a school system he told them that he wanted them to put the conscience of the American people into Porto Rico. We have got to put the conscience of America into the thoughts and aspirations of these people. What are we doing about it?

Several years ago the Bureau of Education formed a division of immigrant education which has studied the peculiar problem of the foreign born, established contacts with the States and communities, worked out methods and material, and laid an excellent foundation for a broad program. On January 1, 1919, a branch of the War Department was absorbed which had been created during the war for the elimination of bad community conditions in cities containing ordnance factories. Regional directors of Americanization were appointed, who have so far visited 20 States, straightening out tangles among organizations, bringing about unity of authority, urging State legislation, securing the appointment of State directors and State committees, and preparing the field for definite work. They issued a monthly publication, called "Americanization," that was mailed to about 25,000 active workers in Americanization in the schools and the industries and the different societies of the country. It was a splendid little publication, but it had to go out of business, because they had absolutely no money. The conference that I have spoken of in May, 1919, on methods of Americanization, was held in Washington and attended by nearly 500 leading workers in this field in the United States. They adopted a definite program, and will shortly make reports as to what they have tried to do and what they recommend. This little bureau over there have answered many, many letters. They have been asked for help. The Secretary of the Interior told me a few days ago that in a great factory in Akron, Ohio, where they had constructed a building that had cost two and a half million dollars, they were putting in their own plan of Americanization, and they were here begging for teachers, and there were absolutely no teachers to send to them; so their work is waiting for teachers.

I want to say, however, that the fact of so many societies and organizations taking up the work of Americanization, following their own ideas, is a strong argument for some kind of national supervision and national direction, because blunders in this matter might be very serious, and it all ought to be moving on as a harmonious whole, under Government direction and Government inspiration, and not have every society in the United States fixing up a different method of meeting the question.

They have answered hundreds of letters. They have gotten up a little catechism of the Constitution and printed it. The President gave them $20,000 out of his fund. Congress has not given them a cent. Some Americanization society in New York cooperated with them. I can not give the figures, but some quite substantial amount of money was used. Now, this little catechism of the Constitution was sent out. It became known that they had it; and I have long lists of names—all kinds of names, foreign names—wanting this Constitution. And here are some wonderfully interesting letters. Here is one from a logging camp in the State of Washington, and a picture of the loggers gathered around a house there. They wanted to have it. I do not know that this is from one of the loggers, but it is from up in Washington:

DEAR SIR: Vil you kindli send me the Katechism of the Konstitution of the United States.

It is rather pitiful. There are other letters, showing poor spelling but a desire to learn something about the Constitution of the United States, from persons wanting this little primer. They can not send it out any more—they have not a cent of money—unless some public-spirited citizens go and help them; and the splendid men that they have had giving their services practically for nothing, helping to build up this great machinery that the Secretary of the Interior has built up and that is ready to go, have had to leave and go out and earn a living.

I know men who are giving their services who have been offered positions at $10,000 a year, one that I know of there; but because they felt this thing, because they had the patriotism and saw what it meant to the country, they were willing to give their services. That is real patriotism. I shall not take the time to read any more of these letters. I shall be glad to have any Senators look at them who may be interested in them. I will ask permission to insert some of these letters in the RECORD. I think, as the Senator from Maryland [Mr. FRANCE] says, they are instructive.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letters are as follows:

Mr. KENYON. Here is a letter to the Bureau of Americanization from Salt Lake City:

I have a class of 32 in night school. I want some good Americanization literature for them. I have been writing my own lessons so as to teach Americanization, but am so exhausted I must have some printed matter to put into their hands. We are getting fine results, but it is just by main strength and awkwardness.

BERTHENE O. BARLOW,
Salt Lake City, Utah.

Here is one from Belleville, Ill.:

I live in an outlying district, where I am surrounded by those of foreign birth. I have often thought as my wife went among these people for the Red Cross that if every true-hearted American would do his part it would make all better citizens and as a whole a better Nation. I am ready to do my part wherever you need me.

AUGUST F. BERGHOLM,
Belleville, Ill.

Here is a letter from a couple of Polish boys:

I read your appeal in the American Echo. Like to learn English language. There are quite number Poles here, but we have no evening school, so how can we open our eyes and lips to the English language if we don't know anything about it? How will we be able to pass naturalization papers when we can't speak English? Dear sir, in other communities the Poles are learning English, but we in Morris have been forgotten. It has been forgotten that we also need schooling.

ALFRED BILECKI and MICHAEL LUSH,
Morris, Ill.

[Translated from the Polish.]

So it goes on with many others.

Here is a young fellow with a foreign name who wants five copies of this catechism of the Constitution and offers to pay for them. Here is another who wants 30 copies, and another who wants 2 copies. Another wants it just as soon as he can get it, because he is in need of it.

That bureau also had many letters from manufacturers, showing the work that they were carrying on.

I am pursuing this in order to have it in the RECORD, at least in the hope that it may some time be read.

This bill is limited in the money used to the training of teachers and the payment of teachers. That is the great work that must be done.

From January 1, 1919, to June 30, 1919, this department had $20,620 expended on this work. No specific appropriation has ever been made by Congress. From 1914 to 1918, under a cooperative arrangement with the Americanization Committee of New York, the bureau had the use of about $14,000 per year for the support of the Division of Immigrant Education, and from May, 1918, to February, 1919, the budget was increased by the Americanization committee to $100,000 per annum. The cooperative arrangement with the Americanization committee ended in March, 1919; so the only part of public funds that have gone to this work at all have been about $20,000.

If anybody wanted to know the practicability of these people in their old age learning the English language he could find food for reflection in the pamphlet issued by the Bureau of Education, entitled "Illiteracy in the United States."

There is given the work of Mrs. Stewart in Rowan County, Ky. She established there night schools, that they called the moonlight schools, and the registration has gone up to 1,600. Men 85 years of age are attending those schools, and women 70 to 72 years of age. Men over 80 years of age have learned to write, and women 72 and men of 80 are playmates in the schools.

What has been done in that county in Kentucky in those moonlight schools can be done in any community if the proper spirit is there. One little woman has done all of this, practically. If you want to get anything done in this world, anyhow, go to the women. She has put an enthusiasm into that that you never could expect, anyhow, to get in the United States Senate for any problem of humanity.

Those people have gone out in the night and learned these things, have been able to correspond with their boys and their girls, and bring about a situation in that county better than it has ever known.

In this pamphlet there are pictures of a spelling bee in the mountains, men up in the sixties and seventies competing with one another in spelling and learning to write in a few weeks. Is not that worth while? If you have some bill here to turn over what is left of the public domain to the corporations of the United States, you can get a tremendous enthusiasm for it. Yet anything here apparently to salvage humanity is considered ridiculous, unworthy to take up the time of the dignified Senate of the United States.

While the Senate may look at it in that light, they can not go before the country and tell them that they have refused to take any steps to remedy this condition of illiteracy in this country without finding that the people of the United States understand the problem fully as well as they do.

Here is a most interesting interview in the paper this morning from Miss Helen Taft on this question of education and on the pay of teachers and professors, showing how a baseball player can be sold for $125,000 or a prize fighter can make hundreds of thousands, while a poor school-teacher can not get enough to live on. We had better begin thinking about some of these things some day.

Churches are going into this work which the Government ought to do. The organization known as the Church of Christ has started out in a campaign to raise $25,000,000 for Americanization. Everybody seems interested in this question but Congress. But some day these sore spots in our body politic, this cancer of illiteracy, eating straight to the heart of the Republic, will challenge the attention even of Congress.

[At this point Mr. KENYON closed his remarks for the day.]

Saturday, January 17, 1920.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I occupied a good deal of the time of the Senate yesterday on the pending measure, and I now simply wish to round up my discussion so that my remarks shall not appear quite so jagged in the RECORD. Then I shall give way to the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH].

I discussed on yesterday this problem and its remedy, and the question which has been raised ofttimes, that it is a State problem and not one of national concern. Some Senators feel—I know that my friend, the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] does—that the Federal Government is going too far in these matters when it attempts to stimulate the efforts of the States. I think such stimulation by the Federal Government has been productive of good. There is, of course, danger in carrying it too far. We are now assisting in educating farmers under the same sort of a plan. To-day the Federal Government provides extension courses and vocational education, both bills having been introduced and carried through by the Senator from Georgia. The same is true as to highways. It is based on similar principles.

The same argument exactly can be proposed, and is proposed, as to eliminating illiterates. If the argument is made that we should leave this question to the States, the answer is, we have left it to the States. The present deplorable situation, the present black spots of illiteracy, are a refutation of the arguments that the States will adequately deal with this problem. The question of the education of our citizens is a national question. Illiteracy in Alabama or illiteracy in New York is almost as much a problem for Iowa, Wisconsin, and California as it is for those particular States. It is all our business as a Nation.

The education of our foreign born is certainly not a problem for the States alone. Immigrants are admitted to our shores and permitted to scatter at will throughout the country. The States are not consulted about the matter at all. The alien is naturally more or less migratory; he is in this community to-day and in that community to-morrow; in this State one week and in another State next week. So it can not be purely a State question. Nor is it fair to the border States and those cities which have ports of entry to demand that they shall educate and assimilate these people for all the remainder of the Nation. It is a national problem, and there is no escape from that conclusion. That question is discussed in the committee hearings on page 45; but I will not now take the time to refer to the hearings.

In opening the discussion on this bill I spoke of the amount of money involved, and stated that while I believed the amount of money specified should be appropriated, yet, under present conditions, and feeling that we really ought not to appropriate anything except we would be willing to borrow the money for it, I would be willing to have the appropriation cut down. I am advised that the appropriation can be reduced one-half and a great work still carried on, and so I shall not object to such reduction.

Under this bill, according to the provisions of section 3, $500,000 of the appropriation will be expended each year for printing pamphlets, printing in foreign languages matter deemed to be necessary for use generally throughout the country. The remainder of the appropriation is apportioned to the work of eradicating illiteracy in the particular States, to be used only in educational work, in the preparation of teachers and directors, and the payment of teachers and directors.

Let me make that a little clearer for the RECORD. It is to be used in this way:

Salaries and expenses of a Federal director, regional directors and experts in illiteracy, training of teachers, the teaching of the non-English speaking, and so forth.

Printing of monthly publications, pamphlets, primers, textbooks, posters, motion-picture films, stereopticon slides, and so forth.

Training a small group of educators in the most approved technique of teaching English to the non-English speaking in order that they may in turn teach other groups in the different States.

The institution of classes in normal schools and colleges for the training of teachers, and the payment of qualified instructors.

The employment of teachers by the public-school systems, for the teaching of classes in the public schools—day and night—in the industries or wherever classes may be formed.

The employment of the necessary field supervisors to see that the work is properly carried out in the normal schools, communities, industries, and so forth.

Studies in illiteracy covering the present methods used, existing material, extent of the problem, making plans for discovering illiterates and getting them into the schools, with special studies regarding the agricultural districts, mining districts, lumber camps, and industries.

Special studies regarding non-English speaking, present methods used, existing material, extent of the problem, with special studies regarding the problem in industries, mining districts, lumber camps, seafaring, and agriculture.

Development of special aids, such as stereopticon photography, posters, motion pictures, charts, lesson sheets, and so forth.

Special studies in the training of teachers similar to the foregoing.

Special studies in the improvement of housing and sanitary conditions among the foreign born, recreation, home work, and the development of community centers.

I will say to my friend the Senator from Utah, who was not present yesterday, that I pointed to the maps on the wall in discussing this problem, and showed from the census of 1910 that there are eight and a half million people in this country who were either entirely illiterate or non-English speaking—eight and a half million non-English speaking, of whom five and a half million are absolute illiterates. We have appropriated small sums of money for education along these lines, as referred to by me on yesterday, and I now ask to place in the RECORD the entire appropriations of Congress for educational work from the year 1914 to the year 1920.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the matter will be printed in the RECORD.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Appropriations by Congress for education.

Year.	Bureau of Education.	Vocational education (Smith-Hughes Act).	Colleges of agriculture and mechanic arts.	Agricultural extension work (Smith-Lever Act).
1914	$89,000	.....	$2,500,000	$480,000
1915	120,500	.....	2,500,000	1,030,000
1916	120,500	.....	2,500,000	1,580,000
1917	125,500	.....	2,500,000	2,080,000
1918	139,300	$1,860,000	2,500,000	2,580,000
1919	162,260	2,512,000	2,500,000	3,030,000
1920	216,960	3,182,000	2,500,000	3,580,000

Mr. KENYON. I will say further to the Senator from Utah, who honors me with his presence—and I am speaking largely to the Senator from Utah—that all the bureau of Americanization, if it can be called such, has had to use has been $20,000 given out of the President's fund, and about $14,000 which was furnished by some New York Americanization societies for cooperative work. They have done a wonderful work throughout the country with the money, but they have had to give up the men who have come here and devoted their time to it with practically no compensation.

I think it would not be fair to the Senate if I did not frankly call attention for the thought of the Senate to what might be considered a serious question in the bill. We provide in this bill that the money shall be given to the States, the States to match dollar for dollar, provided certain things are done by the States. The feature over which the only controversy seems to arise is that we make a distinction between what we require to be done in the States as to aliens and as to citizens. We require 200 hours a year in the teaching of English to the citizens between 16 and 21 until they shall have at least carried out a course prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior. As to aliens we make the age limit 45. The query arises, which I will be glad to have Senators think about, Can we do that?

Can a State treat an alien differently than a citizen of the State? I say without hesitation that it can be done, without discussing the wisdom of it, unless it violates the treaties of the United States, and I simply call attention to the fact that the courts have quite generally sustained different taxes in the States as to aliens and as to citizens.

Mr. FERNALD. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield for one moment, this is one of the most instructive, interesting, and valuable matters that is likely to come before the Senate of the United States.

Mr. KENYON. If the Senator is going to call for a quorum, I want to ask him not to do so.

Mr. FERNALD. That is what I was about to do.

Mr. KENYON. We have more Senators here now, I think, than we would have after the quorum would be called. I feel quite encouraged. Our number has doubled since yesterday.

Mr. FERNALD. I will not insist if the Senator prefers.

Mr. KENYON. I wish the Senator would not.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, probably the RECORD showed yesterday, and if it does not I hope it will—and I interrupt the Senator's able speech in order that it may—that I was called from the city yesterday, sent indeed by the Senate to make certain investigations in regard to large appropriations contemplated; and in the performance of a duty which was devolved upon me by the Senate I was compelled to be absent from the Chamber yesterday. That is the only time that I have been absent since I have been in the Senate except when I was away on official business.

Mr. KENYON. The Senator need make no excuses for his absence. There is no Member of the Senate—and I am sure the RECORD will sustain me in that statement—who is more diligent or who pays more attention to the work of the Senate. It might have been thought from the newspapers that I was irritated because there were not more Senators here. I think the reason no more Senators are here is because they are all for the bill, except one or two, and if there were a chance to bring the bill to a vote this afternoon I would stop talking about it; but I have said to the Senator from Utah that we will not vote before Monday.

As I say, a different tax as to aliens has been sustained; different laws as to aliens holding lands; different laws in the States as to legacies payable to foreigners—a State can make one law as to legacies concerning its own citizens and a different law as to foreigners—different laws as to jury service; different laws as to security for costs. The laws of some States provide that aliens can take land by purchase but not by descent. This draws a difference as to their own citizens. That would not be equal treatment. The same thing is true as to military service.

As I say, the power to regulate immigration and deal with aliens is an instance of sovereignty, and the right of self-preservation is the first law of nations as it is of individuals, and education is necessary to self-preservation. So I reason out, to my own satisfaction at least, that we have a right to make a different law as to the education of aliens than as to citizens, unless it violates treaty obligations; and I want to be perfectly frank about that.

I wrote the Secretary of State some time ago, and sent him a copy of this bill, and asked him if he thought it violated any of our treaty obligations. I will place his letter in the RECORD. It is rather long. He cites me to the treaty between the United States and Switzerland which provides for equal treatment, and I think there is a serious question as to whether there might not be a violation of the treaties with Switzerland and a few other nations; but those are the kind of nations that never will raise any such question, and it seemed to me better that we run along until that question is raised; that there is no particular use of anticipating that difficulty. With the keen minds in the Senate, however, I had expected that that would become quite a subject of discussion among our great international lawyers here.

I will put that letter in the RECORD, so that the Senate may have the benefit of it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letter is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, January 2, 1920.

Hon. WILLIAM S. KENYON,
United States Senate.

SIR: The department is in receipt of your letter of December 19, 1919, inclosing a copy of a bill (S. 3315, 66th Cong.), to promote Americanization by providing for cooperation with the several States in the education of non-English speaking persons and the assimilation of foreign-born residents, and for other purposes. You inquire whether such a law would violate the provisions of any of our treaties with foreign countries.

In reply I beg to quote for your information article 1 of the convention of friendship, commerce, and extradition concluded between the United States and Switzerland on November 25, 1850:

"The citizens of the United States of America and the citizens of Switzerland shall be admitted and treated upon a footing of reciprocal equality in the two countries, where such admission and treatment shall not conflict with the constitutional or legal provisions, as well Federal as State and cantonal, of the contracting parties. The citizens of the United States and the citizens of Switzerland, as well as the members of their families, subject to the constitutional and legal provisions aforesaid, and yielding obedience to the laws, regulations, and usages of the country wherein they reside, shall be at liberty to come, go, sojourn temporarily, domiciliate, or establish themselves permanently, the former in the Cantons of the Swiss Confederation, the Swiss in the States of the American Union, to acquire, possess, and alienate therein property (as is explained in article 5); to manage their affairs; to exercise their profession, their industry, and their commerce; to have establishments; to possess warehouses; to consign their products and their merchandise, and to sell them by wholesale or retail, either by themselves or by such brokers or other agents as they may think proper; they shall have free access to the tribunals and shall be at liberty to prosecute and defend their rights before courts of justice in the same manner as native citizens, either by themselves or by such advocates, attorneys, or other agents as they may think proper to select. No pecuniary or other more burdensome condition shall be imposed upon their residence or establishment, or upon the enjoyment of the above-mentioned rights, than shall be imposed upon citizens of the country where they reside, nor any condition whatever to which the latter shall not be subject.

"The foregoing privileges, however, shall not extend to the exercise of political rights, nor to a participation in the property of communities, corporations, or institutions of which the citizens of one party, established in the other, shall not have become members or coproprietors."

It will be noted that this article provides, among other things, that no peculiar or other more burdensome condition shall be imposed upon the citizens of the respective countries resident in the territory of the other than are imposed upon the citizens of such country, and that no condition whatever shall be imposed upon citizens of either country residing in the territory of the other to which the citizens of the latter country shall not be subject.

It appears from section 5 (e) of the above-mentioned bill that all resident aliens between the ages of 16 and 45 who are illiterate are to be required to take the course of instruction provided for, while in the case of citizens of the United States the maximum age is 21 years. While the department would not want to be understood as holding that this apparent discrimination would constitute a violation of the provisions of article 1 of the above-mentioned treaty, it is conceivable that such might be the contention of the Swiss Government. Provisions similar to those under the Swiss treaty are contained in treaties with various other countries.

It would seem that the proposed law would be less apt to provoke controversy with foreign governments if the particular provision were so amended as to apply equally to citizens and aliens.

I have the honor to be, sir,
Your obedient servant,

ROBERT LANSING.

Mr. KENYON. That is the only legal objection, it seems to me, that can be made to the bill.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. KENYON. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. That provision with reference to aliens is intended especially to reach the non-English-speaking class, is it not?

Mr. KENYON. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I would suggest that the Senator consider an amendment which eliminates the word "aliens," but extends the duty of attending school to 45 years of age for 200 hours during the year in the case of all who can not speak English, without regard to their being aliens.

Mr. KENYON. That was the suggestion of the Secretary of State—not in any way to interfere with or advise about legislation, but to get rid of any treaty question. If that were done, there could be no treaty question involved; but then we would have the question of compelling American citizens over 21 years of age to go to school.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. If they can not speak English, I think they ought to do it. I am intensely in favor, myself, of requiring every one who has stayed in the United States six months or longer and who can not speak English—those who have come here to stay, if they have been naturalized—to learn how to speak English.

Mr. KENYON. The Senator feels that there is no constitutional difficulty in the way of requiring citizens over 21 years of age to attend classes in school?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do not think there is the slightest.

Mr. KENYON. I do not, either, but I thought somebody might think of some.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KENYON. Yes.

Mr. KING. The statement just made by the Senator from Georgia attracts my attention, and I am led to inquire whether it is the purpose of this bill to require all aliens who are in the United States to accept the provisions of this bill? I have in mind the fact that there are aliens coming here from time to time, and who in the future will come here from time to time, for temporary purposes. They may be here for several years. They are connected with business enterprises established here, or branches established here, the important branch or the chief branch being in some other country. It seems to me that under no theory of legislation which we ought to follow should we attempt to compel aliens who are here for those temporary purposes to accept or submit to the provisions of this bill.

Mr. KENYON. I think there can be no dispute on that proposition. I think that is running in the minds of some Senators. A Senator said to me last night that under this bill he thought we could compel Clemenceau, if he came over here, to study the English language.

Mr. COLT. He speaks English.

Mr. KENYON. Yes; he does speak English. Or Viviani, or some one who does not speak English.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. KENYON. Yes.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Did I understand him to say that Clemenceau might be compelled to study the English language under this bill?

Mr. KENYON. No; I said that some Senator stated that to me last night. He speaks English, however, I understand.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. The Senator perhaps is unaware that the great premier of France taught school in this country for several years and speaks English perfectly.

Mr. KENYON. Yes; I understand that he does, and that he married an American woman, which would have insured that he must eventually learn to speak English; but, merely as an illustration, Viviani might be mentioned.

Mr. COLT. May I ask the Senator, pursuing the inquiry of the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], whether as the bill now stands it would not include all aliens who do not speak English?

Mr. KENYON. Who have been here over six months.

Mr. COLT. Who have been here over six months?

Mr. KENYON. Yes; I think that is true, and I think that is a very legitimate criticism.

Mr. COLT. Now, should there not be some discretion?

Mr. KENYON. Yes. I will say to the Senator that I had thought there should be an amendment providing that it shall not apply to those who are here on business, or sojourning, or pleasure, or something of that kind. There should be an amendment of that kind, and I shall propose that kind of an amendment, because it is not the intention at all, of course, to accomplish that. People who do not intend to make this their country at all might come here and stay for five years in a business. Now, of course, there is danger there. You can take a man who comes here for 5 or 6 years or 10 years to work in a mill, or something of that kind, get all the money he can, and then go back to his own country. Those are the kind of citizens who are not particularly desirable, and I do not know but that we have got to draw the line there. It is a difficult question; but I do realize that there must be some amendment that will exclude those who are simply here as sojourners, or on temporary business matters, and do not intend to remain more than a very limited period of time. That is why we put in the six months' limitation.

Mr. COLT. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question? Is it not true that where night schools have been established for the purpose of teaching English the alien population are very desirous—perhaps the adults more than those who are under age—of attending these schools? I was speaking with Senator MCLEAN, of Connecticut, on this point, and he said that this was true of his State; and I may say that we have had the same experience in Rhode Island. Now, if you find that this disposition predominates, would it not be well to consider carefully this question of compulsion?

Mr. KENYON. That is a subject that we discussed a good deal yesterday. I myself am so firmly of the belief that we ought to commence to make this a one-language Nation by processes of education that I believe in the compulsion; but I am not prepared to say that great good could not be accomplished even were that feature of the bill not here.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I would suggest to the Senator that the committee or the Senator who has given so much attention to this matter prepare an amendment dealing with that subject. Of my own knowledge I can state that there will be a large number of aliens coming to the United States in the next few years for business reasons. We are so bound to European and other nations in a business and in a commercial way that business houses in other lands will have their representatives and agents here. Some of them may remain here for many years. It would be very objectionable, it seems to me, for us to seize those representatives and force them into our schools or to adopt some educational system. Upon the other hand, we will be sending thousands of Americans to other lands. I have no doubt that American business men will have their representatives by the thousands in the Latin American countries, in Central America, in Mexico, and in the farthest islands of the sea and the farthest nations of the world trying to get business.

We must have foreign business. We would not want any retaliatory legislation by other nations and have them force our representatives into their schools.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do not think it was the real purpose of the bill to reach that class.

Mr. KENYON. I know that is not the ultimate purpose.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The distribution of the fund is based upon the census, and the census does not enumerate that class, and I am sure that the chairman of the committee and those on the committee who are supporting him will be glad to modify the bill to reach that point.

Mr. STERLING. May I ask the Senator a question in regard to the construction of the language of subdivision (e), at the bottom of page 3 and on page 4?

Mr. KENYON. Certainly.

Mr. STERLING. Does the language on page 4 of that subdivision, providing for the time which shall be spent in classes of instruction, relate back to the first part of the subdivision, and to that class designated as follows:

All residents who are citizens of the United States, 16 years of age or over and under 21 years of age—

Or does the time during which they shall attend classes of instruction relate only to aliens who are 16 years of age or over and under 45 years of age?

Mr. KENYON. No; it relates to both classes. In line 25, page 3, it lays down the rule as to residents who are citizens. Then it says, "And all." It is coupled up, and that is the intention of it.

Mr. STERLING. So that those who are citizens, who can not read or write the English language when they have arrived at the age of 16 years, shall be required to attend school?

Mr. KENYON. Yes; 200 hours per year. There is a difference, the Senator will remember. As to aliens, we go further than that, and make the limit 45 years, and that raises what I have referred to as perhaps a troublesome question. The Senator from Georgia suggests that we put them all up to 45, and I am in favor of that.

Mr. STERLING. I was just going to suggest, in regard to the maximum age of 45 years for aliens, that some of the objections made here might be removed if that maximum were reduced, were not fixed so high as 45 years.

Mr. KENYON. The great per cent of the illiteracy is between 20 and 45. I would like to challenge the Senator's attention to this: If it would be reduced, it would not eliminate the question of different treatment, unless you reduced it to some point as to citizens of this country. That same question would still be involved. Suppose you reduced it to 25 years, you would be treating the aliens differently then, but not to so marked a degree as you did citizens.

Mr. STERLING. Only if you reduced it to 21 or 25 years you would not have any danger of including many who are here temporarily and who have a temporary residence here for business purposes simply and who are perfectly literate or could not by any means be classed as illiterate, but whose business relations were such that there is no particular demand for their learning the English language.

Mr. KENYON. There are men, as the Senator knows from the experience we have had, who have been in this country 20 or 25 years, and up to 40 or 45 years of age, who can not speak the English language. We saw some of them up in the steel district. We would like to get at them and make them learn the language.

The value of this legislation, it seems to me, is that we are getting down to fundamentals in it; that the solution of our wrongs and troubles comes through education; and that the expenditure of even this small sum of money will bring about an educational propaganda in this country that must be of tremendous benefit.

We must train the teachers first. The corps of teachers is going down at an alarming rate. As I said yesterday, out of some 650,000 teachers in this country, 143,000 have gone out of the profession in the last year. We do not pay them as much as we pay hod carriers.

Under this bill manufacturers will be asked to form their foreign-born people into classes in their industries, taught by teachers furnished by the public schools and the cooperation of the Government in such hours as the teachers can spare, anywhere—in homes or where groups of people can be brought together—to teach them. They are yearning for this thing, wanting to learn our language.

We had little fellows before us up there during the steel strike who wanted to go to school, and tried to go to night schools, but after working 10 or 12 hours a day they were not fit to go. I think a man who works his men 10 and 12 hours a day in the mills and factories and takes away from them the opportunity to study needs Americanizing about as much as the illiterate foreigner. Those things all enter into the problem.

Mr. OVERMAN. Does the Senator understand that under the bill this money is to be distributed among the States for the education of illiterates whether they speak the English language or not?

Mr. KENYON. The bill covers the two classes—the illiterates and the non-English speaking; and the money is to be apportioned according to illiteracy in the States.

Mr. OVERMAN. I understand it applies to illiterates, then, but those who speak the English language?

Mr. KENYON. No; an illiterate would not be one who spoke the English language.

Mr. OVERMAN. Under the census people who can not read and write are classed as illiterates.

Mr. KENYON. A man who reads and writes the English language is not an illiterate.

Mr. OVERMAN. But suppose he is a white man, born and raised in this country, and he can not read or write? Would he get the benefit of the bill?

Mr. KENYON. That depends upon what test you apply as the standard of illiteracy. For statistics, and as laid down by the Secretary of the Interior, the test is whether they can read and write the English language.

Mr. OVERMAN. Then a man who could not read and write the English language would be considered an illiterate and would share in the benefits of this bill?

Mr. KENYON. He might be able to speak the English language, but if he could not read or write it, then he would be classed as an illiterate under the terms of this bill.

Mr. OVERMAN. If he is born in this country he can, of course, speak the English language, but if he can not read or write he would get the benefit of the bill?

Mr. KENYON. Yes; he would be an illiterate. I do not know whether the Senator was here yesterday when I called attention to that county in Kentucky—Rowan County. I think the work that has been done there by one woman, Mrs. Stewart, certainly will give her a crown in the next world.

She started moonlight schools. There would be great difficulty, she supposed, in getting people to come to them; but the very first night those schools were crowded. They came from everywhere. I had here yesterday pictures of them going to those schools—one old fellow 85 years old, women 72 to 76 years old, learning to write some kinds of letters. I had pictures of those letters. In the course of a few weeks they were hungry for this knowledge. They gave prizes. They gave a Bible to the first one who learned to write the English language. They could speak English, but they were perfectly illiterate. They could not write to their children or their grandchildren.

Mr. OVERMAN. In my own State we have less foreign population than will be found in any other State in the Union. Out of the whole population we have only 6,000. Out of 2,200,000 people we have only 6,000 foreign-born population.

Mr. KENYON. The illiterate population over 10 years of age is 18 per cent in the Senator's State.

Mr. OVERMAN. I understand. That is the reason why I asked the Senator if the bill would apply to illiterates, whether they were foreigners or not.

Mr. KENYON. Yes; it would.

Mr. OVERMAN. And I wanted to know what the test of illiteracy was.

Mr. KENYON. That is the test.

Mr. OVERMAN. The Senator says the fact that one could not read or write the English language is the test?

Mr. KENYON. The fact that he could not read or write the English language.

Mr. OVERMAN. We have only about 6,000 foreigners.

Mr. KENYON. But those people in the Senator's State who can speak the English language but can not read or write it will be counted in the apportionment of the funds.

Mr. OVERMAN. That is what I wanted to understand.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, apropos of the question suggested by the Senator from North Carolina, I would like to inquire whether that would mean, then, that a very large part of this fund, perhaps practically all the fund in the Southern States, where the colored population abounds, would be devoted to the education of the colored people?

Mr. KENYON. That is a matter between the people of those States and the Secretary of the Interior. It would be devoted to them just as much as to the whites, I suppose. The great illiteracy is among the colored people in North Carolina, is it not, Senator?

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes. The State appropriates the money for the education of the colored people, as well as for the education of the white people. But I suppose this distribution would aid the States in having a larger fund for the education of the colored race, those who can not read and write the English language.

Mr. KENYON. This provides that every dollar of Federal money must be matched by a dollar of State money.

Mr. OVERMAN. It would greatly aid us in the education of the colored race, of course.

Mr. KENYON. As I was saying when interrupted, the great purpose of the bill will be the rallying of an educational propaganda for Americanism. The American people themselves must be taught more sympathy, tolerance, and understanding of the problems of the foreign born. The exclusiveness of the native born has as much as anything else driven the foreign born to live together in colonies. Out of this must be worked some definite program where the foreign born and the native born can mingle and become acquainted with each other.

We had during the war four-minute men, bureaus, posters. Why should we not have them now, speakers from bureaus similar to those, going out among these people, pamphlets to be provided for them in the various languages, to present in simple words the Constitution of the United States, the governmental machinery of the State, lives of great Americans, and public men who have stood for great American ideals, the experience of successful immigrants in America, and so forth?

I have seen them in the Great Northwest on trains, a whole family who had just come to this country, and none of whom could speak the English language. They were going up to that land of opportunity. I have seen those same people in a few years, the man owning his home, having a good little farm stocked up. You could not destroy that man's faith in the ideals of this country. You could not make a Bolshevik out of him. You have to meet the problem with education, and in the last analysis it is the only way it ever can be met.

The forces of destruction are sowing their seeds of hate through millions of our population. What can the illiterate foreign born find out about this country? What can he do in telling his friends about it? I think the motion-picture industry is the best thing to get it before them quickly, and, as I said yesterday, the Secretary of the Interior has arranged a great program that will reach 17,000,000 people a day in this country.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me to seek some information?

Mr. KENYON. Certainly.

Mr. OVERMAN. I call the Senator's attention to his chart showing the percentage of illiterates and non-English speaking. Does it mean that children of foreigners, or our people who were born here and can not read and write?

Mr. KENYON. Let us get it clear. There are two classes under the bill. This chart will make it clear. According to the census of 1910, the illiterates above 14 years of age were at that time 5,502,351; that is, who could not write or read any language; complete illiterates. You might have some very talented people who could not speak English, but the non-English speaking people who speak their own language are 3,089,723.

Mr. OVERMAN. Calling attention to the map and to this in conjunction, I do not understand this one, because it says North Carolina has 292,740 illiterates and non-English speaking persons. That includes those who can not read or write and those who do not speak the English language?

Mr. KENYON. Yes; but above it says "10 years of age." You must add to that the people you have above 10 years of age. It is the same question which the Senator from South Dakota called to my attention. Those illiterates, and the percentage that we had of 9 for South Dakota, do not seem to gibe, and they do not exactly. It should be about eight and a half. But this is above 10 years of age. So you take your total population. I have those figures here.

Mr. OVERMAN. That is bound to include all the English-speaking people who can not read or write the English language?

Mr. KENYON. Yes. I say this, Mr. President, that behind this campaign for Americanization, the first step in Americanization, I firmly believe there will be massed a million people in this country with the same spirit that we had during the war—the four-minute men, the posters, and the personal work. If everybody would go out and talk a little Americanism to one man a day it would be wonderful what that personal work would do. This will bring about a great rallying under Federal direction to Americanize America. These people are splendid material. There are a few bad ones among them. While they live in America and breathe in America, America does not live in many of them or breathe in them, and it is largely our fault.

Herbert Kaufman, in the hearings before the committee, gave some striking statements. I want to pay tribute to him for the great work he has done. He came down here and gave all of his services for over a year helping in the Americanization work. He is one of the most brilliant writers of all time, a man who can grind tremendous sums out of his head per year, but he gave it all up. Here is what he said about this question:

Not until we can teach our illiterate millions the truths about the land to which they have come and in which they were born shall its spirit reach them—not until they can read can we set them right and empower them to inherit their estate.

If we continue to neglect them, there are influences at work that will sooner or later convince those who now fail to appreciate the worth of our Government that the Government itself has failed—crowd the melting pot with class hates and violence and befoul its yield.

We must not be tried by inquest. We demand the right to vindicate the merit of our systems wherever their integrity is questioned or maligned.

We demand the right to regulate the cheating scales upon which the Republic is weighed by its ill-wishers.

We demand the right to protect unintelligence from Esau bargains with hucksters of traitorous creeds.

We demand the right to present our case and our cause to the unlettered mass, whose benightedness and ready prejudices continually invite exploitation.

We demand the right to vaccinate credulous inexperience against bolshevism and kindred plagues.

We demand the right to render all whose kind we deem fit to fight for our flag fit to vote and prosper under its folds.

We demand the right to bring the American language to every American, to qualify each inhabitant of these United States for self-determination, self-uplift, and self-defense.

That is the great purpose of the bill expressed in a wonderfully striking way.

I ask to put into the RECORD an editorial from the Boston Evening Record. If the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] were not in a hurry, I should like to have that read.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I am not in any hurry.

Mr. KENYON. Then I have only one more letter from Secretary Lane to read.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I shall not occupy the Senate's time over half an hour.

Mr. KENYON. I should like to have the editorial read, then.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the editorial will be read.

The Assistant Secretary read the editorial, as follows:

[From the Boston Evening Record, Dec. 27, 1919.]

ORGANIZE AMERICANISM.

Everything in this country is organized except Americanism.

Every enemy of the Republic is organized. The attacks upon our institutions, the efforts to undermine and destroy us, are banded together and financed, and the common folk whose ruin is plotted are hardly more effective than a flock of sheep. Isn't it about time to perfect some kind of militant and assertive organization of straight Americans—the plain folk who believe that this is a good country, with good institutions worth preserving?

A minority imposed the soviet government, the dictatorship of the proletariat, which is a theft of all property and a debauchery and betrayal of all labor, upon the people of Russia, because the minority was quickly and well organized, and well financed, while the majority caught off-guard did not know what to do—and don't know yet. The red is afraid of his enemy's organization, but counts on there being none. The way to check him is to effect just such organization. He knows it and he has said it.

A Russian named Zinovsky, one of the Trotzki group, a man who once lived for a time in New York and went over to Russia in Trotzki's interest, has been speaking for some weeks in this country with great frankness. He spoke November 23 in Milwaukee, and printed copies of his speech in Russian were distributed among his followers in many parts of the country. His speech was, from the reds' point of view, indiscreet. This is what he said:

"Brothers of the great and true cause of mankind: In former talks I have fully instructed you in your duties and actions. I have pointed out certain dangers to our cause and have told you how we must meet them. All of these instructions you must remember.

"But now I am going to tell you what the greatest possible danger to our great cause is or may be. It is not law, the soldier, nor the policeman. It is the chance that the leading men and women of the United States, and especially the despised so-called masters of industry, should combine in a great nation-wide, persistent crusade of propaganda of United Statesism. Such a crusade continuously carried on through the medium of a regular publication, thrown broadcast, would be a danger that we must combat with all of our force.

"The great danger of a united popular drive of Americanism has not reached us yet. The various kinds of Americanization work now being carried on throughout the country are spasmodic, and are not dangerous to our cause. We need not fear having our people taught to speak English nor having the foreign press Americanized. We have our own ways of reaching our people; but as I have already stated we must fear and fight with all our forces a united effort to publish the subtle and misleading claims of the benefits of the democratic Government of the United States. Such propaganda would make converts of our weaker-minded brothers and in time might be the death of our organization; and to prove to you what power such ably directed propaganda has upon the people, I point out to you what was accomplished by the German ruling classes during the 40 years prior to the war in filling the minds of their people with the idea of the supremacy of the fatherland, and I state that such a condition in this country is the only thing we have to fear.

"But our present security from the development of such a force lies in the greed and ignorance of the money power of the country. The despised robbers of the people are too busy adding to their hoards of money and are too mean to join in any movement that would cost the expenditure of their much-loved gold, even if they had the brains to know the best means of attacking us. According to present indications, the robber barons seem to feel secure in their present, settled, and economical methods of Americanization. But we must be watchful and ready. Until our day comes, we must be watchful and alert."

Why leave all the organization to the forces which seek the destruction of our country?

The patriotism of the American people is a mighty force. It is true and it is intelligent. It needs organization, direction, and leadership. Given these things, there is no enemy mighty enough to menace this Nation.

Mr. OVERMAN. I suppose it is doing a great work for this country, but I challenge the idea that an American-born citizen who can not read or write is not a good citizen. Some of the best citizens I have ever known can neither read nor write. The fact is those men who went down with their squirrel rifles into the mountains and fought the battle of Kings Mountain, which was really the turning point of the Revolution, three-fourths of those men could not read nor write, and yet they learned liberty from their mother's milk, and they learned it from the orators and the preachers in the pulpit. The consequence is many men of the South, and I suppose of the North, can not read or write, but have grown up to be patriotic and honest and progressive citizens and understand the theory of our Government. They have learned it from the politicians on the stump, they have learned it from intercourse with their own people. So it will not do to say there is not any distinction between the foreign-born illiterate and the American-born illiterate, because the American-born illiterate is a good citizen, while the foreign-born illiterate is not.

Mr. KENYON. I agree with the Senator entirely and I will go further. I think many of those who can read and write and who may be most highly equipped mentally may be the most dangerous enemies of our Republic.

Mr. OVERMAN. I am in favor of that. I commend the Senator in that respect. There was an idea in my mind that the Senator would not draw any distinction between the foreign-born illiterate and the American-born illiterate. Having defined what illiteracy means, I want to say that there is a great distinction between the two. The only way you can make the foreign-born illiterate a good citizen is to educate him, while the American-born illiterate is a good citizen in most cases, anyway.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I am very much surprised to hear the Senator from North Carolina say that the men who won the Battle of Kings Mountain could not read or write.

Mr. OVERMAN. Many of them.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The Senator said three-fourths of them could not do so.

Mr. OVERMAN. A large percentage of them.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Is the Senator accurately informed that it was three-fourths of them?

Mr. OVERMAN. That is just my opinion. I know in those days very few men were educated. They had no way to educate the people, and I doubt whether they were educated. If you take the census about that time and on down, you will find a much greater percentage of men than there are now who could not read and write. They had no schools, they had no educational funds, and what they learned was learned at their own homes. Some men were able to send for and bring in teachers to instruct their children, but as a rule they had no education.

Mr. POINDEXTER. My information is that the Scotch-Irish settlers of the West, who composed very largely the American Army in the Battle of Kings Mountain, carried their Bibles with them and knew how to read from the Bible. The first thing they did when they formed a colony in the valley of Virginia and in the valleys farther west was to establish a school and a meetinghouse and build a church. There never was a people so devoted to education as the people who composed that army and gained that battle, which the Senator very truly says lifted the American cause from the despair which was settling over it and turned the tide toward the final victorious outcome of the war for independence. I am inclined to think the Senator rather overestimates the amount of illiteracy.

Mr. OVERMAN. I agree that the Scotch-Irish, and I know it is so, because we have Scotch-Irish in my State, had their little schoolhouses and their meetinghouses. The Presbyterians especially, the Covenanters, had their little meetinghouses that would accommodate the particular settlement, but, as a rule, they had no education and no school buildings. All the education they got was at home or at the little church or parochial schools.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I think, as a matter of fact, the truth of the case is that the pioneers of that early day set an example which their descendants of this day might very well imitate, but which we have not kept up.

Mr. OVERMAN. I fully agree to that.

Mr. POINDEXTER. This generation has not kept up with the standard as to education and as to other things, I might say, in all respect, that was set them.

Mr. OVERMAN. As to certain communities—I am not speaking generally—what the people learned was from the pulpit, from the old Baptist and Methodist preachers, the itinerants who went around with their saddlebags and taught them love of country and love of God. So far as reading and writing are concerned, I to-day know plenty of good men who can neither read nor write, and yet they are prominent citizens, who love this country just as much as do I or any other man. They are true Americans. They can sit down and talk with one on the tariff and other great questions, notwithstanding they can neither read nor write. When I was practicing law I have had men come into my office who could neither read nor write and yet who were men of property, of character, and of standing. That situation was one reason why the so-called "grandfather clause" was adopted in the constitutions of Southern States. The Negro who had just been set free knew nothing about government, knew nothing about this country, while the American white men were taught those things; they were taught them upon the stump; they were taught them from the pulpit; they were taught them in the little parochial schools; and, even though they could neither read nor write, they understood government and understood liberty. Of course, they had to be able to do so in order to be worthy of voting at all. That was really the foundation of the "grandfather clause"; it was to protect that class of men that the "grandfather clause," subsequently declared to be unconstitutional, was placed in the constitutions of Southern States.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, not having been at the battle to which the Senator from North Carolina refers, I am not able to settle this controverted historical question; but, if the Senator from North Carolina is correct, and the warriors referred to who performed such great service were unable to read and write, I am sure the battle would not have been lost if they had been able to read and write.

Mr. President, I have taken enough time on this matter, and I am now going to close by asking that the letter which I send to the desk on this subject from Secretary Lane may be read by the Secretary.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Secretary will read the letter.

The Assistant Secretary read as follows:

THE SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, January 14, 1920.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I am glad to know that there is so fair a promise for your Americanization bill at this session. There is, I believe, more general solicitude for such a measure than for any other pending piece of legislation. We are receiving from 100 to 200 letters a day touching all phases of this matter, and have not even the help to answer these letters. The men whom we had in this work have gone to other employment, drifted away unwillingly, after sacrificing much to carry on this work, and whether we can ever again get men of equal devotion and capacity is a question.

The Nation is conscience stricken—that is the plain meaning of the letters and editorials which I get. We have assumed that with our great school systems and our far-reaching newspaper and magazine press everyone could read, and that by some process of absorption all became indoctrinated with the ideas which are fundamental in our national life. Teachers and social workers and business men have for years shouted facts at us to prove that we had millions of children who could not read, millions of men and women who had no means of access to the thought and impulse of our country, and who were poor workers and poorer citizens because of their ignorance, a menace to themselves and to their neighbors. But to these facts we were deaf. The figures and studies made by the Bureau of Education would not be listened to. Census figures were denied. It was not until the draft came that we were made to listen. And then there was revealed a picture of illiterate helplessness which has made us ashamed of our boastings and our lethargic indifference.

If democracy is a thing worth while fighting for across the sea, it is surely worth while fighting for in America. And I am seriously of the view that the policy of disregard which has obtained as to the education of those who come to us from abroad and of those who are born here is one that threatens the very institutions of our country. Every ignorant brain is a nesting place for the germs of malevolent discontent. The ears of all are ever open to those who tell them of their wrongs. And if they have no way of knowing what rights and what opportunities they have in a democracy, why should we be surprised if they believe what they are told and worship the god of force as their savior? There can be no danger to a democracy excepting the danger of stupidity, and there can be no growth in a democracy excepting through the spread of intelligence. The strength of a nation is not in the number of its people but in their knowledge. It is idle, therefore, to say to a people, "This is the best of all lands, wherein men have their largest chance and may realize every rational hope," if they have no way of knowing what other lands are like and have no standards by which to measure their own fortunes or their own delinquencies.

The problem challenges our fears, but there is a still nobler challenge. Our duty to those who are of us and our pride in the value of the American as a man call on us imperiously to give those who have been unfortunate an opportunity to grow; they must have a fairer chance. The first step is to give them the use of our language. The second step is to give them a knowledge of our institutions, the experiences out of which they have grown, and the benefits they have been to us and may continue to be if wisely used. This is the groundwork of Americanization. And afterwards will come real loyalty, which never can be compelled but must be won.

Wishing you early success, believe me,

Cordially, yours,

FRANKLIN K. LANE.

Hon. WILLIAM S. KENYON,
United States Senate.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I believe intensely in public education; I believe in the obligation of communities, the States, and the Nation to carry the responsibility of the education of all the children and the responsibility of furnishing, even to those who have passed 21 years of age, an opportunity for the acquirement of a common-school education. In most of the States the fund provided for public schools comes from the localities and from the State generally, the State contributing a portion, which is distributed throughout the entire State, and the localities supplementing that portion by taxation of the people particularly to be affected, the principle being recognized that, while the particular school in a county or a municipality takes care of the children of that county or municipality, the people of the entire State have a responsibility in the educational work in each locality. So the State as well as the locality makes a contribution.

Mr. President, I believe in extending that principle just one step further. I recognize a national responsibility for education, and I believe that the Nation may well contribute to aid the States and the localities in strengthening their schools, improving the qualifications of their teachers, and seeing to it that every child in our broad land shall have an opportunity at least for a fair common-school education. There is no purpose for which taxation is used that brings, in my judgment, such rich returns as the taxes paid to train the children of our country. Taxation for education is the contribution of wealth to the welfare of mankind.

Believing that it is proper for the National Government to contribute something to the work of the States and the localities for educational purposes, I come to consider this bill. Whenever the suggestion of such a contribution is made it is for the Congress to consider the particular purpose and determine whether it is meritorious and whether the purpose and the results to be accomplished justify the proposed contribution from the National Treasury.

What are the educational purposes of this bill? They are two: First, a contribution to the States to aid in removing illiteracy—that is to say, lack of capacity to read and to write; and, second, a contribution to the States to remove the presence of those who can not speak English or read or write English. I will dwell upon the last purpose first.

Let me say that contributions of the National Government to educational work in the United States have been valuable not alone on account of the funds contributed but on account of the inspiration for active work they have produced. They have been accompanied with the requirement that the States should duplicate the amount given them from the National Treasury. In every instance where there have been such contributions the States have much more than equaled the amount contributed from the National Treasury. The inspiration of the national leadership has led to enthusiastic State support.

It is surprising that the States have neglected heretofore the question of Americanizing those who live within their borders. I favor the compulsory clause in this bill. I should be glad to see each State in the Union require those who can not speak English, and who have come here to stay, to attend an English school for 200 hours each year and learn how to speak English.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, the Senator surely would not extend that to the native-born citizen, 45 years old, would he?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. They already speak English and it does not apply to them at all. I am speaking now of those who can not speak English. I treat the illiteracy problem separately. They stand in two classes as reached by this bill.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, if I understood the Senator from North Carolina correctly, he stated that all of the native born speak English. As a matter of fact, they do not. There are a good many localities in which the native born speak some foreign tongue.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Then, Mr. President, I would have those native born included. I am not limiting it to native-born persons or those of foreign birth. I would require, everywhere in the United States, of those who live here and intend to stay here, 200 hours a year learning English. I am opposed to keeping in the United States permanently, if we can prevent it, a class of people who do not speak English.

Mr. OVERMAN. I agree with the Senator on that.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I am opposed to a population that does not become homogeneous; and you can not have a homogeneous population unless they all speak English, and the proper thing to do is to give them a chance to learn. I like the compulsory provision in this bill which declares that money will not be contributed from the National Treasury to the State unless the State requires, by legislation, 200 hours a year of those who can not speak English until they learn to speak English.

Let us think about it. In this country, where English is the language, where American papers are all published in English, how can a resident become a real part of the community, know what is going on in the community, understand the aspirations of the community, and free himself from deception and misleading influences unless he can speak English?

My thoughts turn to the testimony we had growing out of the recent steel strike, where communities spoke a foreign language, where we had found that they had been misled into entering upon the strike, in many instances, upon the view taught to them that if they would take part in the strike, no matter how good the wages and existing conditions might be, the whole property was to be distributed among the strikers; and they had been told that in foreign languages. They could not talk English. They could not read a paper published in the English language. They received this false instruction, due to their ignorance.

I believe we will be rendering a patriotic service if we inspire every State in the Union to require 200 hours a year of schooling for anyone who can not speak English, who has come here to stay. I hope the chairman of the committee will prepare an amendment which will carefully guard against putting this requirement upon those who come here for business as representatives of foreign business interests, and who are here simply in a transitory way; but those who come here and engage in work in our industries, those who come here to settle and to stay, should be required to learn English.

Why, Mr. President, one company at Camp Gordon, in the Eighty-second Division, had men in it speaking 20 different languages, I am told, and it was necessary to teach them to drill by signs.

Mr. OVERMAN. They could speak every language except their own?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Every language except English. No thoughtful man can fail to realize that such a condition is a menace to our country. I believe in placing oppression upon no man; but I am not one of those who can find oppression in offering an opportunity to improve the mind and requiring its use.

In our hearings before the committee we had the Director of the Mining Bureau. He pointed out the fact that the lack of knowledge of the English language caused deaths in our mining enterprises in the United States in large numbers, and that more than half the casualties were due to the lack of knowledge of English. He called attention to the fact that the economic loss caused by these deaths in the mines alone far exceeded the entire amount of this proposed appropriation.

The only reason that there has not been an intense feeling on this subject in the country has been that we are all so busy that we do not pay attention to what is going on unless it immediately concerns us. What I would do would be to awake a consciousness, if I can, that this lack of capacity for English speaking is a subject which immediately concerns us and concerns every citizen of the United States.

I think there is no question that the most powerful means of stopping the spread of unsound doctrine in the United States, the spread of I. W. W.'s and Bolshevists, is to give instruction in English to this mass of people and take them out from under dangerous influences. I would not allow a paper to be printed in a foreign language without the English translation alongside of it, and I have a bill to that effect pending before the Judiciary Committee, and providing further that at the end of five years they shall be printed in English alone. I believe in making this an English-speaking people and an English-reading people, a homogeneous American people.

It was suggested by the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT] that it was not necessary for all of a people to speak the same language in order to become patriotic and to be thoroughly serviceable to their country, and he illustrated his position by calling attention to conditions in Switzerland and in Belgium, especially in Belgium. The reason why his illustration is not applicable to us can be easily explained. In Belgium a portion of the country was originally German or German speaking, and a portion originally French speaking, and a portion originally Flemish speaking; and each one of those portions has its own language, which all of the people in that portion of Belgium speak; and all the best thought of the French portion or the Flemish portion speak French or speak Flemish. That is not the case with us. Ours is an English-speaking, English-writing, English-publishing country throughout. These people who come here speaking foreign languages do not come into a settlement where the business is conducted in a foreign language, where the government is conducted in a foreign language, where public affairs are administered in a foreign language. They must learn English to fit themselves for the opportunities that our country gives them; they must learn English to measure up to their full responsibilities as citizens; and we should give them the opportunity to help them measure up to both responsibilities and to measure up to what they can accomplish for themselves as a part of our citizenry with such opportunities.

This bill requires the States receiving the funds to make compulsory the attendance upon schools, for 200 hours during the year, of all who can not speak English up to 45 years of age. It is worth while to them up to 45 to learn. It is worth while to us that below that age they should be required to learn. It is worth the contribution that the Treasury of the United States makes to arouse the States to the importance of giving the opportunity and of furnishing the knowledge.

When we come to the question of illiteracy an entirely different problem is involved. That part of the appropriation is not based upon lack of ability to speak English. It is lack of ability to read and write. It is to help give an opportunity to all to learn to read and write. The school limit does not exceed 21. The requirements to receive instruction cease at 21 years of age.

I have great respect for the mountaineers, for their courage and, in many ways, for their manliness. But, oh, how much more successful and better men they would have been if they had had some education! I know they are wonderful with a rifle, and we have brought them down and sent them through our schools and colleges and have found that with education their narrowness passed away and they have made splendid citizens. I would like to carry to every hillside from north Georgia to Vermont, through the hills and mountains that stretch along that entire territory, an opportunity for every child under 21 to learn to read and write. I am as fond of the mountains of North Carolina as the Senator from North Carolina is. Western North Carolina was the place of my birth, and it is because I love them that I am glad to vote that the Nation will take an interest, along with the States, to help remove illiteracy. Give them a chance.

Of course, the chief illiteracy in the Southern States is among the negroes. The property owners are contributing liberally and are earnestly seeking to remove illiteracy among the negroes. This provision will go to Massachusetts and Georgia about in the same way—Massachusetts with her foreign born and some native illiterates——

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Not many.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Georgia with some mountaineers, native white illiterates, and a good many negroes. The Senator from Massachusetts says not many in Massachusetts. I grant that. The greatest educator this country ever produced, the man who I think has contributed more to the welfare of his country than any other man produced in New England, was Horace Mann.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I agree with the Senator.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I would rather have done what Howard Mann did for the human race than what Daniel Webster did. And when I make that statement, I will explain my view about legislation of this sort. I know it is good. I know it will serve our people and benefit them. Many pieces of legislation come before us on which I vote with some doubt. But when I help give a better chance to the average man to prepare him to do something for himself; when I help give a better chance to the average child to prepare for the battle of life, to prepare for the pleasures and the burdens of life, I know I am doing good. It is in that spirit that I support this bill.

There are some amendments I would like to see made to it. I think we give a little too much power to the Secretary of the Interior. This line of legislation has been built up upon the theory that Government contribution is wise, leaving the execution to the States, and only retaining authority in the National Government to see that the fund was used by the States in the way that the bill providing for the appropriation contemplated.

I think, on page 2, line 13, it might be well to change "periodicals" to "literature."

I think, on line 19, the same page, the word "board" is perhaps improperly used, as I doubt the existence of any board to which that particular subject should be referred.

Mr. KENYON. Yes, Mr. President, that is clearly a mistake.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I am simply suggesting these criticisms. They will go into the RECORD for the use of the Senator from Iowa, as he sees fit.

Mr. KENYON. I am very much obliged to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I have an engagement outside of the city for Monday that will take me away from Washington this afternoon at half-past 3, and for that reason I will not be able to present the amendments myself.

On page 4, line 7, beginning with the word "subject," I believe we might well omit "subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior." I think that is unnecessary.

On the same page, I think subdivision (g), beginning at line 13 and ending at line 17, is unnecessary.

Mr. OVERMAN. How about subdivision (h)?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. That is all right, though I think it goes more into detail than is really necessary. I believe that the State authority should report the plan to the Secretary of the Interior and obtain his approval to get the money. Then the Secretary of the Interior should see by the reports from the States that the money is properly used.

On page 5, line 5, I think we might omit "and cause such cooperation with the Secretary of the Interior as herein provided." What I have in view is to simply require the State authorities to furnish their plans for the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, leaving them freedom of execution, but giving the Secretary of the Interior authority to judge from the reports they make annually to him that the money is being used by the State authorities to carry out the purposes intended.

I want to say, Mr. President, that I do not believe any proposed measure has attracted more national attention than the provisions of this bill, calling for national appropriation to stimulate Americanization. All over the country the press and private citizens at public meetings have expressed approval of this national stimulant to Americanizing our population.

I have here extracts from many newspapers that were presented at the hearings before the committee. Over the entire country the suggestion met the heartiest and most favorable response. I am going to ask that extracts from editorials in many papers be printed at the close of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Why this enthusiastic favorable response? Because the people of the United States ask to be one people, a homogeneous people; because, while they have welcomed immigrants, they have wished those immigrants to be part and parcel of their country, they have wished them to have the broadest opportunities to develop into the best American citizens possible, and they are conscious in every locality where there are groups of those who can not speak English that it is a handicap to progress and a menace.

I feel it intensely myself. We have built our great country by devotion to its institutions. Unless checked in some way, there will be quite an immigration in the next few years to the United States. I supported the literacy test in the immigration bill passed a couple of years ago. I believe that we ought to start at once to require everyone who comes here to stay or comes here to engage in local occupation, other than the mere representation of a foreign business, to learn English.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I should like to get the Senator's view on this. Complaint is made that those who come here for business purposes in the next few years, who might not understand the English language and might be illiterate, would come under the provisions of this bill. I think we all agree that we do not mean to put them under the bill. How does the Senator feel about those who come here to work, we will say, in the factories or in the mines, who intend to go back as soon as they have made enough money?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. If they come here to work in the mines and stay over six months, they ought to go to these schools and learn English.

Mr. KENYON. I am wondering just how the Senator would differentiate in the language between those who come for business purposes and are going back and those who come merely for work and intend to go back. That is troubling me somewhat.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It might be distinguished as between those who come here to seek local employment and those who come here as the representatives of interests at home for a temporary stay. If they come here to go to work in a local enterprise, their salaries are paid locally, they are local employees, and they ought to learn English. If they come here to work in the local enterprise, intending eventually to go home, they could stay here long enough to become a menace and do harm.

Mr. KENYON. Then, as I understand the Senator, he would draw the line, whether it be business or whether it be work, between those who come here and really are employed somewhere else and those who come here and take employment here.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I would. If it is a foreign employment and they are here simply as visitors I would not require it. If they come here to engage locally in business with a local employment I would require them to learn English. I would do more; I would give them the benefit of learning it. I would give them the benefit and the help that would come to them from it.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Certainly.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I should like to have the Senator discuss the compulsory feature of the bill. Some suggestion has been made to the effect that we ought not to incorporate in the bill the compulsory use of the language. I have not heard all the Senator's argument, and perhaps he has already treated it, but it seems to me it ought to be pointed out that the Government primarily engages in the business of educating its citizens from a somewhat selfish purpose, namely, that of self-preservation; that the Government realizes that to preserve and expand and develop and to maintain the happiness and prosperity of its people it must have an educated citizenship, especially where our institutions give the same equal rights to all citizens, whatever their condition in life may be; and that if we feel it necessary to pass compulsory laws to compel children preparing for citizenship to seek an education we have for the very same reason, indeed for an additional reason because of the very large number of children, an object lesson in the spirit of self-education to educate the millions who are illiterate to become a part of our citizenship.

If the Senator has not already developed that phase of the subject, I should like to hear his views.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I agree thoroughly with the views expressed by the Senator from Massachusetts. I dwelt somewhat upon that subject before he came in. I began with the view that we have not only the right but the duty to give this instruction. This compulsory education or the compulsory use of these 200 hours a year is not really put upon them by the Congress. We simply say we are going to furnish the money to those States that do it. I do not think we can put it on them, but we certainly have the right to carry that provision as a part of the incident to the national contribution. I believe in it earnestly. I believe it is essential to our future, most important at any rate, that English be taught these people who come among us.

I can not too strongly express my conviction of the necessity for giving this instruction, the necessity for the protection of our own institutions, the necessity for the protection of local conditions, the necessity for the benefit of the very people themselves, a work that will serve our country, serve the localities, and bless those who are required to take advantage of it.

It is not my purpose, Mr. President, to make any extended remarks upon the bill. I leave the city this afternoon, and I desired to contribute an expression of my strong conviction that both features of the bill, of Americanization and of contribution toward the removal of illiteracy, are valuable and important, that they serve a national purpose.

Our people travel from State to State. It is of interest to all of the States that illiteracy should be removed from all parts of our country. It is intensely a matter of interest to all the States that we should have a homogeneous people, and that we should not nourish in our midst, and retain in our midst, classes of people who from their lack of knowledge of our language can not be assimilated as a part of our homogeneous population, who can not inform themselves of what is really taking place in their community, of the true relations which they bear to those with whom they are associated, who are left the ready victims of deception, who are left in a condition likely to make them dangerous residents instead of valued citizens.

APPENDIX.

EXHIBIT F.

PRESS COMMENT ON AMERICANIZATION AND THE IMPORTANCE OF THE AMERICANIZATION BILL.

[Oakland (Calif.) Tribune, Mar. 19.]

At this particular time no legislation can be of greater importance to the future welfare of the Nation.

[Saturday Evening Post, Apr. 12.]

A bill introduced in both Houses of Congress too late for action in the cluttered and jumbled session that expired March 4 proposes a national attack upon the national disgrace of illiteracy. With millions shut out from the great common medium of expression, for whom a President's proclamation or a village ordinance is so much Greek, whom the flux of events and opinions that shapes national life can not reach except indirectly or second hand, the melting pot obviously contains a huge chunk that does not blend very readily. That more than half the chunk is a native product makes it all the worse.

It is a problem that should have been vigorously attacked long ago. This bill proposes a Federal appropriation to be expended in conjunction with the States that conform to the education program laid down for the special purpose of reaching those unable to read English. It should be put near the top of the calendar of the new Congress and carried through without delay.

[New York (N. Y.) World, Feb. 16.]

Up to the beginning of the war an average of 1,000,000 immigrants a year arrived in the United States. In the natural order of things those of foreign speech, who predominated, tended more and more to group themselves in compact bodies which were virtually impervious to American ideas and American ways of thinking. They changed their place of residence merely, without being brought into active contact with conditions that would make them over into true Americans.

There are industrial centers not far from New York City that are wholly foreign. There are sections of this city that—except as the children through the schools and association with others of their age yield to change—are intensely alien.

To penetrate these barriers and open new avenues of communication with the people who live within them is no longer a task to be performed by individual effort. Americanization is a work that must be undertaken and directed on a scale so extensive that only through the cooperation of the States and the Federal Government can it be successfully carried out. It can not longer be neglected without serious harm to the life and welfare of the Nation.

[Portland (Oreg.) Journal, Apr. 25.]

Secretary Lane had a splendid bill before the late Congress proposing compulsory instruction of all under 21 in the English language and other branches, including American ideals and government. It died on the calendar because Congress seemed interested more in peanut politics than in national welfare. The measure should be introduced at the coming special session, and public sentiment should compel members to drive it through and apply it to the country's school system. "What you want in the Nation you must put into your schools," said Napoleon Bonaparte. And that grim man never uttered a sterner truth. More than 8,500,000 persons over 10 years old in the United States can not read an American newspaper.

[Saginaw (Mich.) News, May 8.]

Now that Congress is called in special session by President Wilson, if it undertakes to pass at as early a date as possible the deferred Smith-Bankhead Americanization bill, it will have done a great deal to help solve the disturbing problem created by our having so many foreigners who have no acquaintance whatever with the common language of the country. Naturally, these people are shut away from other Americans and are easy prey for the rascally agitators who talk to them in their own tongue and who lead them into the byways and highways of anarchy, especially when, as is too frequent, these poor foreigners are wholly illiterate. It is the purpose of the Smith-Bankhead bill to help their Americanization by providing ways and means, through cooperation of Federal and State Governments, to teach them the English language.

[Atlanta (Ga.) Georgian, Apr. 29.]

The demand for just such remedial legislation and expenditure is plain and unmistakable. All Members of either House in the new Congress should regard the matter as emergent and place the measure on the statute books without cavil or delay.

[Houston (Tex.) Post.]

So long as there are millions of people in America who are either indifferent or hostile to our institutions and our welfare, they constitute a dangerous element. Selfish as well as altruistic motives demand a widespread and far-reaching attempt to remove this menace by Americanizing the individual aliens.

[Philadelphia (Pa.) North American, Mar. 15.]

We have some 80,000,000 persons over 10 in this country. The percentage shown by the Army tests would give us 20,000,000 who, because of illiteracy or inability to speak or read our language, are hindering not only our national but their individual progress and welfare. Even by applying a mean between the census ratio and that of the recent camp investigation, we would have 13,000,000. To avoid exaggeration we will use the latter figure.

Experts agree that nearly any person who can use mind as well as body in work can earn at least $5 a week more than the mere drudge. At this rate the 13,000,000 would add a total of $3,370,000,000 to their annual earnings. Make allowance for 3,000,000 of these on the ground of extreme youth or mental or physical disability, and still there is shown an annual increase of $2,600,000,000 in earning power—far more than enough to pay the interest on our total war debt and amortise it as well. In every way illiteracy is the foe of representative government. It is the foe of prosperity, the arch stifler of ideals. It endangers the purpose, the power, and the profits of freedom.

With democracy at this moment menaced by false doctrines, which feed on illiteracy, we can not think of a more timely act of patriotism.

[Madison (Wis.) State Journal, Feb. 19.]

The Smith-Bankhead bill, with its appropriation of $5,000,000 this year and $12,000,000 next year and $12,500,000 a year until 1926, would seem to need little argument for its passage.

[Dayton (Ohio) News, Feb. 18.]

Can it be doubted that such a condition requires attention? No thoughtful American will be likely to hesitate over the nature of his answer to this question, nor is it probable that any patriotic citizen will doubt that something ought to be done at once to remedy that which must be acknowledged as a serious defect in our educational system.

[Cadillac (Mich.) News, Feb. 28.]

When the illiteracy of drafted men throughout the country showed a percentage that reached 24.6 conditions are such as to call for radical State measures, and if these are inadequate then the Federal Government might well inaugurate measures for improvement.

[Riverside (Calif.) Enterprise, May 21.]

There is only one weapon with which to fight off this peril, and that is publicity. By a liberal use of truth we definitely checked the imperial liars, but did not permanently squelch them. They failed to surrender when the German Army and Navy did, and they are still at work nursing the sparks of bolshevism all over the world. They are yet to be definitely and decisively trounced, but we have found the instrument to do it with in this country. It is some more of the same remedy to be administered by the proposed Smith-Bankhead Americanization bill. This measure proposes to educate every resident of America to read English.

The bill is well drawn. It provides that a maximum of $12,500,000 a year may be spent by the Government for salaries of teachers to educate illiterates. The money is to be hung up as a sort of prize for States, which must match their allotment with an equal amount, and must pass State laws making attendance of illiterate minors compulsory for at least 200 hours a year or until the pupils of these night or special schools reach the third grade. The bill has the support of the Department of the Interior and its Bureau of Education.

We have always said that education was the foundation of democracy, and it is; and here is the opportunity to cement every loose joint in our national foundation—the chance to make this the most intelligent Nation in the world.

[Union (N. J.) Hudson Dispatch, Apr. 23.]

The Americanization bill will undoubtedly come up again at the next session, and it will be of vital importance that some vital plan be put into effect if the results of the war are not to be lost. If Americans are going to get back to their peace pursuits and forget all about the lessons that the war has taught, and which should be put into practice, then this Americanization bill may be lost in the shuffle.

The German-speaking element is already reviving its vereins and bunds and klatsches, and the peace articles are not yet signed.

It is of vast importance that the Americanization bill is passed and that its provisions for Americanizing foreign-born citizens are put into force.

[Muskogee (Okla.) Phoenix, Apr. 27.]

This Republic assumes that all the voters are intelligent and patriotic. No longer can our institutions be carried on by illiterate men. The greatest task that now confronts the American people is the Americanization of 20,000,000 illiterates.

[The Fourth Estate (New York), May 17.]

As pointed out in the columns of the Fourth Estate several times in the last few months the Americanization bill, which failed of passage in the closing days of the last Congress, is bound to be a live issue in the early days of the coming session of our national legislators.

The measure may be changed somewhat from the former draft, but if drawn substantially along the same lines as before it surely should receive the support of the newspaper publishers. In fact, this support is needed to arouse the voters as a body to the point of demanding legislation. It's a case where the press can perform an educational work that will ultimately result in great benefit to the country.

As a safeguard against bolshevism, against any part of propaganda that feeds on illiteracy and ignorance, against any of the forces of darkness and superstition, this measure, if enacted, will be found in the front rank.

The proposed bill will let the light in on dark places, and the extent and numbers of these dark places is simply astounding when the subject is studied.

[Tampa (Fla.) Tribune, Feb. 18.]

We trust that this bill may become a part of the law of the land, because of the broadening effect it will have on the intellect of that great body of men and women who now think only in infinitesimals of reasoning and who through ignorance and foreign hamperings know nothing of the institutions of this country in which they live.

The passage of this bill will, it seems most probable, raise the morale of a great percentage of our people and will strengthen the Nation through making strong the individual.

[Astoria (Oreg.) Budget, Jan. 9.]

If we want people who will stand up for American ideas through all the social changes that may be impending, we must make it easy for American ideas to get into their minds.

[Huntington (Pa.) Journal, Mar. 3.]

The mad dog that is running amuck in the mining industry to-day is the foreign born from the non-English-speaking races who does not know the English language and who in a majority of instances is so ignorant that he doesn't know how to read or write even in his own language.

[Great Falls (Mont.) Tribune, May 21.]

Before men and women can become valuable citizens they must be able to understand the language of their own country, and they must have facilities for keeping themselves informed as to what is going on here and elsewhere in the world. The Smith-Bankhead bill should be passed.

[Jacksonville (Fla.) Times-Union, Apr. 28.]

In a recent publication it has been set forth that "the non-English-speaking persons in this country outnumber all the inhabitants of Connecticut, Florida, Nevada, Wyoming, Delaware, Arizona, Idaho, Mississippi, Vermont, Rhode Island, North and South Dakota, Oregon, Maine, and Washington combined, and that they could outvote the combined population of New York, Chicago, and Philadelphia, or any State in the Union except New York.

This is a matter of serious concern. It is not so evident in Florida as in other States in the Union where the number of people unable to speak or read English is alarmingly numerous. But as injury to one does harm to all, so a large and predominating foreign-speaking population in any State is a menace to every other State of the Union. Americanization to the extent of being able to read and speak English is commendable from every viewpoint.

[New York (N. Y.) Globe, Mar. 12.]

No more powerful argument for the need of the education in English the lost Smith-Bankhead bill would have provided for immigrants has been uttered than the Lamar disclosures before the Senate propaganda committee this week. Nearly 16 per cent of the residents of Passaic, on the threshold of New York, know nothing of the language of this country. Upon the credulity of their ignorance anarchism feeds. Out of the squalor of European anarchy come half-crazed zealots, followers of mad doctrines. We pay no attention to their propaganda in these papers until trouble arises, some authority makes translations, and such extracts are made public as Mr. Lamar read to the Senators Monday. We commend the Lamar revelations to the prayerful study of the gentlemen of Congress who allowed the bill to become lost in the shuffle.

[Pittsburgh (Pa.) Post, Mar. 5.]

The Army and Navy Journal says the soldier's lack of education "was the cause of a very general depression of spirits among Regular Army officers at times." When they found it a matter of the greatest difficulty in many companies, the Journal continues, to select men who were of sufficient education to be squad leaders, the burden of instructing even so small a unit as a company grew almost unbearable.

The Army has reacted to the situation by making plans for establishing schools at every divisional camp in America and overseas.

May the figures shame Congress and the Nation into action which will wipe out illiteracy in the civil population also.

[Oswego (N. Y.) Times, Apr. 18.]

The Americanization bill, so called, which was introduced in the last Congress, died when Congress adjourned, but will be reintroduced with the convening of the new Congress.

The idea underlying the measure is that any person with sufficient knowledge of the English language and sufficient education and ability to use his mind as well as his body can earn at least $5 a week more than a mere undereducational drudge. What a vast addition to the resources of the country would come by the addition of $5 a week to the value or earning power of these thirteen millions!

[Baker City (Oreg.) Herald, Mar. 19.]

Into the pool of violent controversy over foreign-language instruction some one casts this little pebble: "Instead of spending so much energy against the foreign languages, why not spend some of it to enforce the teaching of English?" It is not a bad idea. It is intelligent, constructive activity which produces results. The mere elimination of foreign-language instruction is not enough. It is not even vitally necessary if instruction in the English language is properly carried on, coupled with the doctrine of true Americanism.

[Evanston (Ill.) News, Apr. 2.]

Education is the foundation stone upon which real Americanization must be built. It covers the alien, to whom English is a foreign tongue, and it covers the American of four or five generations who has only a meager acquaintance with the spoken language and none at all with the written word in English.

[Los Angeles (Calif.) Examiner, Apr. 24.]

It is ignorance that fertilizes the soil for alien anarchists to cultivate with their sinister and mad theories, sophistries, and designs. The flaming sword of Americanization and education alone is, or ever will be, able to attack and slaughter this demon of destruction.

[Lewiston (Me.) Journal, Apr. 1.]

Some folks have an idea that Americanization, so much on the tongue just now, is a problem which deals almost wholly with our cities and the foreign-born element in those cities. This notion receives a rude shock in face of the fact that two and a half million farmers can not read or write. They are beyond the reach of every effort of the Federal or State agricultural departments to educate them to better methods of farming. They can not read the newspapers. They are therefore not intelligent voters; in fact, they are not thorough Americans. The war showed the error in the census figures. It had been claimed that there was only 8 per cent of illiteracy in this country. The draft statistics have raised this estimate to over 24 per cent, or one-fourth of the population. Illiteracy is the great peril of true democracy, a drag on the wheels of progress, an unforgivable condition, because it can be remedied by the application of time and thought and money to Americanizing Americans.

[Eureka (Calif.) Standard, May 30.]

The Americanization bill was introduced in the last Congress by Senator HOKE SMITH and Representative BANKHEAD. It was favorably reported by the committees in both Houses to which it was referred, but the adjournment came before it became a law.

Public opinion will be a strong factor in making it a law. Action will be taken during the present session of Congress, and all persons interested in education and, more particularly, in the creation of a great body of comprehending citizens, native born or otherwise, should lose no opportunity in making manifest their interest.

The bill provides for a Federal appropriation of $12,500,000 per year for the payment of teachers in the various States, the teachers to be employed for training illiterates in the fundamentals. This aid will be of great benefit to striving and ambitious communities. It should be secured. The way to accomplish this is to manifest interest and manifest it without careless delay.

[Elizabeth (N. J.) Times, May 6.]

The new Congress should see that the bill is placed near the top of the calendar of proposed legislation, so that it may be carried through without delay.

[Pasadena (Calif.) Star News, Mar. 26.]

Thoughtful loyalists realize that the masses of foreigners in this country must be transformed in spirit—made into Americans in sympathies and purposes—or else they will be a standing menace to the peace and welfare of the land.

[Peoria (Ill.) Journal, Apr. 17.]

One of the serious failures of the last Congress was the failure of this exceptional bill to be made into a law. At this time, perhaps more than any other time in all our history, there are false doctrines and false prophets that depend upon illiteracy for their followers. If illiteracy were removed or lessoned materially, if those who know nothing of the English language could be taught to read, then the dangers that come with the false doctrines to-day would be minimized and our national and social and industrial progress would be developed more rapidly and more sanely.

The Americanization bill will be reintroduced at the next Congress session. It deserves the support of those people who want America to be the real leader in the world and of those people who want to see the false doctrines defeated and destroyed for all time.

[Bluefield (W. Va.) Telegraph, Mar. 8.]

Means should be adopted to Americanize the aliens who are here and remain alien and foreign because they are in a foreign environment and can not speak or read our language, and that method should be applied more vigorously still to the newly arrived.

[Hackensack (N. J.) Record, Mar. 27.]

Educators and public officials are realizing more and more that the simple banning of German or any other language is not enough to solve the problems created by our foreign population. Above everything else foreign-born residents must learn how to speak and read our language. Only so will they be able to understand what is going on about them and to take an intelligent interest in their prospects as American citizens.

[Butte (Mont.) Miner, Apr. 20.]

The intention of the Smith-Bankhead bill is to appropriate money to be used in cooperation with the various States for the maintenance of schools for teaching these foreigners the English language and American principles.

In times past the American people have felt little responsibility for these aliens in their midst and have treated them upon the theory that they are not their brothers' keepers.

This is a false doctrine, for if these people are to be invited here, they should be put in a position to make the most out of their lives and they should be converted into American citizens.

In the past the only element that seems to have interested itself in these aliens have been the I. W. W. outfit, which has maintained a propaganda among them and converted them into red socialists wherever it could do so.

It is rather a disgrace to the American people that the only helping hand, which actually has been a detrimental one, should have been extended by this anarchistical organization.

Undoubtedly more discriminating immigration laws are needed in this country, but as long as any of those of foreign nationality are invited to make their home here it is the duty of this Government and its people to take an interest in these aliens and assist them to become good and loyal American citizens.

This is not only due to these foreigners, but it is a matter of self-protection to the Nation itself.

[Minneapolis (Minn.) Journal, Apr. 5.]

There is urgent demand for immediate Federal aid to all State and other efforts to teach English, not only to children of alien birth, but to illiterate adults. It is high time that we began our Americanization movement at the very fountainhead by teaching children and foreign-born illiterates how to read and speak English and thus prepare them for "successful living and intelligent American citizenship."

[New York Financial American, Apr. 29.]

The Smith-Bankhead bill, which was brushed aside in mêlée attending the adjournment of the recent Congress, could aid in making a right start. Employers generally did not recognize in it the importance it bore to their problem. With a threatened labor shortage, they no doubt will insist upon its passage by the next Congress.

[Albany (N. Y.) Times-Union, May 26.]

Americanization is one of the big problems of the hour. It is a problem the solution of which will have a most important bearing upon the future of the American Nation.

[New Orleans (La.) Lumber Trade Journal, Apr. 15.]

One of the important things which the last session of Congress left undone was to pass the bill introduced in the Senate by Senator HOKE SMITH of Georgia, and in the House by Representative W. B. BANKHEAD, commonly referred to as the Smith-Bankhead Americanization bill.

The inevitable result of ignorance is inefficiency, and as these illiterates are naturally laborers the result is a serious loss of effectiveness in the industries of the country, not only because of the handicap of ignorance in the performance of the work actually done, but in its bar to the achievement of better things. Increased efficiency works more economical productiveness but greater earning power on the part of labor and greater demand for commodities, the two conditions balancing each other and tending to better conditions for both capital and labor.

[Kansas City (Mo.) Journal, Apr. 23.]

When legislative mortality cluttered up the floors of the last Congress with defunct measures, there was real sadness among the friends of the Smith-Bankhead Americanization bill, which occupied a conspicuous place in the so-called log jam in the expiring days of the session. As was the case with several other meritorious measures, this bill had no real opposition in Congress or out of it, although, of course, the American Bolshevists and other anarchistic groups did not favor it. But certain influences were at work that threatened to defeat the idea of Americanization of Americans, and those influences are perfectly understood.

This bill will be reintroduced, as it should be, at the earliest opportunity, and every true American citizen ought to take a personal interest in securing its passage.

[Utica (N. Y.) Observer, June 2.]

The whole problem * * * arises out of the past neglect of the Republic. We have not been careful about the material for citizenship, either in that accepted from foreign shores or about the training of that born here. The country heretofore has been thinking very much about building railroads and factories and only incidentally about molding a great race of people.

[Practical Farmer (Philadelphia, Pa.), March, 1919.]

Ignorance is the cause of the majority of national calamities, just as it is the cause of so many failures in the individual. National safety lies largely in education; Bolshevism and a score of other dangerous

"isms" can not make much headway against a widespread intelligence. We think with pride of our own as an educated nation, and, in comparison with some other nations, doubtless we are justified; but our pride gets a jolt when we are told by our Department of the Interior that there are eight and a half millions of native illiterates and non-English speaking people in this enlightened land of ours who can not read an American newspaper. There's fruit for Bolshevism and other manias for you! There is a bill before Congress—the Smith-Bankhead Americanization bill—that seeks to meet this condition by appropriating certain amounts for the training of teachers and establishing a close cooperation between the State and Federal authorities to educate these people in our language, the fundamental principles of government and citizenship, and the elements of self-support and home making. We are for any act which will tend to remedy this woeful and really dangerous state of affairs. And the sooner we get action on it the better.

[New Haven (Conn.) Register, Apr. 17.]

To-day there are in this land of ours millions of citizens who can not read a newspaper, who know nothing of our institutions and laws, of the history of the country, of its past, present, or its future, except what they are told by word of mouth—by some one who speaks their language. All of these are not "foreigners"; the illiterates number in their ranks a surprising number of American born who have grown to manhood absolutely unable to distinguish their letters, to whom a Liberty loan poster makes its appeal through the picture and not through the printed matter, whose knowledge of the world to-day is confined to that gained by word of mouth. All of these, both native and foreign born, must be educated. The war taught us what danger there is in having alien colonies in our midst as well as the necessity for educating our own American born. The Smith-Bankhead Americanization bill was before Congress at its adjournment. It should be revived and passed by Congress at its coming session.

[Louisville (Ky.) Times, Apr. 26.]

The bill, as it is generally known, is a Federal aid measure for a country-wide fight against illiteracy, and rarely indeed has an appropriation bill of similar character been given so general support by the representative press of all quarters as has this one. Its deserving character has been recognized on all sides.

[Little Rock (Ark.) Gazette, Feb. 23.]

The Smith-Bankhead measure would provide the means, with State cooperation, for dealing with illiteracy in a comprehensive and effective way.

[Dallas (Tex.) News, Feb. 28.]

This bill should be passed promptly. It is an appropriate and expedient measure for the Federal Government's contribution to a need common to the several States and to the United States. It will, as it should, put squarely up to the States a great opportunity and an undoubted responsibility. It will challenge public spirit everywhere, and should call out the best constructive and cooperative ability and endeavor. Its benefits can not be measured in dollars and cents.

[Pasadena (Calif.) Star-News, Apr. 23.]

The United States expends hundreds of millions of dollars annually to maintain schools. Each and every State has an elaborate educational system. And yet the number of illiterates in this country runs into the millions. It is appalling. It is a scourge. It will menace the Nation and be a source of shame to it so long as this mental darkness prevails.

The blind person is a pitiable object. Stony indeed is the heart that does not melt in sympathy at sight of a sightless person. And yet fully as pitiable is the mental blindness which prevails so largely in this country. It not only is a peril and a shame to the Nation but it is rank injustice to the ignorant themselves. No one, child or adult, should be permitted to live in illiteracy in this country. Some measure of education should be forced upon, if necessary, every single human being mentally capable of receiving knowledge.

[Duluth (Minn.) Herald, Feb. 24.]

There is a bill in Congress, put into the Senate by Senator HOKE SMITH and into the House by Representative BANKHEAD, making provision for Government aid to States in teaching illiterates and aliens who know little or no English. That bill should pass, and its passage should not be delayed one day longer than is absolutely necessary.

[Gloucester (Mass.) Times, Mar. 26.]

Of every 1,000 persons living in this State, approximately 300 are foreign born, and of this number 150 come from non-English-speaking countries. And yet another fact, namely, that 62.5 per cent of the illiterates have lived in the State of Massachusetts for six years or more. The condition is an unhealthy one. There can be no unity in a country or State, no sharing of ideals, no common effort for the public good, unless people have a common language. For the sake of the future we are considering this matter none too soon. The process of education must begin at once and everywhere.

[Pittsburgh (Pa.) Chronicle Telegraph, Feb. 17.]

As the first comprehensive attempt to deal with this long-seated evil it is to be hoped the legislative measure will be given effect. The financial expenditure contemplated is modest compared with the magnitude of the benefits it is designed to accomplish.

[Johnstown (Pa.) Leader.]

From every humanitarian and business viewpoint it is of the utmost importance to all with messages educational or commercial, that these eight and a half millions be taught at least sufficiently to read a poster or a newspaper. Every user of the printed word, writer, manufacturer, merchant, and advertising man should immediately express his opinion of the importance and immediacy of this legislation to Congress.

[Newark (N. J.) News, Feb. 20.]

Government by the people calls for a literate people with the intelligence and fitness to govern themselves. Those who are unable to read or write are easily deceived, exploited, and misled. The Army's revelations are a challenge to the Nation to remove this illiteracy, both in justice to the unfortunates who can not read and write and in justice to the whole people.

[Pittsburgh (Pa.) Chronicle, Mar. 8.]

In the meantime, volunteer efforts are making in many localities to lessen the condition of ignorance which is a disgrace to our country. But splendid as is the spirit of service shown by these devoted teachers, it is evident that their volunteer and unsystematic efforts can not cope with the situation. Illiteracy is a nation-wide problem that must be approached in a comprehensive manner. The Federal and State Governments must get together. Kentucky and some other States have shown that the task of removing illiteracy is not impossible, but what they have done must be duplicated on a vastly larger scale.

[Portland (Oreg.) Oregonian, Mar. 1.]

Experts testified that literacy alone would add at least $5 a week to the productive power of the worker. The importance of this will be apparent even to the most casual observer. But even more important is the effect upon the standard of citizenship of such education as would qualify all adult residents of the country to be classified as literate by the measuring stick of the Surgeon General. It will be agreed that the census standard does not amount to much. One may barely scrawl his name without being able to do much else. But if every adult could read a newspaper (or other document) printed in English, and write a letter, also in English, a substantial beginning would be made toward the solution of a larger problem.

[Passaic (N. J.) Herald, Feb. 28.]

The Government of the United States has undertaken to wipe out illiteracy. It is an Americanization work. It is more than that; it is an economic, social, and national necessity.

[Boston (Mass.) Transcript, Mar. 17.]

The American purpose is not to reduce or restrict the opportunity or individual freedom of its people of alien birth. On the contrary, it is to enlarge opportunity for them by teaching them English and by familiarizing them with American citizenship and traditions to let down those barriers which now restrain them from making the most of their life in America. Of course the great civic object ahead is the welding of all elements of our population into an honestly homogeneous and loyal whole.

[Sacramento (Calif.) Evening Bee, Apr. 5.]

What is known as the Smith-Bankhead bill was before the last Congress, designed to promote the education of native illiterates, of persons unable to understand and write the English language, and of other residents of foreign birth; to provide for cooperation with the States in the education of such persons in the English language, the fundamental principles of government and citizenship, the elements of knowledge pertaining to self-support and home making, and in such other work as will assist in preparing such illiterates and foreign-born persons for successful living and intelligent American citizenship. The same measure will be reintroduced in the new Congress. Assuredly this is a meritorious measure and deserves favorable action by Congress. Whatever education may be given such persons, especially if exercising the franchise, is a benefit not only to them but to the States in which they live and to the Nation at large.

[Chattanooga (Tenn.) News, May 8.]

It is to be hoped that Congress will try to set a new record. There is every reason why it should do so. There are several appropriation measures pending which, at its usual rate of speed, will demand about all available time to June 30, the end of the fiscal year. There are also several constructive measures of large importance which ought to be enacted with little delay. They have been discussed to the point of nausea, and there is little excuse for further prolonged consideration. Among these are the water-power bill, the oil and coal land leasing bill, Secretary Lane's reclamation proposal, and the Smith-Bankhead Americanization education bill.

[Great Falls (Mont.) Tribune, Apr. 20.]

The Smith-Bankhead bill was prepared in consultation with Secretary Lane and with his approval. It was a well-thought-out plan to wipe this disgrace to our Republic out by a system of combined Federal and State action where it existed, and a strenuous effort to Americanize all foreign immigrants entering the country hereafter. It carried a yearly Federal appropriation to supplement State resources in the task of wiping out the dark spots of illiteracy wherever they existed.

We hope we may find this bill to wipe out illiteracy and Americanize foreigners who come to live in this country will be put on the national statute book.

[Boston (Mass.) Transcript, June 4.]

The barrier of language and education is a removable thing and behind it anarchy and discontent, hatred and revolution always lurk. Let this barrier be removed by thorough instruction and we shall have those people with us rather than against us, because they will have their full part in the common American heritage.

[Petersburg (Va.) Progress, Apr. 22.]

In every way illiteracy is the foe of representative government. It is the foe of prosperity, the arch stifler of ideals. It endangers the purpose, the power, and the profits of freedom.

This, in brief, is the substance of what every loyal American must regard as a necessary undertaking. To so regard it is a negative virtue, however, unless that view be vitalized into usefulness by an expression of opinion in the direction of your Congressman or Senator.

And with democracy at this moment menaced by the false doctrines which feed on illiteracy we can not think of a more timely act of patriotism.

When the new Congress meets the Smith-Bankhead bill should have full and free discussion and final passage for the uplift of American ideals and preservation of our civilization.

An illiterate proletariat is easy prey to the anarchist demagogue in the cities and an economic burden to the State that carries it.

The autocrats of old France believed that the ignorance of the common people was the safety of the throne. The French Revolution and the Reign of Terror was the reply. The Russian autocracy thought to thwart liberty by refusing the Russian moujik the right to read and write. The horror of bolshevism is the answer of the people. There is no safety in ignorance.

[Pittsburgh (Pa.) Sun, Mar. 10.]

The Smith-Bankhead Americanization bill affords a practical means of assimilation. It would give every resident a knowledge of the English tongue. That there is widespread ignorance of the national language is evident by startling statistics recently compiled. This ignorance has resulted in waste in industry, inefficiency in schools, and misunderstanding between native and foreign born. As a mere matter of economy, Americanization is advisable, for a large number of claims for compensation for injury or death of workers arise from accidents caused by illiteracy.

[Greenville (S. C.) News, Mar. 23.]

With education at the grasp of every man, with newspapers, magazines, and various other agencies at the disposal of all, is it not a disgraceful fact that one-fourth of our male population is illiterate? Can we lay claim to being a really great Nation in a really great age when such a condition prevails?

[Seattle (Wash.) Post-Intelligencer, Apr. 16.]

There are not only belts of foreign-born illiteracy in the country, but also sections in which the native-born illiteracy is very high, largely in the Southern States, where the negro population is considered in the computations. In the Northern States the negro population shows a much higher percentage of literacy. For instance, among Washington's negro population the ratio of illiterates is 39 per thousand, while in Louisiana the rate is 483 to the thousand.

Both from the need of inducing the capacity for intelligent judgment in all voters and to instill into the illiterate foreign born a conception of American principles and ability to read, write, and speak English, Secretary Lane's educational bill is highly desirable. We have the best form of government that experience has devised and its operation would be greatly improved if ignorance were eliminated in the electorate. Many of our troubles, perhaps most of them, arise from sheer ignorance and the ability of deliberate trouble makers to deceive the ignorant.

The educational bill was favorably reported by both committees of the last Congress. It will be introduced in the next session and should meet no serious opposition from any source.

[The Country Gentleman (Philadelphia, Pa.), Apr. 19.]

The bill is well drawn. We have always said that education was the foundation of democracy, and it is, and here is the opportunity to cement every loose joint in our national foundation—the chance to make this the most intelligent Nation in the world.

Just now the foundation is nothing to brag about. All told, we have 8,000,000 persons who fall within the two classes of illiterates, a number exceeding the total population of 15 States, or the combined population of Greater New York, Philadelphia, and Chicago. Such a multitude constitutes a national menace. They must be taught to read the language of America, for their protection and ours.

[Birmingham (Ala.) News, Apr. 17.]

It is not enough that Alabamians shall take it for granted that it (the Smith-Bankhead bill) will be dealt with favorably. It is for each and every Alabamian who loves light better than darkness to express that opinion in the direction of the Alabama delegation at Washington. Every Congressman should feel the pressure from Alabama in behalf of this beneficent legislation.

[San Francisco (Calif.) News Letter, Mar. 20.]

This country is a free country. We have welcomed the people of every nation to our shores. But this country owes a duty to itself which is paramount to being the asylum for the world.

There are millions of people in this country who can not speak the English language and who do not intend to learn the English language and who are raising their sons ant daughters to speak a foreign tongue. How can these people be depended upon to maintain American ideals? However much we may pity these people, however much we may desire to help them improve their condition and to get away from the oppression to which they were subjected in their own country, we, as Americans, must recognize it as our duty to consider America and its interests first. How can one know America and possess patriotism for America and, when necessity arises, fight for America unless that person understands the English language and has some knowledge of the principles of the Government that exists in this country?

[Cleveland (Ohio) Press, May 5.]

Americanization, including a knowledge of American civics and the common tongue, is the best preventive of such bolshevist, anti-American demonstrations as that in Cleveland on May 1.

Those who carried the red flag of disorder in the parade that day were chiefly un-Americanized Europeans. Few could understand our language and some could not read or write any language.

They were thinking in terms of the countries from which they came, not in terms of the country in which they make their living. They were acting as Europeans, not as Americans. This was inevitable, for, while some of them had lived here many years, few of them had been Americanized.

Their leaders may have understood, but the duped mass of their misled followers may not even now be able to understand why their flaunting of the red flag so aroused the resentment of loyal American citizens of Cleveland.

[Christian Science Monitor, Apr. 1.]

What shall be done to bring these millions to know the real America, the idea as well as the place? For the country that could not long endure half free half slave can hardly continue much longer two-thirds American and one-third European.

An answer has already been offered in the word "Americanization." It is a word that is on the tongues of social workers, Government agents, department chiefs, municipal officials, superintendents of community centers, and immigration experts; it is in the reviews and magazines, in the newspapers, in countless leaflets and pamphlets; it sums up the plans of hundreds of new groups and old organizations that have seen the need and are eager to meet it. Yet, in spite of all that is being done, in spite of all the publicity that has been accorded to the various phases of the problem since the enemy-alien disclosures of the war brought it prominently into view, the great body of American people as yet give no sign that they sense the situation.

[Springfield (Mass.) Union, Feb. 19.]

It is unfortunate that so needed a measure has been caught in a congestion of legislation in Congress at this time. It is likely to get lost in such a hurried shuffle, unless its friends become active. Being an unopposed measure, apparently little time would be consumed in its passage if other matters were not allowed to get in its way. The conditions are such that we can hardly afford to ignore or postpone any step to develop Americanism in this country. We are taking too easily the increasing proportion of people who are limited to foreign languages, which do not permit them to tap the springs of American life and ideals.

[Birmingham (Ala.) News, Feb. 14.]

The world must be made safe for democracy, even if Alabama reserved the right to keep her children in ignorance. Then, indeed, was the mother State humiliated. The thing was grotesque. Men who could neither read nor write were to be sent to foreign fields. They could not communicate with their home folks, simply because the intelligence of the State was too ignorant to know that they were committing a grievous crime in failing to give at least a rudimentary education to every boy and girl within Alabama's confines.

[Albany (N. Y.) Argus, Feb. 19.]

The Smith-Bankhead bill, for instance, proposes an appropriation of $12,500,000 a year until 1926 to be distributed among the States for educational purposes—dollar for dollar for like appropriations by the States. Experience has amply demonstrated in the last four years the need of some such action for national safety.

[New York (N. Y.) Times, Feb. 19.]

The country has many great and instant problems to settle. The construction and reconstruction of a sound American citizenship is not the least of them. Millions of citizens who can not read a newspaper, who know nothing of our Constitution and laws, of the past and present of the United States, except what they are told, perhaps by demagogues interested to mislead and deceive them—how can they take a useful, how can they be prevented from taking often a maleficent, part in government?

[Jacksonville (Fla.) Metropolis, Feb. 15.]

This measure should be passed without a dissenting vote; and if the people of the United States show their interest by urging support by their representatives, it will pass. This should be done by all means. America can not afford to have 8,000,000 illiterates.

[Successful Farming (Iowa), May, 1919.]

Something must be done in a national way to see that every person with the intent to make the United States home should not only be taught the English language but instructed in our national ideas. It is not fair that this burden fall only upon the communities wherein these foreigners live. Illiteracy is a national menace, no matter where the illiterates live. Foreign sections may be the breeding places of anarchy. Radicals come to our shores from Europe and put out literature in foreign languages tearing down our institutions and trying to put the ideas of bolshevism and its kin in their stead. The Smith-Bankhead bill, which was killed during the close of the last session of Congress, proposes a plan of national expenditure to combat these very conditions. This bill should be passed at the earliest possible moment.

[Ogden (Utah) Examiner, Mar. 3.]

The Americanization work is one of the greater tasks of the after-the-war period, and Secretary Lane's activity in that direction is of vital importance, worthy of support and approval by every person anxious to see proper national development and security.

[New York (N. Y.) Times, Apr. 20.]

The shocking and intolerable conditions that have been revealed must be stamped out. It is not merely that illiteracy is a reproach to any nation, but that the war has revealed it to be a positive menace to this one. Nor has the end of the war put an end to this demonstration; it is being renewed daily in disturbances of an anti-American character and in the hitherto unnecessary activity which has been imposed on the courts. One of the first acts of the new Congress should be to take up the Americanization bill and pass it.

[Macon (Ga.) Daily Telegraph, Feb. 28.]

We can not afford again to be so loose with our immigration, nor can we afford again to be so indifferent to the attitude and training or lack of training of the individual after he is admitted to our country. We shall have to see that he is properly educated in the plans and purposes of this Government, and that no effort is spared to determine, in so far as possible, that he is becoming a fit citizen.

[Elizabeth (N. J.) Times, May 21.]

The passing of legislation requiring the Americanization and fundamental training of all between the ages of 16 and 21 would be a big step in the right direction.

[Reno (Nev.) Journal, Apr. 22.]

Americanization of those Americans who are not Americans but who come here for the purpose of making it their adopted home is a matter which is receiving serious unofficial consideration. Officially the House Committee on Education reported favorably the Smith-Bankhead bill, which aims to reduce illiteracy to the minimum.

The only logical way to stamp out illiteracy is by compulsory education. Compulsion means that all laws to accomplish it shall be enforced, instead of being merely winked at, as is the case with so many of our laws.

The accomplishment of the end sought—Americanization and the elimination of illiteracy—lies in compulsory education laws enforced, not evaded, and the stopping of concentration and colonization of the foreign born.

[Redding (Calif.) Free Press, May 7.]

Franklin K. Lane, Secretary of the Interior, has been calling the attention of Congress to the fact that there are between five and six million grown-ups in this country who can not read or write English, and there is a bill before Congress to provide for a great national educational program to cure this fault. Public money would be well spent if it succeeded in doing away with illiteracy. Men who can not read and write do not get along well in our modern industrial system. They are condemned to the hardest labor and are paid the lowest wages. Besides, they are in greatest danger, because they can not read signs posted to warn them, nor do they readily understand instructions given them orally. And so it appears that lessening illiteracy would save lives, make better citizens, quiet discontent, increase earning capacity, make for greater efficiency, and lessen waste in industry. It commends itself as a national policy. One need not discuss whether English is the best language in the world; Americans must speak one language, and the only language which can be made universal in America is English. Education of illiterates is the first step in Americanization.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I should like to inquire if there is any other Senator who desires to speak on the bill this afternoon? I have agreed with the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], who desires to present an amendment to the bill, that I will not ask for a vote on the bill until Monday, but I should like to proceed as far as we can. I ask that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with. There are no committee amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The request of the Senator from Iowa is that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with. Without objection it is so ordered.

Mr. KENYON. I understand the Senator from Missouri [Mr. SPENCER] wishes to address the Senate very briefly.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President, the purpose of the bill is to promote Americanization by the advancement of fundamental education. Every problem which confronts the Republic—industrial, agricultural, political, or racial—is simplified in direct proportion as we promote the general education of the people. We sometimes lose sight of the fact that this principle is more true in the United States than anywhere else in the world, for here, as the Supreme Court of the United States once put it, "every citizen is a constituent part of the sovereignty itself."

When we deal in this country with the general subject of education we are dealing with those upon whose shoulders rests all the responsibility of Government. When George Washington wrote his memorable Farewell Address there was one statement which he made prophetic for the future of this Nation, which he had rocked in the cradle of its national infancy, that is as pregnant with power to-day as it was when he uttered it. He said:

> In proportion as the structure of a government gives force to public opinion it is essential that public opinion should be enlightened.

Because of this he solemnly enjoined his fellow citizens to—

> Promote, then, as an object of primary importance, institutions for the general diffusion of knowledge.

I presume it is perfectly fair to say that when we consider the man who comes to this country of ours unacquainted with our language, unable to understand what is spoken, unable to read what is written in the English language, we have a man who is most susceptible to the propaganda of every dangerous, lawless principle with which the Republic is threatened. Just in proportion as we can take that man out of his ignorance of our language spoken and written and make him understand what is said and read what is written we have made that man a greater national asset than he was before.

Every industrial employer who employs large numbers of foreigners who can not speak the English language testifies to the fact that the moment the average laborer can speak and understand and read English that moment automatically his earning power for himself and his usefulness in the business is increased.

It is appalling to think that in our Army of the Great War one out of every four men could neither write a letter home in English nor read an order that was written in English.

The very foundation of this Government depends upon the education of its citizens. The man who becomes familiar with the language of the country in which he lives has his ambition broadened both for himself and for his children; he has his own usefulness increased; he has diminished, so far as the country is concerned, the element of danger incident to his ignorance; he becomes a strength in proportion as he is educated.

Therefore, Mr. President, when we are dealing with a bill like this we are dealing with that which has to do with the very foundation of government. The maps which the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] has been good enough to hang on the wall of this Chamber indicate the condition of illiteracy in this country. In view of that condition, when, if I may repeat the comment of the Supreme Court, we consider that every man to whom it applies is a constituent part of the sovereignty itself; when we remember that as we deal with the education of an American we are dealing with the education of a man who rules and upon whose shoulders rests the responsibility of government, we can begin to estimate the importance of any plan that will develop primary education.

We have in this country, according to one of the charts furnished by the Senator, over 2,461,000 foreign-born white residents of the United States who can neither read nor write. They are an element not only of danger but, potentially, an element of strength; and the degree of the strength of that enormous number of illiterates is proportionate to their education.

Mr. President, whether or not the pending bill goes far enough is another question; but, so far as it does go, it deals with the essential, primary foundation upon which the Government of this country rests.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, if there are no other Senators who desire to speak on the bill this afternoon, in view of my agreement with the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] not to ask for a vote upon the bill until Monday, I shall move an adjournment. I will say, however, that I hope we may take the vote on Monday, and I shall earnestly urge that we do so. If there is no other business before the Senate, I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 2 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, January 19, 1920, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, January 17, 1920.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Infinite Spirit, above, beneath, around, within—we know Thee only by Thy works—the stupendous universe with all its rich and varied appointments; the longings, hopes, and aspirations which fill our breasts and move to action in great achievements for the betterment of mankind.

We thank Thee for the golden chain of faith which binds us to Thee, hope which is the star-spring from on high, that subtle and mysterious quality we call love, which binds us together into families, nations, and is destined to unite the whole family of mankind into a sacred brotherhood—each for all and all for each. In the spirit of the Master. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE—APPROPRIATIONS, EXPENDITURES, AND BALANCES UNDER DEPARTMENT OF STATE, 1919 (H. DOC. NO. 616).

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of State and ordered to be printed:

To the House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a statement by the Secretary of State, with accompanying papers, of appropriations, expenditures, and balances of appropriations under the Department of State for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1919.

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE,
16 January, 1920.

PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE—PANAMA RAILROAD CO. (S. DOC. NO. 178).

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith, for the information of the Congress, the Seventieth Annual Report of the Board of Directors of the Panama Railroad Company for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1919.

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE,
16 January, 1920.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. JAMES, for the day, on account of sickness.

To Mr. LARSEN, indefinitely, on account of sickness.

To Mr. DALLINGER (at the request of Mr. WALSH), indefinitely, on account of illness.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. RAMSEY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 9089. An act releasing the claim of the United States Government to the block or square of land in the city of Fort Smith, in the State of Arkansas, upon which is situated the old Federal jail, to the city of Fort Smith for a site for a convention hall, community building, or other public purposes; and

H. R. 9183. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to adjust the terms of the contract for the sale of the old post-office property in New Haven, Conn.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bill of the following title:

S. 2999. An act to amend section 97 of the act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a change of reference be made of Senate concurrent resolution No. 14 from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce to the Committee on Rules. It is a Senate resolution, identical with a concurrent resolution submitted by myself in the House, and the resolution filed in the House was referred to the Committee on Rules. It calls for the appointment of a joint committee to make a survey of and to report on the activities of governmental departments, bureaus, and agencies which relate to public health, and this should also be referred, I think, to the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the reference of the Senate concurrent resolution 14 be changed from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce to the Committee on Rules. Is there objection?

Mr. GARD. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, may we not have it reported?

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 14) creating a joint committee to make a survey of and to report on the activities of governmental departments, bureaus, and agencies which relate to public health.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That a joint committee be, and is hereby, created, consisting of three Members of the United States Senate and three Members of the House of Representatives, to be appointed by the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House, respectively, to make a survey of and report on those activities of the several departments, divisions, bureaus, offices, and agencies of the Government of the United States which relates to the protection and promotion of the public health, sanitation, care of the sick and injured, and the collection and dissemination of information relating thereto.

That such committee is directed and empowered to report to the Congress not later than June 1, 1920—

(a) The statutory powers and duties conferred by the Congress on any department, division, bureau, office, or agency of the United States Government to carry on any work pertaining to the conservation and improvement of the public health, together with any rules and regulations authorized or promulgated thereunder;

(b) The organizations now existing in the Federal Government for the purpose of carrying out these powers and duties, together with the personnel of, appropriations for, and expenditures by each department, division, bureau, office, and agency during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919;

(c) The coordination now existing between said departments, divisions, bureaus, offices, and agencies, together with any conflicts, overlapping or duplication of powers, duties, functions, organization, and activities;

(d) The cooperation and coordination now existing between the Government of the United States and the government of the several States or extragovernmental agencies for the conservation or improvement of the public health;

(e) Such further information as such committee may deem proper;

(f) Such recommendations as such committee may deem advisable to offer for the improvement of the public health work of the United States Government.

That such committee be, and hereby is, authorized during the Sixty-sixth Congress to send for persons, books, and papers, to administer oaths, and to employ experts, deemed necessary by such committee, a clerk, and a stenographer to report such hearings as may be had in connection with any subject which may be before such committee, such stenographer's service to be rendered at a cost not exceeding $1 per printed page; the expenses involved in carrying out the provisions of this resolution, one half to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate and the other half out of the contingent fund of the House; and that such committee may sit during the sessions or recesses of the Congress.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, has the gentleman consulted the chairmen of the respective committees concerning the transfer of jurisdiction?

Mr. DENISON. I have not consulted the chairman of the Committee on Rules with reference to this. I am a member of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which this was referred, and I presented it to the committee in committee meeting, and the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce was of the opinion that this resolution should go to the Committee on Rules.

Mr. GARD. Is this one instance where the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee want to surrender a bill to the Committee on Rules?

Mr. SIMS. Oh, no. The jurisdiction does not belong in that committee.

Mr. DENISON. The jurisdiction of this matter belongs, as I understand it, to the Committee on Rules, because it calls for the appointment of a joint investigating committee, and it should have been referred to the Committee on Rules in the first instance. Of course, any legislation resulting from it would have to come from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. But this is simply a concurrent resolution for the appointment of a joint committee. I understand that that is properly a matter for the Committee on Rules.

Mr. GARD. Has the gentleman taken it up with the majority leader and the minority leader?

Mr. DENISON. No; I have not.

Mr. GARD. Well, we are working under a rule of that kind.

Mr. DENISON. I assume that the majority leader will have no objection to this and will concur. When I introduced a similar resolution to this in the House I did take that up with the majority leader, and it was referred to the Committee on Rules. I assume that a similar resolution from the Senate should go to the same committee in the House.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Reserving the right to object, is this a joint resolution?

Mr. DENISON. It is a concurrent resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the reference? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

MUNICIPAL COURT, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The SPEAKER. When the House adjourned last night there was pending, and the previous question had been ordered on, the bill H. R. 10074, the title of which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 10074) to enlarge the jurisdiction of the Municipal Court of the District of Columbia and to regulate appeals from the judgments of said court, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. And there was presented a motion to recommit by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. WALSH moves to recommit the bill to the Committee on the Judiciary with instructions to that committee to report the same back forthwith, with the following amendment: Page 1, line 7, strike out "$2,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$1,000."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the motion.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. WALSH) there were—ayes 25, noes 35.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. GARD. I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri and the gentleman from Ohio make the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair is of opinion that no quorum is present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll. Those who favor the motion to recommit will answer "yea" when their names are called; those opposed will answer "nay."

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 74, nays 239, not voting 115, as follows:

On motion of Mr. VOLSTEAD, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the following concurrent resolution:

House concurrent resolution 41.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there shall be printed as a House document 1,500 copies of the Journal of the Fifty-fourth National Encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic for the year 1920, not to exceed $1,700 in cost, with illustrations, 1,000 copies of which shall be for the use of the House and 500 for the use of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the following concurrent resolution, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

House concurrent resolution 40.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the final report of Gen. John J. Pershing, commander in chief American Expeditionary Forces, be printed as a House document without the accompanying maps and charts, and that 100,000 additional copies be printed, of which 30,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate and 70,000 copies for the use of the House.

THE WATER-POWER BILL.

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 3184, the general water-power bill, disagree to all the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference asked for by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table a bill, of which the Clerk will read the title, disagree to all the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference asked for.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 3184) to create a Federal power commission and to define its powers and duties, to provide for the improvement of navigation, for the development of water power, for the use of lands of the United States in relation thereto, to repeal section 18 of "An act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes," approved August 8, 1917, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. ESCH, Mr. SINNOTT, Mr. HAUGEN, Mr. SIMS, Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado, and Mr. LEE of Georgia.

WAR-RISK INSURANCE ACT.

Mr TOWNER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by publishing an address by my colleague, Mr. SWEET, recently before the posts here and the soldiers of the Walter Reed Hospital, regarding the war-risk insurance act.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

There was no objection.

COMMITTEE ON EDUCATION.

Mr. IRELAND. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following privileged report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 411.

Resolved, That there shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House, until otherwise provided for by law, compensation at the rate of $2,000 per annum for the services of a clerk to the Committee on Education.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. IRELAND. I will.

Mr. WALSH. What activity is there now in this committee which should call for this clerk?

Mr. IRELAND. They have convinced the Committee on Accounts that their work is very heavy, and at the last session it was impossible to secure a clerk. This report is unanimous from the Committee on Accounts, but I will yield to the chairman of the Committee on Education, who can better explain it than I can.

Mr. FESS. What is the question?

Mr. WALSH. I asked the gentleman what activity the Committee on Education was undertaking to call for this resolution. Is it to hold hearings on any legislation or about to act upon any new proposed legislation?

Mr. FESS. The Committee on Education has pending several distinct measures, some of which we have already had hearings upon.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I wish the Chair would compel the Republicans to speak so that we can hear what is going on.

Mr. FESS. When the Republicans are talking the Democrats refuse to listen.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I will make a motion to give each one a megaphone so that we can hear.

Mr. FESS. And provide the Democrats with an ear trumpet as well. I say that the Committee on Education has before it several distinctive measures, some of which we have already had hearings upon, such as the Smith-Towner measure and others. There are other measures pending that hearings will be held upon whenever the committee votes to hear them. There is a tremendous amount of correspondence, as the gentleman from Massachusetts knows, on measures that are educational in character. This correspondence must be immediately answered or thrown into the wastebasket. As chairman of the committee I make an effort to answer all correspondence, and it is tremendously heavy.

Mr. WALSH. Of course, a lot of the correspondence belongs in the wastebasket, anyhow.

Mr. FESS. I admit that.

Mr. WALSH. It is thought by employing a clerk that he will be able to distinguish which shall go into the wastebasket and which shall be answered?

Mr. FESS. The Committee on Education has work very much beyond that of many other committees in regard to the character of the legislation that comes before that committee. The committee has had a clerk, but under the——

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, can we have order?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I call the attention of the minority leader, Mr. Speaker, to the reason why we can not be heard on this side. [Laughter.]

Mr. FESS. The Committee on Education at this moment has before it a bill that is being pressed by certain Members on the other side of the aisle, among which are the former chairman of the committee, Mr. SEARS, and hearings have been had on his measure. It has to do with a form of education of a physical character to take the place of military training. There is another bill before the committee that looks to the same solution, that is backed by a large aggregation of people for a better state of education in the country.

Mr. WALSH. Do I understand the gentleman that the committee now has a session clerk?

Mr. FESS. No; it had a session clerk at the special session, but that expired with the special session.

Mr. WALSH. And the committee is without any clerk?

Mr. FESS. Without any clerk, except the clerk in my office that I paid myself last month. I hoped that Congress would take care of the clerk the same as it did last year, except that it would give us an annual clerk instead of a clerk for the special session.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. In addition to the bills which the gentleman mentions, I will ask if there is not legislation pending providing for the deaf and dumb?

Mr. FESS. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. We realize that the chairman has not had sufficient assistance, because of the tremendous amount of work, and, of course, we can not impose upon his secretary the burden of doing that work. The committee ought to have clerical assistance to do the work; there is no question about that.

Mr. FESS. I will say that the character of the work that comes before the Committee on Education, much of it, is important, and as long as I have anything to do with it the committee will take care of that correspondence.

Mr. RAKER. From what the gentleman says and from my own personal appearance before the committee and what I have seen, I want to concur in what he says.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. Yes.

Mr. GARD. Did the gentleman's committee have any clerk in the special session?

Mr. FESS. Yes; a session clerk, and we are now asking for an annual clerk.

Mr. GARD. The committee did have a session clerk during the special session?

Mr. FESS. Yes.

Mr. GARD. Has it had any during the regular session?

Mr. FESS. Not an official clerk. I have the same clerk in the office, however, and the salary last month was paid by myself.

Mr. GARD. Is it intended to provide another clerk in addition to the present clerk?

Mr. FESS. Oh, no.

Mr. GARD. Just the one clerk?

Mr. FESS. Just the one clerk.

Mr. GARD. The gentleman's committee has had a clerk all of the time since he has been chairman of the committee?

Mr. FESS. Yes; a session clerk.

Mr. IRELAND. Mr. Speaker, I submit that this has all been gone over before.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Ohio a question.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield?

Mr. IRELAND. Yes.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. What has the clerk to do with these hearings which the gentleman says they are going to have before this committee? The hearings are all taken down by the stenographers, are they not?

Mr. FESS. The clerk has to do with sending the hearings out when the country asks for them.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. If the House goes on and votes for every specific increase of salary here, how is the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] going to cut off that billion dollars in the appropriations?

Mr. FESS. Let me ask my friend from Missouri a question.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Very well.

Mr. FESS. Why should the Committee on Education be denied a clerk?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I think about half these committees ought to have the clerks taken away from them.

Mr. IRELAND. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from Missouri will permit me, I had occasion to go through this just a few days ago, and I can assure him that the special clerks to committees were granted, with I think one or two exceptions, only for one session—the extraordinary session—and there have been fewer clerks granted so far than in any session that I know of in recent years.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The gentleman from Ohio has not answered my question. In fact, he has not answered either one of my questions. The first is, if all of these hearings are not taken down by the stenographers?

Mr. FESS. Yes.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. And, if so, what has the clerk to the committee to do with the hearings?

Mr. FESS. The clerk to the committee sends out the notices that hearings will be held and announces to the people who have written in that the hearings are held at a certain time, and then answers the requests from the country for the hearings. The clerk has most to do with the hearings, save the taking down by the stenographer of what the people who appear there state. The clerk does not do that, of course, and no clerk does that in any committee.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. My other question is, if we vote every one of these increases of appropriations that are asked for, how is my illustrious friend from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] going to make good that prediction of cutting down the appropriations by $1,000,000,000?

Mr. FESS. On the basis that if you use efficiency, that is sane economy.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Why does not the gentleman's clerk use efficiency and attend to this correspondence?

Mr. FESS. I have not any; I am asking for one now.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Has not the gentleman any sort of a clerk?

Mr. FESS. No; except what I pay for myself.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. As a Member of the House the gentleman has a clerk.

Mr. FESS. My own secretary?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Yes.

Mr. FESS. To do the work of the Committee on Education?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. He can do it in 15 minutes a day.

Mr. FESS. He can not do it in 15 minutes a day.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Illinois yield?

Mr. IRELAND. Yes.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I really think the Committee on Education ought to have a clerk, an annual clerk, and a good clerk. We know that the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS], can not do the political work he has to do and also do the work of the Committee on Education. [Laughter.]

Mr. FESS. The gentleman is right about that.

Mr. KITCHIN. The chairman's time is taken up with his responsible duties as chairman of the Republican congressional committee, and, of course, if the Committee on Education is going to do anything, and it ought to do something, he ought to have a clerk to attend to the business of that committee. I am very strongly in favor of it. [Laughter and applause.]

Now, laying all joking aside, I think that the Committee on Education ought to have an annual clerk. Years ago, seven or eight or ten years ago, or before that, the Committee on Education, while it had been a committee of this House for a quarter of a century or more, hardly ever met. It had no work to do. In the last few years it has become one of the most important committees of the House. I know that when we were making up the Committtee on Education in the last Congress, and the Democrats making up their quota in this Congress, the Committee on Committees had about as many applications for places on the Committee on Education as they did for almost any of the committees of the House. During the last Congress and in this Congress it has had some of the most important bills, and hereafter it will be one of the important and responsible committees in the House. It will have charge of all matters of vocational education and the rehabilitation of soldiers, and all that. It is going to be a most responsible committee, and it ought to have an annual clerk—certainly much more than some of the other committees who have annual clerks. I hope the House will agree to the resolution.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from North Carolina yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Does not the gentleman really think that the important committee which ought to have an annual clerk, in connection with what is now taking place in the country, is the Committee on Woman Suffrage? [Laughter.]

Mr. KITCHIN. I would say to the gentleman that he, at the beginning of this Congress, legislated his committee out of existence by passing the woman suffrage amendment. [Laughter.] If he had let woman suffrage be pending for three or four years and agitated the matter throughout the country, he might have been in a position to ask for a clerk.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. And I suggest that that is the only committee that has ever had the courage to do that sort of thing.

Mr. IRELAND. Mr. Speaker, I would like to help out the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] by saying that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] absolutely refused a clerk and gave me a strong "bawling out" when I suggested it to him.

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Illinois yield?

Mr. IRELAND. Yes.

Mr. SEARS. During the first session of the Sixty-fifth Congress, while I was the chairman of the Committee on Education, my good Republican friends and my good Democratic friends refused to give me a clerk. At the last session of that Congress I made the statement that if the House would give me a clerk and I should ever be in the minority, I would assist the chairman of the Committee on Education in trying to secure a clerk.

The Members of this House do not appreciate the importance of the Committee on Education. Many Members refer letters to the chairman of the Committee on Education from constituents of theirs. The teachers all over the country are writing to him for information on the vocational bill and the rehabilitation bill and many other educational bills. I take the view that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] has just stated that he will take, that unless he expects to answer the correspondence he should resign as chairman of that committee. Now, he can not do that unless you give him a clerk, and I shall insist upon the chairman of the Committee on Education having an annual clerk in order that he may look after these educational matters and answer all inquiries received. I trust the resolution will go through unanimously.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. IRELAND. Mr. Chairman, I offer another resolution from the Committee on Accounts.

DESKS FORMERLY IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 406.

Resolved, That the Superintendent of the Capitol Building and Grounds is hereby authorized to deliver to Members of the House who were Members of the House in the Sixty-second Congress, upon their application, the desks formerly in the House which were occupied by them, respectively, in said Congress: Provided, That no expense to the House is hereby incurred.

Mr. IRELAND. Mr. Speaker, this is a bill to grant to the Members of the Sixty-second Congress the desks which they occupied during that Congress or before. There was no one who appeared before the committee in opposition to this bill and the committee was unanimous in its report.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HICKS. Is this a privileged report?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is in doubt.

Mr. IRELAND. I am myself, but I hope there will be no objection.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I ask to have it reported; we could not hear back here.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is inclined to think the point of order raised by the gentleman from New York comes too late.

Mr. WALSH. It was not offered as a privileged resolution.

Mr. HICKS. Has it been reported?

The SPEAKER. Yes; and the Chair recognized the gentleman from Illinois, who proceeded to speak.

Mr. WALSH. That will not give privilege to the resolution.

The SPEAKER. No; but it would prevent a point of order from being raised.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Speaker, may I make this comment? We did not know what this resolution was until the gentleman from Illinois had a chance to say a few words, and the moment he stated what it was I raised the point.

Mr. SANFORD. The only trouble about that is that the gentleman is not correct; the resolution was read.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is disposed to think that the point of order is raised too late, but will hear the gentleman on that point.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I think probably the Chair is right about that; but I would like to suggest to my colleague that when he is presenting a series of resolutions from the Committee on Accounts it is not the proper thing to offer a resolution which is not privileged and then, the moment when anybody discovers what it is and makes the point of order, to make the point of order that it is too late to make a point of order against a privileged bill.

Mr. IRELAND. I grant my colleague that, and I apologize. I only picked it out inadvertently, and if there be serious objection——

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I want to inquire whether this is a bill or a House resolution?

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, I renew the point of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understood the gentleman wishes to withdraw the resolution.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Is this a bill or a joint resolution?

The SPEAKER. It is a House resolution.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. A House resolution?

The SPEAKER. Yes; a House resolution.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I would like to suggest to my colleague that the House of Representatives by a simple resolution can not give away Government property; and if the Superintendent of the Capitol on a resolution of this House should undertake to dispose of Government property—he might do it; I do not know—he would be liable under the Penal Code.

Mr. IRELAND. What would the gentleman suggest?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. In order to give away or dispose of property of the Government it requires a bill or a joint resolution of Congress.

Mr. IRELAND. I recognize the error.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Property that belongs to the Government of the United States does not belong to the House of Representatives.

Mr. IRELAND. Well, I recognize the error, and it did not occur to me nor to any member of the committee, nor, I suppose, to the gentleman who introduced the resolution. I am quite willing to ask permission to withdraw it, and I ask that permission.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the gentleman withdraws the resolution.

ARTHUR LUCAS.

Mr. IRELAND. Mr. Speaker, I present another resolution which I hope will not provoke the discussion the other two have.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 385.

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House of Representatives be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of the contingent fund of the House, $60 to Arthur Lucas for special janitor services rendered during the first session of the Sixty-sixth Congress.

Mr. IRELAND. Mr. Speaker, this resolution was passed at the special session; the recipient is the boy attending to the janitor work for the room occupied by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON]. It has been passed several times before, and I trust there will be no objection to it. In the absence of any, I move the adoption of the resolution.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

CLERK TO COMMITTEE ON REFORM IN THE CIVIL SERVICE.

Mr. IRELAND. Mr. Speaker, I submit another resolution.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 409.

Resolved, That there shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House, until otherwise provided by law, compensation at the rate of $6 per diem for the services of a clerk to the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service, payment to commence from the date such clerk entered upon the discharge of his duties, which shall be ascertained and evidenced by the certificate of the chairman of said committee.

Mr. IRELAND. Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Accounts brought in a resolution at the last session for the same pay for a clerk which only obtained for that session, and the chairman of the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service has thoroughly convinced the committee that he is in need of that clerk being continued.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. IRELAND. Certainly.

Mr. GARNER. From a reading of the resolution it occurs to me if the gentleman's committee had hearings it might have ascertained when this clerk began work and designated the date from which it is paid. It is very indefinite. But it leaves it for the chairman to give the committee the information, and the committee to put it in the resolution.

Mr. IRELAND. He did so, and I presume it is an error on the part of the committee not to have included it by amendment. If my memory serves me correctly, I think the chairman informed us that the clerk had been active from the beginning of this session.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. IRELAND. Certainly.

Mr. WALSH. How is it that the committee has reported the compensation on a per diem basis rather than an annual salary basis?

Mr. IRELAND. The appropriation bill has in the past provided for several additional session clerks, as the gentleman knows, on a per diem basis, and the committee in this instance followed that procedure.

Mr. WALSH. This committee ordinarily does not have a clerk.

Mr. IRELAND. No, sir.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

ASSISTANT CLERK, COMMITTEE ON ENROLLED BILLS.

Mr. IRELAND. Mr. Speaker, I submit a further resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois submits a further resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 420.

Resolved, That the chairman of the Committee on Enrolled Bills be authorized to appoint an assistant clerk to the Committee on Enrolled Bills, who shall receive compensation at the rate of $6 per diem during the sessions of the Sixty-sixth Congress, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House, payment to commence from date such clerk entered upon his duties.

Mr. TREADWAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. IRELAND. Certainly.

Mr. TREADWAY. I would like to inquire whether this is a customary resolution for an assistant clerk to the Committee on Enrolled Bills?

Mr. IRELAND. Yes, sir. It is presumed to be necessary.

Mr. TREADWAY. It seems to me that the work of the committee would probably be about the same from one session to another.

Mr. IRELAND. This assistant clerk has usually been granted the Committee on Enrolled bills at the beginning of the session, but through the dilatory tactics of the chairman of the Committee on Accounts it has not been presented before.

Mr. GARNER. If the gentleman will yield, when the auditor goes to pass on the voucher to pay this clerk he has to ascertain the fact as to when he began his duties. How does he ascertain it? Does he ascertain it by taking the testimony of some one? This resolution does not say on the certificate of the chairman of the committee, but says when the clerk enters on his duties. I do not think it shows any date by which you can ascertain when this clerk begins his work.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to have the resolution again reported, in order to ascertain the fact when this clerk will be paid, or how the auditor is to ascertain it.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the resolution will be again reported.

The resolution was again reported.

Mr. GARNER. When is it that he enters upon his duties?

Mr. IRELAND. I should say, in the absence of the provision, that the certificate of the chairman, which has been honored in the past, would be sufficient.

Mr. GARNER. I suggest the gentleman should amend his resolution.

Mr. IRELAND. I will try to do that in the future.

Mr. LITTLE. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. IRELAND. I move to amend the resolution by the insertion of a provision to the effect that the compensation begin on the dates given in the certificate of the chairman of the committee.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. IRELAND: Page 1, line 7, after the word "duties," strike out the period and insert a comma and the following language: "which shall be ascertained and evidenced by the certificate of the chairman of said committee."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LITTLE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. IRELAND. Certainly.

Mr. LITTLE. I shall not offer any criticism of the committee for following the usual custom. I assume it is right. But, in view of the fact that the enrolling of bills is the subject of criticism, I want to know if your committee has information as to what they want to do with two clerks?

Mr. IRELAND. That matter has been gone over so thoroughly and so many times in the past that we on the committee are all convinced that it is necessary.

Mr. LITTLE. I am satisfied, too, but I thought perhaps you might have the details at hand.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The clerks of the Committee on Enrolled Bills read every enrolled bill and compare them.

Mr. LITTLE. They read proof, too.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution as amended.

The resolution was agreed to.

ELLA M. KILLEEN.

Mr. IRELAND. Mr. Speaker, I submit the following resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois submits a resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 421.

Resolved, That there shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House to Miss Ella M. Killeen, daughter of George Killeen, late an employee of the House of Representatives, being a doorkeeper on the messenger roll, a sum equal to six months of his compensation as such employee, and an additional amount, not exceeding $250, to defray the expenses of the funeral of said George Killeen.

Mr. IRELAND. This is the usual resolution.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

ADDITIONAL CLERKS, COMMITTEE ON EXPENDITURES IN DEPARTMENT OF STATE AND COMMITTEE ON EXPENDITURES IN POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT.

Mr. IRELAND. Mr. Speaker, I submit another resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois submits another resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 402.

Resolved, That the Committee on Expenditures in the State Department be, and is hereby, allowed a clerk at a salary at the rate of $1,500 per annum from December 1, 1919, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House until otherwise authorized by law.

The following committee amendment was read:

Strike out all after the resolving clause and insert in lieu thereof the following: "That there shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House of Representatives compensation at the rate of $150 per month during the second session of the Sixty-sixth Congress for services of one clerk to each of the following committees: Committee on Expenditures in the Department of State and Committee on Expenditures in the Post Office Department, said compensation to commence from the time such clerk entered upon the discharge of his duties, such time to be evidenced by certificate signed by the chairman of the committee."

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. IRELAND. Certainly.

Mr. WALSH. What prompted the committee to increase the compensation of the clerk provided for the Committee on Expenditures in the State Department from $1,500 per annum to $1,800 per annum?

Mr. IRELAND. The additional cost of living at present and the impossibility of getting a competent clerk for $1,500.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. This is an annual clerk?

Mr. IRELAND. That is the evidence that was given us by the chairman of both committees. They had been unable thus far to secure the services of competent clerks for that amount. And this is the same amount, I might say to the gentleman, that was paid to the same committees last session.

Mr. WALSH. Are these committees active?

Mr. IRELAND. They so assured us. Both chairmen appeared before the committee.

Mr. GARNER. They did assure us that they were going to do some business.

Mr. IRELAND. They assured us that they had been doing business and that they were at the present time very active.

Mr. GARNER. The only committees that I know of that have been busy in investigations are the special investigation committees, particularly the so-called War Expenditures Committee, with its various subcommittees. I think that these committees on expenditures ought to go to work and do something with reference to the investigation of various departments of the Government, but I am afraid they are not going to do anything. I have seen no exhibition of an intention so far, and have heard no statement to that effect on the floor of the House thus far, and I know that if you had found anything you would have been in here and have said something about it before this.

Mr. IRELAND. The fact that these committees on expenditures have not thus far created any expense against the House or the contingent fund—other than named in this resolution—is no proof that they are not working.

Mr. GARNER. Of course, inasmuch as the Democrats had clerks for these committees, the Republicans will have clerks for them, and that is the only reason. In this instance there is an excuse for you to make an investigation, and you are not making an investigation. That is the trouble about it. I am not complaining about the clerks, but about your inefficiency in not investigating the various branches of the Government, as these committees on expenditures were intended to do.

Mr. LITTLE. We will try to remedy that before the session is over.

Mr. ELLIOTT. Mr. Speaker, I wish to say to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER], in regard to the activity of the Committee on Expenditures in the State Department, that if he had read the printed hearings that have gone out from that committee, mailed to his office, he would have known that this committee had been guilty of some activity, and that it has some more in view.

Mr. GARNER. Then I want to congratulate the gentleman on his activity, and I hope some of the other chairmen on expenditure committees will imitate his good action. [Applause.]

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The committee amendment proposes a session clerk, whereas the original resolution proposed an annual clerk?

Mr. IRELAND. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. PARRISH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. IRELAND. I no longer have the floor.

Mr. PARRISH. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Illinois may have one minute. I want to ask him a question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. IRELAND] may proceed for one minute. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PARRISH. Is there any other resolution submitted to the Committee on Accounts that has not been reported to the House?

Mr. IRELAND. Several of them.

Mr. GARNER. They are Democratic. That is the reason why they have not been brought in. [Laughter.]

Mr. IRELAND. I am fearful that your surmise might be correct. [Laughter.]

Mr. PARRISH. May I ask the gentleman when they will be reported?

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a change of reference be made of the bill H. R. 5944 and the bill 10300 from the Committee on Military Affairs to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that a change of reference be made of the bills indicated, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, let us have them reported.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report them.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 5944) to remove the charge of desertion standing against Kenneth McKenzie, ordinary seaman, United States Navy.

A bill (H. R. 10300) to remove the charge of desertion standing against Nelson T. Robinson.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, why does the gentleman want them rereferred?

The SPEAKER. These are private bills, and they can be referred by the Clerk without action by the House.

SUITS AGAINST THE UNITED STATES IN ADMIRALTY.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I submit a privileged report from the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas, from the Committee on Rules, submits the following report:

"The Committee on Rules, to which was referred House resolution 436, submits a report on said resolution, with the recommendation that the same be agreed to.

"House resolution 436.

"Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of S. 3076, being a bill 'To authorize suits against the United States in admiralty, suits for salvage services, and provide for the release of merchant vessels belonging to the United States from arrest and attachment in foreign jurisdictions.' That there shall be not to exceed two hours' general debate, one-half to be controlled by the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary and one-half by the ranking member of minority of said committee. At the conclusion of the general debate the bill shall be read for amendment under the five-minute rule, whereupon the bill shall be reported to the House with the amendments, if any, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and all amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit."

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, the resolution states the purpose for which it was offered and reported to the House. It provides for the consideration of a bill that has already passed the Senate, to enable suits in admiralty to be brought by litigants that have rights and interests that they can not now adjudicate against the Government of the United States. This is for the purpose of enabling the House to consider the Senate bill on that subject.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I would like to ask the gentleman when they are going to bring up this soldiers' farm-land bill?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I am unable to advise the gentleman from Missouri just when that bill will be considered by the House.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. That bill has been reported and has been on the calendar here for five or six months—since August 1—and a great many people want to know when anything is going to be done about it, or if anything at all is going to be done, and why it is not brought up and considered. Four million men in the United States are interested in it, as I reckon. I think there are about four millions. There must have been that many; maybe it was a few more, maybe a few less.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. That is the bill to provide for sending men out onto the arid lands and down into the swamp lands?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. No; that bill provided three things: First, to get water onto the dry land, and to take water off the wet land, and to take over cut-over lands.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I know one boy very well among the 4,000,000, and I do not think he could be tied out on the arid desert until water reached him, or staked to a swamp farm down in Louisiana or Mississippi until they got the water off it. I do not think you could hold him in either one of those places.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. That may be. Perhaps you could not hold him at all.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I do not think you could make him stay on any one of those places, either a desert or a swamp.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Here is the point. Before this Congress met, in the last Congress Secretary Lane got up a bill which is now called the Mondell bill——

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. That is the bill I was referring to.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I do not object to that; but it was heralded all over the country, with a great flourish of trumpets and braying of brass bands and everything else, that that was one of the chief things that the extra session of Congress was going to meet for. The extra session of Congress met and lasted five months and then adjourned, and now a month and a half of the regular session has passed away, and there is not a symptom of calling up that bill.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Of course the gentleman recognizes the fact that the publicity department of the original author of the scheme was working overtime even before Congress did meet.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I think the publicity end of the gentleman from Wyoming works pretty regularly, as far as I have been able to notice. [Laughter.]

Mr. KITCHIN. Is the gentleman talking about the Mondell bill?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I am talking about the Mondell bill, which was originally the Lane bill, and I want to know when it is going to be brought up. We have been running for seven months on what the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] calls chicken-feed bills, and nothing has been done about this important legislation.

Mr. KITCHIN. I suggest to the gentleman from Missouri that he ought to withdraw that question. It is very embarrassing to the chairman of the Rules Committee, who is not in favor of the bill himself, and it is quite embarrassing to the majority leader. I can tell you when they are going to give you some information about it. They are going to wait until the national conventions to tell the American people what they are going to do if they are elected to the next Congress. They are not in a position now to tell what they are going to do in this session, and the gentleman from Missouri ought to know better than to ask those questions. I know myself what the answer is. [Laughter.] Here is the bill of the distinguished gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MORGAN]. Nobody can tell what is going to become of that bill, whether the committee is going to report it out or not, or what this Congress will do about it. Will Hays may tell us, but we must wait until the convention, because these gentlemen on that side have got to go to the people on promises and not on what they have done. I am told that there are 72 of these different bills proposing relief for the returned soldiers. I do not even want to know what is going to become of them, and I know the gentleman from Kansas does not know.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Kansas knows what he is in favor of and what he is not in favor of, and he does not confide it to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Or to anybody else, either.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. The gentleman from Kansas is in favor of the earliest action possible upon something that will be satisfactory to all the boys or a majority of the boys who served in the late war. So far they have not indicated just what would be agreeable to them. Many suggestions have been made by Members of the House. Much propaganda has been put out through the country for one measure and another, but it has not yet been ascertained just what will be satisfactory to the soldiers of the war with respect to lands and homes that they may desire to establish for themselves.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. In a moment. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] and the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] talk about want of action in the past seven months upon this important matter. Why, I have a very distinct recollection that the Democratic Party came into power in 1912 on the issue that they would reduce the cost of living. Up to this good hour the cost of living has been going up, and for seven years they have not reduced it one penny, but under their administration it has been constantly increasing. We have made no promises. We go ahead and find out what should be done and then proceed to do it. [Applause.]

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I yield for a question.

Mr. BANKHEAD. In connection with the statements made by the gentleman from Kansas, in view of the great interest in this matter, I will ask the gentleman if the Committe on Rules has given any consideration to the proposition involved in a resolution introduced by myself some weeks ago providing for a special standing committee of the House to investigate and to act upon these various measures affecting the interests of the soldiers?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. There have been many resolutions of that kind introduced by Members of the House and referred to the Committee on Rules. Action is now being taken with a view of designating a committee for the purpose of taking charge of such legislation as may grow out of the bills that have been introduced.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I am glad to hear they are making that much progress.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I regret, however, that it will be impossible when that action is taken to give credit by name to the Members who have introduced bills and resolutions upon the subject. It will be disappointing that the legislation, whatever it may be, can not bear the names of all the Members who have introduced resolutions and bills on the subject.

Mr. GARD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD.]

Mr. GARD. I desire to ask concerning the text of the rule which the gentleman has brought in. I notice that it provides for two hours' general debate.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I am glad to get back to that subject, because that is the subject before the House. [Laughter.]

Mr. GARD. What I want to know is whether the general debate is to be what is commonly understood as general debate, or whether it will apply to the bill. I think, in view of the short time, it ought to apply to the bill.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. The resolution does not confine general debate to the subject matter of the bill.

Mr. GARD. Does not the gentleman think that it should?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. It was not asked by the proponent of the resolution, and the subject was not discussed in the Committee on Rules when it was under consideration.

Mr. GARD. It is an important bill, providing for a new procedure in admiralty, and I think the general debate ought to apply to the bill.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I take it that the subject matter being of great importance, it will take most of the time for debate on the bill. It is under the control of the members of the committee, and they will confine themselves largely to the discussion of the subject matter. Of course, if time is yielded in general debate, the Member to whom it is yielded would not be confined to the bill.

Mr. KITCHIN. I suggest that in limiting general debate to two hours perhaps we could give time to some Republican to give a fuller, better, and more definite and specific explanation of why the Rules Committee has not reported out the soldiers' bill. [Laughter on the Democratic side.]

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. In answer to the gentleman, not one of the soldiers' bills has been referred to the Committee on Rules, and none of them is pending there. Some resolutions looking to the appointment of a committee are before the Committee on Rules.

Mr. KITCHIN. I thought that the gentleman from Wyoming, the author of the bill, really introduced it for the purpose of putting it through and not for fooling the soldiers. So it seems he has not even pushed the bill, has not asked the Committee on Rules to report it out, and he has not asked unanimous consent for the consideration of his bill here. I thought it was a real bill for the soldiers and not for buncombe. [Laughter on the Democratic side.]

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. The gentleman from North Carolina knows so well what buncombe is, and the subjects on which it is indulged in, that he is well qualified to accuse other Members of indulging in buncombe. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I will.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I did not hear the rule read. Does it make this in order so that if the bill is not finished to-day it will take the place of the Unanimous Consent Calendar on Monday?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. It provides that the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary may move to go into Committee of the Whole. It authorizes him, and then it would be for the House to decide whether on Monday it should go into the Committee of the Whole for the further consideration of the bill. If the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary should move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill, the House could either vote up or vote down that motion.

Mr. WALSH. Under the resolution, the Speaker might decline to recognize the chairman of the committee for that motion.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes; he could give preference to anyone else.

Mr. WALSH. I would like to ask the chairman if he is strongly in favor of the adoption of this rule?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes; and Mr. Speaker, I will move the previous question on the rule in order that we may have it adopted at once.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas moves the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

SUITS AGAINST THE UNITED STATES FOR MARITIME TORTS.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (S. 3076) authorizing suits against the United States in admiralty, suits for salvage services, and providing for the release of merchant vessels belonging to the United States from arrest and attachment in foreign jurisdictions, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. HICKS in the chair.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the first reading of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman withhold that request until the bill is reported. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent to dispense with the first reading of the bill. Is there objection?

Mr. GARD. Reserving the right to object, I think the bill should be read. It provides for a new procedure, and I object.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the United States, and any corporation in which the United States owns not less than a majority of the capital stock, may be sued in personam in the district courts of the United States, in admiralty, for any cause of action of which said courts ordinarily have cognizance in their admiralty and maritime jurisdictions, arising since April 6, 1917, out of or in connection with the possession, operation, or ownership by the United States, or such corporation, of any merchant vessel, or the possession, carriage, or ownership by the United States, or such corporation, of any cargo, in those cases where, if the United States were suable as a private party, a suit in personam could be maintained, or where, if the vessel or cargo were privately owned or possessed, a suit in rem could be maintained and the vessel or cargo could be arrested or attached at the time of the commencement of suit. Any such suit shall be brought in the district court of the United States for the district in which the parties so suing, or any of them, reside or have their principal place of business in the United States, or in which the vessel or cargo charged with liability is found, or in the district in or nearest which the cause of action arises, or in any district in which the Attorney General or other duly authorized law officer may agree to appear. In case the United States, or such corporation, shall file a libel in rem, or in personam, in any district, a cross libel in personam may be filed, or a set off claimed against the United States, or such corporation, with the same force and effect as if the libel had been filed by a private party. Such district court is hereby authorized to hear and determine any such suit upon the principles of liability and in accordance with the practice obtaining in like cases between private parties in suits in admiralty, and, in a proper case, to enter a decree for or against the United States, or such corporation, with costs, and if for a money judgment, together with interest at the rate of 4 per cent per annum until paid, unless the suit involves a contract stipulating a higher rate of interest, in which event interest shall be allowed in accordance with the contract, and all interest shall run as ordered by the court. Appeal from the decree of the district court in any case brought under this act shall lie to the circuit court of appeals and to the Supreme Court, and the decision of the circuit court of appeals shall be reviewable by the Supreme Court, as now provided in other cases of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction.

SEC. 2. That no suit in rem shall be brought against, nor any warrant of arrest or attachment levied upon, any vessel owned or operated by, or demised to, or in the possession of the United States, or such aforesaid corporation, nor against nor upon any cargo owned and in the possession of the United States, or of such corporation, but any suit brought hereunder shall, if the libelant so elects in his libel, proceed in accordance with the principles of suits in rem in all cases wherein maritime liens exist and where, if the vessel or cargo with respect to which the action arises were privately owned and possessed, a suit in rem could be maintained and the vessel or cargo arrested or attached at the time of the commencement of suit; but election to proceed as aforesaid as in rem shall not preclude the libelant in a proper case from also seeking relief in personam in the same suit.

SEC. 3. That the United States and such aforesaid corporation shall be entitled to the benefits of all exemptions from, and all limitations of, liability accorded by the statutes of the United States and of the several States and Territories, and by the maritime law, to the owners, charterers, operators, and agents of vessels.

SEC. 4. That neither the United States nor such aforesaid corporation shall be required to give any bond or admiralty stipulation in any suit brought hereunder, either in the court of original jurisdiction or in any appellate court.

SEC. 5. That in the event of any privately owned vessel out of the possession of the United States being arrested in any suit in rem or attached in any suit in personam, such vessel shall be immediately released without bond or stipulation being required therefor upon the United States, through the Attorney General, or any other officer duly authorized by him intervening and assuming responsibility for all liability arising in such suit, and upon such intervention said cause shall proceed against the United States in accordance with the provisions of section 2.

SEC. 6. That jurisdiction be, and hereby is, conferred upon the several courts of the United States for the purposes herein specified.

SEC. 7. That in any suit brought hereunder, the libelant shall file his libel, duly verified, with the clerk of the district court having jurisdiction of the cause, and shall forthwith serve a copy thereof on the United States attorney for such district, and mail a copy thereof, by registered mail, to the Attorney General of the United States, and shall file with the clerk of said district court an affidavit of such service and mailing. Such service and mailing shall constitute a valid service on the United States.

SEC. 8. That suits herein authorized may be brought within one year after the approval of this act, with respect to any of the aforesaid causes of action arising prior to such approval; and all other suits hereunder shall be brought within two years after the cause of action arises.

SEC. 9. That if any vessel or cargo within the purview of sections 1 and 5 of this act is arrested, attached, or otherwise seized by process of any court in any country other than the United States, or if any suit is brought therein against the master of any such vessel, for any cause of action arising out of, or in connection with, the possession, operation, or ownership of any such vessel, or the possession, carriage, or ownership of any such cargo, the Secretary of State of the United States, in his discretion, upon the request of the Attorney General of the United States, or any other officer duly authorized by him, may, in the event of such arrest, attachment, or seizure of any such vessel, direct the United States consul residing at or nearest the place at which such action is commenced to claim such vessel or cargo and to execute an agreement, undertaking, bond, or stipulation for and on behalf of the United States, or the United States Shipping Board, or such aforesaid corporation, for the release of such vessel or cargo from such arrest, attachment, or seizure, as by said court required, and, if an appeal shall thereafter intervene, to execute such agreement, undertaking, bond, or stipulation as shall be required for the prosecution of said appeal, or may, in the event of such suit against the master of any such vessel, direct the United States consul residing at or nearest the place of such action is commenced to enter the appearance of the United States, or of the United States Shipping Board, or of such aforesaid corporation, in such action, and to pledge the credit thereof to the payment of any judgment and costs that may be entered in such suit. The Attorney General is hereby vested with power and authority to arrange with any bank, surety company, person, firm, or corporation in the United States, its Territories and possessions, or in any foreign country, to execute any such aforesaid bond or stipulation as surety or stipulator thereon, and to pledge the credit of the United States to the indemnification of such surety or stipulator as may be required to secure the execution of such bond or stipulation. The presentation of a copy of the judgment roll in any such suit, certified by the clerk of the court and authenticated by the certificate and seal of the United States consul claiming such vessel or cargo, or his successor, and by the certificate of the Secretary of State as to the official capacity of such consul, shall be sufficient evidence to the proper accounting officers of the United States for the allowance and payment of such judgment: Provided, however, That where the status of any vessel within the purview of this section so warrants, nothing in this act shall be held to prejudice or preclude a claim of the immunity of such vessel from foreign jurisdiction, or prevent a settlement of the case through diplomatic negotiations.

SEC. 10. That any final judgment rendered in any suit herein authorized, and any final judgment within the purview of sections 5 and 9 of this act, and any arbitration award or settlement had and agreed to under the provisions of section 11 of this act, shall, upon the presentation of a duly authenticated copy thereof, be paid by the proper accounting officers of the United States out of any appropriation or insurance fund or other fund especially available therefor; otherwise there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, a sum sufficient to pay any such judgment, or award, or settlement.

SEC. 11. That the Secretary of any department of the Government of the United States, or the United States Shipping Board, or the board of trustees of such aforesaid corporation, having control of the possession or operation of any merchant vessel, are, and each hereby is, authorized to arbitrate, compromise, or settle any claim in which suit will lie under the provisions of sections 1, 5, 9, and 12 of this act.

SEC. 12. That the United States, and the crew of any merchant vessel owned or operated by the United States, shall have the right to collect and sue for salvage services rendered by such vessel and crew, and any moneys recovered therefrom by the United States for its own benefit, and not for the benefit of the crew, shall be covered into the United States Treasury to the credit of the department of the Government of the United States, or of the United States Shipping Board, or of such aforesaid corporation, having control of the possession or operation of such vessel.

SEC. 13. That all moneys recovered in any suit brought by the United States on any cause of action arising out of, or in connection with, the possession, operation, or ownership of any merchant vessel, or the possession, carriage, or ownership of any cargo shall be covered into the United States Treasury to the credit of the department of the Government of the United States, or of the United States Shipping Board, or of such aforesaid corporation, having control of the vessel or cargo with respect to which such cause of action arises, for reimbursement of the appropriation, or insurance fund, or other funds, from which the loss, damage, or compensation for which said judgment was recovered has been or will be paid.

SEC. 14. That the Attorney General shall report to the Congress at each session thereof the suits under this act in which final judgments shall have been rendered against the United States and such aforesaid corporation, and the Secretary of any department of the Government of the United States, and the United States Shipping Board, and the board of trustees of any such aforesaid corporation, shall likewise report the arbitration awards or settlements of claims which shall have been agreed to since the previous session, and in which the time to appeal shall have expired or have been waived.

SEC. 15. That the provisions of all other acts inconsistent herewith are hereby repealed.

The following committee amendment was read:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

"That every vessel owned by the United States or by any corporation in which the United States or its representatives shall own the entire outstanding capital stock, or in the possession of the United States or of such corporation, or operated by or for the United States or such corporation, is hereby declared to be a public vessel of the United States and to be immune from arrest or seizure. Any cargo owned and possessed by the United States or by such corporation is hereby declared to be public property of the United States and to be immune from arrest or seizure.

"SEC. 2. That in cases where if such vessel were privately owned or operated, or if such cargo were privately owned and possessed, a proceeding in admiralty could be maintained, a libel in personam may be brought against the United States or against such corporation, as the case may be, provided that such vessel is employed or intended to be employed in the carriage of cargoes or of passengers for hire. Such suits shall be brought in the district court of the United States for the district in which the parties so suing, or any of them, reside or have their principal place of business in the United States, or in which the vessel or cargo charged with liability is found. The libelant shall forthwith serve a copy of his libel on the United States attorney for such district and mail a copy thereof by registered mail to the Attorney General of the United States, and shall file a sworn return of such service and mailing. Such service and mailing shall constitute valid service on the United States and such corporation. In case the United States or such corporation shall file a libel in rem or in personam in any district, a cross-libel in personam may be filed or a set-off claimed against the United States or such corporation with the same force and effect as if the libel had been filed by a private party: Provided, That upon application of either party the cause may, in its discretion, be transferred to any other district court of the United States, or to any such court upon which they may agree.

"SEC. 3. That such suits shall proceed and shall be heard and determined according to the principles of law and to the rules of practice obtaining in like cases between private parties. A decree against the United States or such corporation may include costs of suit, and when the decree is for a money judgment, interest at the rate of 4 per cent per annum until satisfied, or at any higher rate which shall be stipulated in any contract upon which such decree shall be based. Interest shall run as ordered by the court. Decrees shall be subject to appeal and revision as now provided in other cases of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction. If the libelant so elects in his libel the suit may proceed in accordance with the principles of libels in rem wherever it shall appear that had the vessel or cargo been privately owned and possessed a libel in rem might have been maintained. Election so to proceed shall not preclude the libelant in any proper case from seeking relief in personam in the same suit. Neither the United States nor such corporation shall be required to give any bond or admiralty stipulation on any proceeding brought hereunder.

"SEC. 4. That if a privately owned vessel not in the possession of the United States or of such corporation is arrested or attached upon any cause of action arising or alleged to have arisen out of the previous possession, ownership, or operation of such vessel by the United States or by such corporation, such vessel shall be released without bond or stipulation therefor upon the suggestion by the United States, through its Attorney General or other duly authorized law officer, that it is interested in such cause, desires such release, and assumes the liability for the satisfaction of any decree obtained by the libelant in such cause, and thereafter such cause shall proceed against the United States in accordance with the provisions of this act.

"SEC. 5. That suits as herein authorized may be brought on causes of action arising since June 6, 1917, provided that suits based on causes of action arising prior to the approval of this act shall be brought within one year after the approval of this act; and all other suits hereunder shall be brought within two years after the cause of action arises.

"SEC. 6. That the United States or such corporation shall be entitled to the benefits of all exemptions and of all limitations of liability accorded by law to the owners, charterers, operators, or agents of vessels.

"SEC. 7. That if any vessel or cargo within the purview of sections 1 and 4 of this act is arrested, attached, or otherwise seized by process of any court in any country other than the United States, or if any suit is brought therein against the master of any such vessel for any cause of action arising out of, or in connection with, the possession, operation, or ownership of any such vessel, or the possession, carriage, or ownership of any such cargo, the Secretary of State of the United States in his discretion, upon the request of the Attorney General of the United States, or any other officer duly authorized by him, may direct the United States consul residing at or nearest the place at which such action may have been commenced to execute an agreement, undertaking, bond, or stipulation for and on behalf of the United States, or the United States Shipping Board, or such corporation as by said court required, for the release of such vessel or cargo, and for the prosecution of any appeal; or may, in the event of such suits against the master of any such vessel, direct said United States consul to enter the appearance of the United States, or of the United States Shipping Board, or of such corporation, and to pledge the credit thereof to the payment of any judgment and cost that may be entered in such suit. The Attorney General is hereby vested with power and authority to arrange with any bank, surety company, person, firm, or corporation in the United States, its Territories and possessions, or in any foreign country, to execute any such aforesaid bond or stipulation as surety or stipulator thereon, and to pledge the credit of the United States to the indemnification of such surety or stipulator as may be required to secure the execution of such bond or stipulation. The presentation of a copy of the judgment roll in any such suit, certified by the clerk of the court and authenticated by the certificate and seal of the United States consul claiming such vessel or cargo, or his successor, and by the certificate of the Secretary of State as to the official capacity of such consul, shall be sufficient evidence to the proper accounting officers of the United States, or of the United States Shipping Board, or of such corporation, for the allowance and payment of such judments: Provided, however, That nothing in this section shall be held to prejudice or preclude a claim of the immunity of such vessel or cargo from foreign jurisdiction.

"SEC. 8. That any final judgment rendered in any suit herein authorized, and any final judgment within the purview of sections 4 and 7 of this act, and any arbitration, award, or settlement had and agreed to under the provisions of section 9 of this act, shall, upon the presentation of a duly authenticated copy thereof, be paid by the proper accounting officers of the United States out of any appropriation or insurance fund or other fund especially available therefor; otherwise there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, a sum sufficient to pay any such judgment or award or settlement.

"SEC. 9. That the Secretary of any department of the Government of the United States, or the United States Shipping Board, or the board of trustees of such corporation having control of the possession or operation of any merchant vessel are, and each hereby is, authorized to arbitrate, compromise, or settle any claim in which suit will lie under the provisions of sections 1, 4, 7, and 10 of this act.

"SEC. 10. That the United States, and the crew of any merchant vessel owned or operated by the United States, or such corporation, shall have the right to collect and sue for salvage services rendered by such vessel and crew, and any moneys recovered therefrom by the United States for its own benefit, and not for the benefit of the crew, shall be covered into the United States Treasury to the credit of the department of the Government of the United States, or of the United States Shipping Board, or of such corporation having control of the possession or operation of such vessel.

"SEC. 11. That all moneys recovered in any suit brought by the United States on any cause of action arising out of, or in connection with, the possession, operation, or ownership of any merchant vessel, or the possession, carriage, or ownership of any cargo, shall be covered into the United States Treasury to the credit of the department of the Government of the United States, or of the United States Shipping Board, or of such aforesaid corporation having control of the vessel or cargo with respect to which such cause of action arises, for reimbursement of the appropriation, or insurance fund, or other funds from which the loss, damage, or compensation for which said judgment was recovered has been or will be paid.

"SEC. 12. That the Attorney General shall report to the Congress at each session thereof the suits under this act in which final judgment shall have been rendered for or against the United States and such aforesaid corporation, and the Secretary of any department of the Government of the United States and the United States Shipping Board and the board of trustees of any such aforesaid corporation shall likewise report the arbitration awards or settlements of claims which shall have been agreed to since the previous session and in which the time to appeal shall have expired or have been waived.

"SEC. 13. That the provisions of all other acts inconsistent herewith are hereby repealed."

The CHAIRMAN. The rule under which we are operating provides that there shall be not to exceed two hours of general debate one-half to be controlled by the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary and one-half by the ranking member of the minority on that committee. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VOLSTEAD] for one hour.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WALSH. This is a very important measure involving additional jurisdiction upon the courts and providing remedies which may cost the Government a great many hundred thousand dollars. I think there ought to be more than 28 people here to listen to the explanation of the bill by the chairman of the committee. I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. Evidently no quorum is present. The Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

Anderson	Doremus	Johnson, S. Dak.	Phelan
Andrews, Md.	Doughton	Johnston, N. Y.	Platt
Anthony	Dupré	Kelley, Mich.	Radcliffe
Aswell	Eagan	Kennedy, R. I.	Reavis

Dewalt	James	Padgett
Dooling	Jefferis	Pell

The committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HICKS, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill S. 3076; that the committee had found itself without a quorum, and he had caused the roll to be called; that 295 Members responded to their names—a quorum—and he handed in the list of the absentees.

The committee resumed its sitting.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota is recognized for one hour.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, when we entered the war it became necessary for us to engage in the business of building a large number of ships, not chiefly war vessels but ships for the purpose of carrying cargoes and transferring our soldiers from this side of the Atlantic to the scene of activities on the other side. We passed what was known as the shipping act, creating a Shipping Board; that board was authorized to create a shipping corporation, and formed a corporation known as the Emergency Fleet Corporation. This corporation has largely had control of the ships that have been engaged in carrying on the commerce needed during the war. A large number of those ships are still being operated, and will no doubt continue to be operated, by this corporation. It will take considerable time before we can dispose of those ships, if we ever do.

Section 9 of the shipping act made the Government of the United States liable for marine torts. Simple justice required that if the Government entered upon the business of carrying freight we ought to make the Government stand in practically the position of a private individual as to liability, so that those who might be injured by its operations could have a remedy. Under the old law the Government could not be sued. Consequently if we did not pass an act to give relief, all persons who might be injured by collisions at sea, collisions with our vessels, would be without remedy. Under the practice that has prevailed in years past parties who suffered in those collisions could secure relief only through a special act of Congress. Under section 9 of the shipping act creating this liability on the part of the Government several suits were brought because of collisions that occurred between Government-owned merchant ships and ships belonging either to our own or foreign people. One of those cases, known as the Lake Monroe case, went to the Supreme Court. While the Government strenuously contested the suit, insisting that it was not liable, the Supreme Court held that it was, and since then ships have been constantly held up not only in this country but in foreign countries. Difficulty has grown out of that fact.

Under admiralty law—I am sorry to say I know but very little about that kind of law, as the only ships we have out in my country are prairie schooners—jurisdiction is secured by attaching the ship—taking the ship and tying it up to the dock. At present that causes very large losses, because even the detention of a ship for one day usually results in a loss of two or three thousand dollars. It is for the purpose of avoiding this kind of losses that we are seeking to pass this bill. It has been asked by the Shipping Board and the Attorney General; it has the approval of the Secretary of State and the War and Navy Departments. The bill provides that instead of securing jurisdiction by seizure of the ship suit may be brought by service of summons upon the Attorney General, and that upon such service the Government shall become liable without an attachment. We provide that no ship of the Government shall be seized, arrested, or attached in any fashion. In lieu of this we provide a remedy by a suit in personam against the Government. In foreign countries our ships are being constantly tied up, and under the existing law there is no power anywhere to give bond to secure release of the ships. The custom under admiralty law is that as soon as a ship is tied up if payment is not made or satisfaction rendered in some fashion the party whose ship has been seized gives a bond or other stipulation that he will pay whatever damages may finally be adjudged against him. In a foreign country, of course, our law will have no force to prevent a seizure of our vessels unless we can make stipulations with those countries that whatever law we have shall apply there just as it applies here. But this bill seeks to give to our Government the power to enter into the necessary stipulation or give the necessary bond to secure releases of our ships. That is the general purpose of the bill. I do not believe that I ought to take the time of this committee to go into any more extended explanation of the bill at this time, because it will all be read and fully explained under the five-minute rule, as it is being considered in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I will.

Mr. WALSH. The bill as reported by the committee restricts this right to sue for damages resulting from collision or otherwise to damages received as the result of the operation of merchant ships by the United States Government. It does not include vessels of war or other vessels owned by different departments of the Government.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. No; it simply covers merchant vessels. The committee had extensive hearings, because a great many parties insisted that we ought to extend it so as to embrace naval vessels, so called, and other vessels of the Government not engaged in commerce. Of course, we have a very large number of those vessels. My understanding is that perhaps some effort will be made upon the floor to include those, but we will try to cross that bridge when we reach it. The Committee on the Judiciary concluded that it ought not in this bill include anything but merchant ships. This is in the nature of an emergency measure. I believe that if we are to consider the other phase of this shipping matter, we ought to do it in a separate measure and ought to consider it carefully, because I can see there may be many complications we ought to take care of, such as those which necessarily must arise during war and from conditions that do not affect the ordinary merchant ships.

Mr. WHITE of Maine. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Yes.

Mr. WHITE of Maine. Would this bill apply to Shipping Board vessels that are allocated to private concerns and are being operated by private concerns?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Yes; it covers all ships owned by the Government.

Mr. WHITE of Maine. Would it apply to vessels which have been sold by the Government and on which there are deferred payments with some sort of an understanding that the Government retained a qualified title of some sort in the vessel?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. There is a section that deals with vessels that have been sold. Under certain circumstances the Government may be liable for collisions that may have occurred with such vessels.

Mr. WHALEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I will.

Mr. WHALEY. In reply to the gentleman from Maine the gentleman did not mean to say that where the Government has sold a ship that there is any liability that comes in after the sale?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Yes; there is a provision that would cover certain cases.

Mr. WHALEY. Only in cases where the liability has been incurred before the Government has parted with the possession of the ship and the right to the ship?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. That I presume is correct. Section 4 is intended to cover cases of that kind.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I will.

Mr. WALSH. I want to ask the gentleman if it is not a fact that certain departments of the Government which operate Government vessels are now clothed with jurisdiction to settle claims arising out of the operation of vessels under its jurisdiction——

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Yes.

Mr. WALSH (continuing). Up to a certain amount.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Up to a certain amount.

Mr. WALSH. In the case of the Navy I think it is up to $500.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I do not remember the amount; it is not very large.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I will.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I rise to ask whether the language on page 12, in section 4, does not indicate that a suit can be brought against privately owned vessels where the cause of action arises out of previous possession or ownership or operation of the vessel by the United States? In other words, that after a vessel has once been sold, whether on a large payment or a small payment down, it is a privately owned vessel?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I presume so.

If there is no further question, I will reserve the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. THOMAS] use some of his time?

Mr. THOMAS. I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HUDDLESTON].

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask leave to extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, I wish to discuss the sedition bill, which has been reported to the House. The bill having been favorably reported by the committee and now being before the House, I feel I should get into the RECORD the protest of one Member who intends to vote against it, who regards it as vicious in principle, and who deeply regrets that it should be brought forward at this time, of all times most inopportune.

For months an expensive propaganda has been carried on in behalf of the suppression of free speech. That is what it has really been, although it has been disguised, as only the ingenuity of professional propagandists can do, with the cloak of patriotism. It has been hidden away, but the real purpose of this movement is to strike at this fundamental right that is safeguarded to us in the first amendment to the Constitution.

Mr. HUSTED. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I yield.

Mr. HUSTED. There are certain provisions in the first and second sections of the bill to which I am personally very much opposed, but I would like to ask the gentleman whether he thinks the freedom of speech guaranteed under our Constitution should be extended to the advocacy of the use of force and violence in overthrowing our Government or in overthrowing our institutions and our laws?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. The question that the gentleman asks is a commentary on the false front that has been put on this propaganda. The representation is made again and again that we have no laws against inciting to insurrection and the use of force against the Government. That is the false face they have put on this agitation. They claim we have not laws to prevent men from doing that kind of thing. We have such laws, and one of the purposes of my speech is to call attention to that fact. We have now on the statute books sections 5334 and 5336, and which I shall read, and I hope Members will take occasion to examine these statutes and study what is meant by them. Section 5334 is:

SEC. 5334. Every person who incites, sets on foot, assists, or engages in any rebellion or insurrection against the authority of the United States, or the laws thereof, or gives aid or comfort thereto, shall be punished by imprisonment not more than 10 years, or by a fine of not more than $10,000, or by both of such punishments; and shall, moreover, be incapable of holding any office under the United States.

Now, if you will compare this section with sections 1 and 2 of the bill which has been reported, which sections constitute the excuse for bringing the bill forward, you will find that the new measure adds very little of substance to the old law. Under this law that has been on the books since 1862 men can not incite others to insurrection without committing a crime. You will see, then, the force of the question which the gentleman from New York [Mr. HUSTED] asked me. It is a red herring across the trail.

We now have laws against advising men to insurrection. We now have laws against inciting men to take up arms against their country, and such an excuse for this new legislation is either founded in ignorance or an unwillingness to be candid with the people of the country.

Now, this new legislation has one substantial thing in it that section 5334 does not contain. It is the possible punishment by death. This statute, gentlemen, was passed during the Civil War, when the people of one half of this country were arrayed against the people of the other half and with families even divided. We find that Congress in that time was only willing to pass a law fixing the punishment at 10 years in the penitentiary for inciting men to rebellion. But now, in time of peace, when every sensible man knows that there is not the slightest danger of insurrection in the United States, when everybody knows that there is no substantial part of our people that has a thought of rising in rebellion against the Government, we have this proposed legislation, which fixes the penalty at death for such an offense.

Mr. GALLAGHER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I will.

Mr. GALLAGHER. The new law provides that anybody who advises insurrection is guilty of a crime.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I will say to the gentleman that "incites" is little different from "advises." I can not believe that "incite" does not include "advise." But the bloody penalty of death in time of peace is what this Congress is asked to adopt.

Mr. WHALEY. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I will.

Mr. WHALEY. Does the gentleman believe that where a man wages insurrection and rebellion against his country by force and violence, and death comes as a result of his act, that he should not be punished except by a term in the penitentiary?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Why, the best answer I could make to the gentleman is to read this statute. That was passed in time of civil war and——

Mr. WHALEY. I am asking the gentleman if he is willing——

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I am answering the gentleman, if he will permit me, in my own way. I hope he will not insist that I say yes or no. In time of civil war Members of Congress, whom we must assume had patriotism and ability comparable to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. WHALEY] and myself, considered imprisonment a sufficient penalty. I might be willing to approve the bloody penalty that the gentleman and his committee propose if we had a faction in this country threatening to take arms in their hands and destroy men's lives. I might even be willing to approve it if we had men in this country that made such a situation remotely possible. But I am not willing to do it in a time of widespread industrial unrest. Men who are dissatisfied with economic conditions or who have participated in labor disputes will consider such a statute, if passed at this time, as a slap in their faces, as aimed at them, and as directly impeaching their love of country. Such laws, if passed at all, should be proposed either when there is a real need for them or when there is such quiet that they will not provoke unrest and cause discontent.

Mr. Chairman, for months a nation-wide propaganda for the passage of drastic laws aimed at the freedom of speech has been carried on. This propaganda originated with big financial interests centering in New York City. It has been supported by ample funds. Cloaked as "Americanization," it has met with success. The reactionary press took up the cry and it has been echoed by many illiberal bodies of business men. Its fruits are now about to be gathered. Congress is about to respond. The House Committee on the Judiciary has reported a bill, and it is quite obvious that within a few days we will be called to vote upon this measure.

The measure pending before the House by report from the committee and other similar bills are brought forward upon the plea that they are necessary to prevent violent attempts to overthrow our Government. Their pretended purpose is to prevent insurrection and the forcible resistance of our laws. The excuse for them is that existing laws are inadequate to prevent insurrection and the use of force. I challenge this excuse. Upon this pretense I take issue. I assert that we already have adequate laws for such purpose, and that a careful study of the measures proposed discloses that their real intent is to strike at the freedom of speech. This is their real animus.

EXISTING LAWS ARE ADEQUATE.

We already have adequate laws. Sections 5334 and 5336 of the Revised Statutes are as follows:

SEC. 5334. Every person who incites, sets on foot, assists, or engages in any rebellion or insurrection against the authority of the United States or the laws thereof, or gives aid or comfort thereto, shall be punished by imprisonment not more than 10 years, or by a fine of not more than $10,000, or by both of such punishments; and shall, moreover, be incapable of holding any office under the United States.

SEC. 5336. If two or more persons in any State or Territory conspire to overthrow, put down, or to destroy by force the Government of the United States, or to levy war against them, or to oppose by force the authority thereof, or by force to prevent, hinder, or delay the execution of any law of the United States, or by force to seize, take, or possess any property of the United States contrary to the authority thereof, each of them shall be punished by a fine of not less than $500 and not more than $5,000, or by imprisonment, with or without hard labor, for a period not less than six months nor more than six years, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

These statutes were passed during the Civil War, when actual insurrection was going on and the country filled with spies and sedition. Then, if ever, drastic laws against insurrection and sedition were justifiable. The only addition of much substance made to existing laws by sections 1 and 2 of the proposed law is to increase the possible punishment to the death penalty. Think of it! In a time of peace it is now proposed to increase the penalty for violating this old war statute so that political offenders may be hanged along with rapists and assassins. This when we have just won a great war for democracy!

Section 3 of the proposed bill makes it a crime to propose or encourage forcible resistance to any law. Section 4 makes it a crime to display any writing or print suggesting a forcible change of law. Section 5 makes it a crime to display any flag as a symbol of any of the acts made crimes by the bill. Sections 6, 7, and 8 make it a crime to mail or to import any writing or symbol referred to in sections 4 and 5. Sections 9, 10, and 11 make unlawful any "gathering" which seeks, by injury to property, to bring about a change in the law, and make it a crime to become "affiliated" therewith with knowledge of its purpose or to contribute anything to it. The remaining sections of the bill I do not dwell on. They are in keeping with the drastic sections referred to.

The bill provides exceedingly severe punishment for offenders. The penalty for insurrection may be death, and for the other crimes created by the bill may be 20 years imprisonment and $20,000 fine. I make no attempt to do more than to point out some of the extreme features of this bill. It is unnecessary to take time to discuss its details. What I have said indicates its general character and shows its obvious purpose and its tremendous possibilities for oppression and tyranny.

The punishments provided by the bill are excessive, but it is not to its severity that I chiefly object, nor, indeed, is it to the actual letter of its provisions. It is rather to the use which is intended to be made and which will be made of the measure to terrorize the people, to intimidate free opinion, and to invade sacred American rights which have made of our country a great Republic; it is to the excuse which such a measure will give for a hateful system of spying and eavesdropping. The right to advocate change, to criticize public officials and measures, to denounce error and wrong when found in our laws and their administration belongs by tradition to every American. Without this right he will not consider himself a free man. His liberty he will consider a myth, and hence his love for country will be undermined.

THEY WOULD DENY FREEDOM OF SPEECH.

The proposed bill is of more than doubtful constitutionality. It is my deliberate opinion that in certain aspects it violates both the letter and spirit of the Constitution. The bill shows on its face that even its authors had doubts of its constitutionality. It shows their disposition to go to the extreme verge of constitutionality in abridging the freedom of speech, and that they are willing to take chances on its unconstitutionality in order to accomplish their purpose. It is clear that the intent is to take away freedom of speech in so far as the Constitution can be construed to allow, and to reduce it to the lowest possible point. I can not escape the conviction that those responsible for this bill have tried to evade the constitutional guaranty of freedom of speech and would destroy it if they were able to do so.

Those who initiated the movement which bears its fruit in this bill object in their hearts to the freedom of speech guaranteed by the Constitution; they can not take it away, so they would whittle at it and minimize it and bully those who would exercise their rights. They would fight ideas with laws; thought they would make a crime. By these means do they hope to continue to enjoy the power and privilege gained by their abuse and perversion of American opportunities.

No citizen has the right to advocate force, and it is the privilege of all governments to defend themselves against such. If this was the only scope of this measure, any patriotic Member might support it. But the measure proposed does not stop there; it goes beyond, far into the zone where criticism may be properly made and agitation rightfully carried on. Besides the inevitable result of the passage of a law against advocating force will be the intimidation and abuse of honest men acting within their constitutional rights.

As a law aimed at forcible change, it must be remembered that this is a subject which may be dealt with by the States under their police powers. Indeed, it was held by the Virginia resolutions written by Madison and the Kentucky resolutions, of which Jefferson himself was author, that all such matters were left by the Federal Constitution within the police powers of the States exclusively. Those resolutions denounced the sedition act of 1798 as an unconstitutional invasion of the police powers reserved to the States.

EXAGGERATION AND HYSTERIA.

Drastic laws aimed at free speech are wholly unnecessary at this time. America has flourished for more than a century without them. There have been times of great public excitement; wars have been fought; far-reaching changes have been worked in our institutions—all without such laws. As an excuse for drastic measures a great deal of loose talk of "reds," "I. W. W.s," and "revolutionists" has been indulged. In all this there is the grossest exaggeration.

It is amazing to observe the champions of the reactionary hysteria, which is part of the aftermath of the war, charging furiously at paper dragons, calling them "Bolsheviks" and "radicals." They beat their tom-toms and shout. From their noise one would think there was a real conflict. For their personal or class advantage they work upon the people's fears. But all is mere stage play. There is no danger of revolution in America. Not 1 man out of 10,000 has the desire to do violence to our Government, not to speak of being willing to engage in the attempt. There are perhaps a few misguided theorists and fanatics who have disordered dreams. There are perhaps some untaught foreign born who belong to clubs and societies having high-sounding and extreme platforms, neither understood nor seriously advocated by their members. America is in no danger from such as these. No drastic laws are needed for their suppression. This is not Russia, but a land of free and intelligent people.

Of course, there is no impropriety in laws against insurrection or real sedition, but does any sensible man believe that there is danger of such at this time? From what quarter does insurrection threaten? Who advocates civil war? The answer is none. The reactionaries are merely hysterical; that is all. They read of Russia, and the red terror dances before their inflamed imagination.

The serious objection to any and all the measures which are aimed at free speech is the motive behind them and the purpose to be accomplished; the intimidation, the bullying, the bludgeoning of free opinion, the restraint on criticism and agitation for proper change and development. The profiteer who would escape unscathed, the war contractor who would stand secure in his mask of patriotism, speculators, big financiers, imperialists, and those who would gain money and place out of the agony of the world—they would strike at their critics and those who impeach their methods and their system.

I do not fear for the great newspapers. They will not be suppressed. They are powerful and can care for themselves. Most of them are but the organs of the great reactionary interests, and no law will be passed to reach them. It is for the poor and humble that I fear, for the ignorant, those who have cause for discontent, for they will be bullied and humiliated in their efforts for the redress of their wrongs.

A LAW AIMED AT AMERICANS.

Let us not forget that the proposed law is aimed wholly at Americans. It is not aimed at aliens. The House passed the alien deportation act several weeks ago. Alien anarchists and other alien disturbers have been shipped out of the country, and that act will afford an easy method by which we may be rid of undesirable aliens. The pending measure is to deal with American citizens who are loose of tongue and free with criticism. It is to hang and jail Americans, not to get rid of aliens.

The mockery of it is that those who demand this legislation bring it forward as a part of a program of so-called "Americanization." They are seeking to "Americanize" Americans, to teach American principles to men who descend from the hardy pioneers who created America out of the virgin wilderness of the New World, achieved our independence, and founded the Republic. These self-elected saviors of America, in their desire to "stabilize society" as they express it, presume to interpret Americanism to those who drank in with their mother's milk America's traditions and an understanding of our institutions.

But the odious effort of the presumptuous agents of the big property, profiteering, and reactionary interests to suppress free speech does not mark the full measure of their impudence. They are advocating other equally hateful proposals. They are behind the movement which seeks to rivet a system of compulsory military service on America. They are furnishing its finances and concocting the plans of that movement. They see before them long vistas of usefulness in doing our thinking and planning. Congress is to be but their puppet and to promptly register their will. They arrogate to themselves the privilege of saying whom the people shall select for public office. Representatives of the people who do not bow to the will of these gentlemen are marked for political assassination.

The gentlemen who have planned for themselves this campaign for the control of our public affairs are experienced in business, learned in books, and have ample funds to carry on their work. They no doubt consider themselves superior to the plain citizen and worthy to do his thinking. But I warn them that they are riding for a fall. They may succeed temporarily, but they have underestimated the intelligence of the people. They will be found out and there will be a revolt against them and their works which will not only undo all they have done but carry us far in the opposite direction. Strong and great they may be in society and the marts of trade, but they are pitiably weak and small in their knowledge of the masses and of the great heart of America.

FREE SPEECH AND FREE PRESS.

As I have said, freedom of speech is fundamental American doctrine. It is protected by the Constitution; indeed in a sense it exists independent of the Constitution.

Our Constitution has no bill of rights designated as such. It was assumed by those who drafted it that the principles secured by the English Bill of Rights were unaffected by the Constitution except where reduced by its expressed terms. Several of the States were not satisfied and insisted as a condition of ratification that those fundamental principles should be enumerated and expressly guaranteed. In pursuance of this demand immediately after its ratification the first 10 amendments to the Constitution were adopted as a bill of rights. The very first of these amendments protects freedom of religion, of speech, and of the right of assemblage. It provides:

ARTICLE 1. Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof, or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

The same sentence which safeguards freedom of speech also guarantees freedom of religion and freedom of assemblage. Clearly no one of the three is higher than the other. If freedom of speech may be whittled away and its guaranty evaded, then also may freedom of religion be lessened. If men may be told what they may say, they may also be commanded whether they may worship God. If a rule for the control of men's speech may be established, then may not a state religion be provided for? If men may be forbidden the discussion of political measures, they may be restrained from worshiping according to the dictates of conscience.

Freedom of religion, of speech, and of assemblage are by their very nature inextricably commingled. The one can not exist without the other. The teacher of religion must be permitted to speak after his own fashion and the people to assemble to listen. A blow at one of these fundamental rights is an equal danger to the others. If men may be jailed for expression of political opinion, may they not also be imprisoned for expressing religious belief? If there is room under our Constitution to reduce and explain away the right of free speech and to rob it of its real meaning, then no longer may the people repose their perfect trust in freedom of religion, trial by jury, and due process of law; these, too, will be taken when the dominant voices of privilege and reaction make their demands.

The remaining amendments, constituting the Bill of Rights, protect the right to bear arms, forbid unreasonable searches and seizures, secure due process of law, trial by jury, and so forth. The principles set forth by these amendments are the very essence of Americanism. With the principles enunciated by the Declaration, they constitute our guaranty of democracy and mark and set us apart as a free people. Any attempt to evade these principles or to thwart their purpose is undemocratic and un-American.

THE SEDITION LAW OF 1798.

Once before in the history of our country Congress passed a law aimed at the freedom of speech. The sedition law of 1798 was conceived for that purpose. The law was passed; it was grossly abused, and numbers of worthy citizens were imprisoned under it. An outraged Nation thrust the party and the individuals responsible for it from power. Its speedy repeal followed, and not from that date until 1917 was any attempt made to suppress freedom of speech in the United States.

The sedition law of 1798 was proposed in a time similar to the present. The Federalists, under the leadership of Adams, Hamilton, and Goodhue, were in control; and, drunk with the power of office, they sought to gag their opponents and critics. France was writhing in the Terror, and the revolutionists were charged with every crime from piracy on the high seas to inciting an insurrection of the negro slaves. The Federalists made patriotism the cloak for their repressive measure. They would save America from France and the Terror even as now our would-be guardians would save us from Russia and the bolsheviks.

But, though cloaked in patriotism, the real purpose of the sedition law of 1798 was not patriotic but partisan. It was to suppress their adversaries and to still opposition and criticism. By the same sign the real purpose of a sedition law at this time is not patriotic but partisan. It is aimed at partisan criticism and partisan opposition, at Socialists, radicals, liberals, and whatnots, all equally bad in the eyes of the reactionary, to whom these terms are mere epithets which he casts at any and all who may hold different views or may criticize his methods.

It is needless for me to say that I do not approve, so far as I understand it, the essential principle of socialism, nor for that matter of the spirit of radicalism; but that is no reason why I would have socialists and radicals gagged. The socialist has as much right to be a socialist as I to be a Democrat. He has the same right to advocate his principles as I to promote mine. This is a democracy, a government by majority, which, by the methods provided therefor, has the right to change our laws and the Constitution itself. The majority has the right, as provided by that instrument, to rewrite the Constitution and to change to any extent the form of our Government. I would be un-American to attempt to deprive them of the power which the Constitution gives to the majority; and the fact that socialists and extremists may advocate radical or unwise changes is no reason why they should be gagged.

The Federalists were swept into oblivion by the passage of the sedition law. Led by Jefferson and Madison, who had opposed its passage with a courage and ability, worthy of the great age, the Democratic Party came into power. The attitude of the Federalists toward popular government was faithfully expressed by Adams, their leader, in his letter of August 13, 1798, to Harrison County citizens:

> I believe, however, that the distinction of aristocrat and democrat, however odious and pernicious it may be rendered by political artifice at particular conjunctures, will never be done away with as long as some men are taller and others shorter, some wiser and others sillier, some more virtuous and others more vicious, some richer and others poorer. The distinction is grounded on unalterable nature, and human wisdom can do no more than reconcile the parties by equitable establishments and equal laws, securing, as far as possible, to every one his own. The distinction was intended by nature for the order of society and the benefit of mankind.

That party, with its un-American principles, was swept out of existence, and to this day no political faction has dared to admit adherence to such principles, and none has dared to enact laws to suppress political discussion among the people. We have had numbers of wars, including the great Civil War, but no such drastic laws as that proposed by the pending bill were passed. Americans continued down to 1917 without any attempt to prevent free utterance of opinion.

The espionage act of 1917, passed in time of war, was the first since the repeal of the law of 1798 which punished men for the expression of their opinions. That was a war measure, and had reasons to justify it, but even with those reasons I could not give it my approval. If I could not vote for the espionage act passed in time of war, still less am I able to approve the suppression of opinion in a time of peace such as the present.

HEIRS OF THE FEDERALISTS.

From the time when the Federalists were stricken into extinction because of the odious sedition law of 1798 down to the present no political faction has dared to advocate the suppression of the voice of the people. Nevertheless, the Federalists have had their political descendants. There have always been those who by ruse, corruption, or evasion would defeat the will of the people and thwart popular government. They exist even in this day. They neglect no opportunity to promote reaction; through control of the press they mislead public opinion; they are the inveterate foes of labor and the masses; they seek to create in America systems of caste and privilege of which their own class would be the sole beneficiaries; they believe, with Adams, that property and position are entitled to rule. To make of the people their docile instruments they flood the country with propaganda; they mislead and deceive; they are seeking to fasten upon us a system of compulsory military service, through which they expect to teach the people obedience and humility; they war on free speech that they may be more secure. How foolish they are—how stupid—to answer discontent with heavier burdens, to stop complaints with gags. Why will they not learn from the fate of Germany and Russia?

DESCENDANTS OF JEFFERSON.

The charge of extreme partisanship, I believe, will not be made against me. As a Member of Congress I have regarded the public welfare above party advantage. But I can not do else than rejoice in the traditions of the Democratic Party. I remember that it was Jefferson who opposed the sedition law of 1798. I remember that Madison inveighed and the Democratic Members of Congress voted unanimously against it. I remember the Virginia and Kentucky resolutions denouncing it.

As Hamilton and the Federalists have their political heirs, so have Jefferson and Madison their spiritual descendants. My party has always stood for fundamental Americanism as set forth in the Declaration and in the Bill of Rights. It has always been the champion of the liberties of the people and of popular government. I would have my party in this moment of reactionary hysteria to stand for the old order and by its ancient tradition as the party of the people.

I am amazed by the folly of those who advocate extreme and repressive legislation at this time. It is a folly that reaches almost to the point of wickendess in the evil that it may bring upon our country. Are these men seeking to stir up civil strife? Do they invite public disorder? Would they drive law-abiding citizens into resistance? How far do they think they can go? There is a limit, and they may find it sooner than they believe.

I wish that the advocates of reaction might have vision, that they might be able to lift up their eyes and catch a better light. Loyalty can not be forced by law, but is brought forth by love and gratitude. Men will love our Government if it be just, if it reflect their wishes, if it be equally the Government of the mighty and the weak, if it be responsive to the demands of progress and the development of our civilization. Let the reactionaries expend their energy in perfecting our Government and its institutions so as to hold the affection of citizens rather than in Prussian force and repression.

MISCONCEIVE AMERICAN PRINCIPLES.

The error of those who seek to repress the citizen comes out of their misconception of the American political system. Our Government is not a thing apart from the people; it is the people themselves. Officials are not the people's masters, but their servants. Our Government is merely the instrumentality through which the people of America perform their will. They are the Government, their voice is its expression. It is merely the organization through which the people as equal shareholders transact their public business. Officers of Government have no dignities, privileges, nor functions except such as the people may confer.

They who advocate repression speak of loyalty to our Government as they would of the loyalty of an Old World subject to his monarch. They conceive of rulers as having powers and privileges in their own right and apart from the will of the people. They do not comprehend that in America the citizen is a sovereign, and there is none higher nor more royal than he. American loyalty is merely loyalty to our institutions and to the whole people.

Violence is not to be considered as a remedy for governmental evils, for these the citizen may cure by his vote. But the vote is nothing if uninformed. There must be discussion, agitation if need be. There must be freedom of opinion and unquestioned freedom of expression.

PERSECUTION, SPYING, AND TALEBEARING.

All the traditions of our country are against suppression of the freedom of speech. The mere proposal of measures to that end shakes the confidence, their passage will alienate the affection of the citizen. It is not so much that convictions will be had, for probably there will be none, but there will be persecution, espionage, spying, and talebearing. There will be intimidation and threats. Men will wonder what our time has come upon that new crimes are created and new laws enacted for their punishment. It will not only strike at the confidence of the humble classes at which these laws are aimed, but will weaken the faith of even the rich and powerful, who will conclude that they walk constantly upon the thin crust of threatening revolution.

But there is no need that I should point out the value of free opinion expressed in free speech. That has been better done than I could hope to do it. Great Americans from the beginning have expounded it and advocated its principles. I quote Judge Cooley's Constitutional Limitations:

If any such principle of repression should ever be recognized in America it might reasonably be anticipated that in times of high party excitement it would lead to prosecutions by the party in power, to bolster up wrongs and sustain abuses and oppressions by crushing adverse criticism and discussion. The evil, indeed, could not be of long continuance; for, judging from experience, the reaction would be speedy, thorough, and effectual; but it would be no less a serious evil while it lasted, the direct tendency of which would be to excite discontent and to breed a rebellious spirit. Repression of full and free discussion is dangerous in any government resting upon the will of the people. The people can not fail to believe that they are deprived of rights and will be certain to become discontented when their discussion of public measures is sought to be circumscribed by the judgment of others upon their temperance or fairness. They must be left at liberty to speak with the freedom which the magnitude of the supposed wrongs appears in their minds to demand, and if they exceed all the proper bounds of moderation the consolation must be that the evil likely to spring from the violent discussion will probably be less and its correction by public sentiment more speedy than if the terrors of the law were brought to bear to prevent the discussion.

Judge Hughes, recently Republican candidate for President, commenting upon the exclusion of certain Socialists from the New York Assembly, writing a few days ago, said:

If the Socialists are denied recourse through their duly elected representatives to the orderly process of government, what resort is there left to them? Is it proposed to drive the Socialists to revolution by denying them participation in the means we have provided them for orderly discussion of proposed changes in our laws?

* * * * * * *

I speak as one utterly opposed to socialism and in entire sympathy with every effort to put down violence and crime. But it is because I am solicitous to maintain the peaceful processes essential to democracy that I am anxious to see Socialists, as well as Republicans and Democrats, enjoy their political rights.

Nothing, in my judgment, is a more serious mistake at this critical period than to deprive Socialists or radicals of their opportunities for peaceful discussion, and thus to convince them that the reds are right and that violence and revolution are the only available means at their command.

Of course, men have the right to rebel against tyranny; our forefathers did that. It is because men may redress their grievances at the ballot box that forcible resistance to law is wrong. But what is the vote worth if discussion be forbidden? If voters be forbidden to talk among themselves or to hear discussion of public questions, they can not vote intelligently, they can not remedy the evils of government, and the franchise is useless. If the voter must take his opinions from corrupt newspapers, speaking only for the privileged class behind them, and if public speakers must shape their statements so as to meet the approval of a Department of Justice controlled by the party in power, of what value is the vote and of what account the result of the election?

The only way to meet false ideas is by better ideas. Thought can not be suppressed, although its public expression may be. If men may not speak freely, there results a feeling of oppression which aggravates the evil of which they would complain. If a thought may not be spoken it assumes greater importance. If a statement must be whispered for fear of the law its strength is multiplied a thousandfold. Revolutionary ideas receive more ready audience and adherence if they are forbidden by law. Acts may be answered by acts, but words can be answered only by words.

To forbid their expression is an admission of the justice of revolutionary arguments. America is in sorry plight if we can not justify our Government and its laws by sufficient reasons. Poor in defenders, indeed, is our country if none can refute the criticism of those who would overthrow it. Bolshevism, with its advocacy of class rule, is undemocratic and wrong. Its arguments may be met and answered. Let its advocates come into the open daylight, that their contentions may be exposed. There is no need to fear them before an intelligent people.

"WHO ARE THE RADICALS?"

This bill is proposed as a part of an ambitious program of "Americanization." Those back of it are dissatisfied with America and wish to remold it "nearer to the heart's desire," not to restore the old landmarks of freedom and equality of opportunity but to pass into new realms of "social stability," "ordered society," and entrenched caste and privilege. Those who oppose them in their meddling they meet not with reason but with epithets. Having no other answer, they call names as they would throw stones. Their favorite epithet for those who question their wisdom is "Bolshevik," and cast "radical" at opponents whose importance or position makes the coarser epithet inadmissable.

Who are the real "radicals" of America, and who are the real Americans? Certain fundamentals are recognized by all honest men as American. They are found in the Declaration of Independence and the Bill of Rights—the first 10 amendments to the Constitution. The principles there set forth are eternal in their Americanism. Without them "Americanism" is a mere empty word. Those principles are in a sense higher than the Constitution, for it was written merely to provide an instrument for their protection—an organization to carry them into effect. Without those principles the Constitution is an empty form.

It follows that the real American is he who defends the principles of the Declaration and the Bill of Rights. It is he who defends democracy, that governments "derive their just powers from the consent of the governed," freedom of religion, of speech, and of assemblage, trial by jury, due process of law, and so forth. The real American would enlarge and protect these principles, would apply them wherever possible, would extend their operation throughout the world and into every activity of mankind. He who follows the footsteps of Franklin and Jefferson and the founders of this Republic, he is the real American.

And it follows also that they who seek to reduce, evade, or corrupt those principles are un-American. They who would break away from the old traditions and push on with their program of "stabilizing society" and reducing the liberties of the people, they are the radicals." A radical is an extremist. He breaks away from old principles; he would experiment with sacred things. Those who would impair the police powers of the States, who would centralize authority in the Federal Government, create vast standing armies, drag helpless boys from their homes for compulsory military service in time of peace, meddle with religion, banish men without jury trials, and abridge the freedom of speech—they are the radicals who should be held up to execration.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VOLSTEAD] has 45 minutes remaining and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. THOMAS] has 50 minutes remaining.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. HUSTED].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Chairman, the United States Supreme Court, in what has come to be known as the Lake Monroe decision, held that under section 9 of the shipping act, which was passed in 1916, all of the vessels owned and operated by the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation in merchant service were subject to all the liabilities of privately owned vessels, including arrest and seizure.

We are operating about 1,000 vessels at the present time in merchant service and we have a large number of other vessels under course of construction which we will operate as soon as completed. The result of this decision has been that the Government has been put to great delay and loss through being required to give admiralty stipulations in order to release our vessels from arrest and seizure in the admiralty courts. And now in Cuba they refuse to recognize even our admiralty stipulations, and they insist that we give them a bond, and to-day one of our vessels is being held in Cuba at a loss to our Government of about $2,000 a day, I think, because no officer of this Government has the authority to give such a bond and no officer of this Government is willing to give a bond.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HUSTED. Yes.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Can we correct that by legislation?

Mr. HUSTED. Well, that is a question which the gentleman could undoubtedly answer much better than I could.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Can we say what Cuba shall do about vessels and licenses?

Mr. HUSTED. No; but we——

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The gentleman was using that as an illustration.

Mr. HUSTED. We do authorize by this legislation the giving of a bond in such a case.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Who gives the bond? A Government officer?

Mr. HUSTED. A Government officer, a United States consul, gives the bond in order to release the ship. Under the present law there is no machinery by which such a ship can be released unless a foreign Government is willing to accept our admiralty stipulations. As a matter of fact, in almost every case the foreign Government has accepted our admiralty stipulations, but in Cuba they refuse to do so.

But even if we do give the admiralty stipulations, we are nevertheless involved in great expense and delay, and these ships are now in commerce, and every day in which they are not being used in transporting commerce represents a substantial loss to the Government.

Now the important substantive provisions in this bill are contained in section 1 and in section 2. Section 1 defines what is a public vessel of the United States, and then provides that all public vessels of the United States, including those vessels which are operated by the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation in merchant commerce are immune from arrest and seizure, and it also provides that their cargoes are immune from arrest and seizure.

Section 2 provides for a right of action. It provides that in cases where, if such vessel were privately owned and operated, or if such cargo were privately owned and possessed, a proceeding in admiralty could be maintained, a libel in personam may be brought against the United States or against such corporation, meaning the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation, as the case may be, "provided that such vessel is employed or intended to be employed in the carriage of cargoes or of passengers for hire."

Now, I wish to use my time, Mr. Chairman, in discussing an amendment which I propose to offer at the proper time, to strike out this proviso carried in section 2, which limits the right of action to vessels intended to be employed or employed in the carriage of cargoes or of passengers for hire.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUSTED. Yes.

Mr. GARD. What is the exact language that the gentleman proposes to strike out?

Mr. HUSTED. The proviso in section 2, lines 10 and 11, beginning with the word "such," after "Provided, That," to strike out:

such vessel is employed or intended to be employed in the carriage of cargoes or of passengers for hire.

And to insert the following language:

in the case of a vessel not employed as a merchant vessel: (A) No suits may be brought under this act on causes of action arising since April 6, 1917, and prior to the approval of this act, unless the consent of the Attorney General of the United States is first obtained in writing.

That is to cover acts of war since our declaration. And—

(B) Where an investigation has been held by a department of the Government as to the facts of any such cause of action, arising since April 6, 1917, and prior to the approval of this act, and a witness can not be produced on the trial, his testimony, given at the investigation, may be offered by the United States and shall be admissible, if such witness was cross-examined at the investigation by the party suing or his attorney.

That limitation is put in at the suggestion of our departments. And—

(C) That no officer or member of the crew of any such vessel may be subpœnaed in connection with any such suit without the consent of the commander of said vessel.

That is to comply with the suggestion of the Navy Department that limitation is included in order that litigants may not be enabled to tie up the crews of vessels under a subpœna. And—

(D) That no suit may be brought under this act by the national of any foreign Government unless it shall be certified by the Secretary of State that said Government, under similar circumstances, allows nationals of the United States to sue in its courts.

That limitation was added at the suggestion of the State Department; and those limitations comply, I believe, with every suggestion made by any department of the Government, either before the committee at its hearings or by communication with the committee.

Mr. ELSTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUSTED. Yes.

Mr. ELSTON. Does this bill affect suits already commenced against vessels of the United States, or under the control of the Emergency Fleet Corporation, which have been libeled?

Mr. HUSTED. It does not affect suits already commenced. It affects causes of action which have arisen since April 6, 1917, when we entered the war, but it does not in any substantial respect affect any suit already commenced, I take it.

Mr. ELSTON. Of course, the suit would be predicated upon a cause of action, and in the case I have in mind the cause of action arose out of alleged negligence which occurred since the date the gentleman has mentioned, and I believe the vessel was libeled. Of course, the libel procedure is in the nature of a process and is founded on a cause of action. I was wondering what effect this bill would have in such cases?

Mr. HUSTED. It would not deprive the litigant in that case of any right which he has under existing law. It might grant some added advantage to him, but it would not take from him any right already possessed by him before this act goes into effect.

Mr. ELSTON. One would believe that the theory of this bill was that litigants were under some disability now, and that this bill was to remove that disability and give them some liberties that they did not have before; but I have in mind a case where it appeared that the litigant had brought an action as he would in a suit or process against a private individual.

Mr. HUSTED. This bill is chiefly for the benefit of the Government of the United States, in relieving it from certain requirements that it must comply with under the decision of the United States Supreme Court in the Lake Monroe case.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Will the gentleman yield for one question?

Mr. HUSTED. Yes.

Mr. DEMPSEY. I simply want the first clause of the gentleman's proposed amendment made a little more clear. As I understand it, with the purpose of exempting the war-time period, the gentleman fixes that period by date. If the purpose is simply to exempt as to war acts, would it not be better to make the exemption as to war acts by saying so; because otherwise do you not run the risk of excluding things which you do not intend to exclude, when you simply intend to exclude war acts only?

Mr. HUSTED. The only reference to war acts is in the limitation, and it provides as to all suits where the cause of action arose since April 6, 1917, and before the enactment of this measure, that the consent of the Attorney General must be obtained.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUSTED. I have a good deal of ground to cover, and I wish the gentleman would be brief.

Mr. MADDEN. I will. This bill simply provides that, instead of allowing the person who brings the suit to tie the ship to the dock, the Shipping Board may be able to give a bond and enable the ship to go on its way. Is not that all?

Mr. HUSTED. It goes further than that. So far as citizens of the United States are concerned, it declares the absolute immunity from process of these vessels. So far as the nationals of other Governments are concerned, it provides that the United States consul may give bond and release the ship.

Mr. IGOE. The claim of immunity is not only as to our own citizens but as to the citizens of other countries as well.

Mr. HUSTED. Oh, the claim of immunity, yes; although, of course, as to other countries we could not enforce the claim unless there was some treaty stipulation.

Mr. WHALEY. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. HUSTED. Certainly.

Mr. WHALEY. The gentleman simply means that foreigners can sue in our courts over here any one of these ships, and no bond will have to be given. If they are suing in our courts no bond will be required, but a bond will have to be given only when those ships are being sued in a foreign court.

Mr. HUSTED. Absolutely.

Mr. WHALEY. When the chairman made his statement he got that a little confused. Anyone can sue in our courts. A citizen of this country or a citizen of a foreign country can sue in our courts, and no bond has to be given by these ships, but if these ships are arrested in a foreign port, then the consul, acting under the orders of the Secretary of State, will give bond for the release of the ship.

Mr. HUSTED. I think the gentleman is quite correct about that, and I am glad he mentioned it.

Mr. OLIVER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUSTED. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. OLIVER. If the gentleman's amendment is adopted by the House it will give a right of action in many cases against the Government where that right does not now exist?

Mr. HUSTED. Oh, yes; in very many cases.

Mr. OLIVER. I wish to call attention to that, because in replying to the question propounded by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN], the gentleman's answer did not convey that idea. This bill carries forward the right to sue the Government much further than the Lake Monroe case does.

Mr. HUSTED. Oh, very much. The Lake Monroe case was solely confined to merchant vessels and the merchant service.

Mr. WHALEY. And under charter.

Mr. HUSTED. And under charter.

Mr. WHALEY. They had to be under charter. If they were in ballast the action would not lie.

Mr. HUSTED. My amendment creates a right of action against the vessels of the United States under these four important limitations.

Mr. OLIVER. In other words, it gives a right of action against the Government for any act of negligence in the performance of a governmental function.

Mr. HUSTED. Not any act of negligence, but any act of negligence in the operation of vessels upon the high seas.

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Mr. HUSTED. Or upon inland waters, where they meet on equal terms citizens of the United States engaged in private shipping.

Mr. TOWNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUSTED. I yield just once more, because I must not occupy all my time in answering questions, although I want to be courteous. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. TOWNER. The gentleman spoke as if the right of action would exist against the United States under the Lake Monroe case because of an interpretation of existing law. The sole ground upon which the Lake Monroe case was based was because permission had been given in the shipping act for suing the Government, otherwise there would have been no right to sue the Government under any circumstances, and no right to libel a vessel of the United States Government. Is not that true?

Mr. HUSTED. I did not intend to give any different impression. What I said was that the United States Supreme Court in the Lake Monroe decision held that section 9 of the shipping act subjected to arrest and seizure vessels owned and operated by the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation that were engaged in merchant service or under charter. The Government contended that they were not so liable and resisted the position, and the Supreme Court of the United States held that they were.

Mr. TOWNER. The language was such as not expressly to grant it, but by inference granted it. It said that the laws and regulations and liabilities governing privately owned vessels should apply to vessels owned by the United States. This act makes clear and definite the rights of the individual to bring suit against the United States, and fixes the liability of the United States, and does it on certain terms and conditions that are specified and made clear; so that it is in reality a repeal of the provision in the Shipping Board act, and making it more definite and certain as to what the liability is.

Mr. HUSTED. Yes; to a certain extent it enlarges the existing authority.

Mr. TOWNER. Even under the interpretation of the Lake Monroe case.

Mr. HUSTED. My amendment is based in reason upon the common justice of granting relief to the citizens of the United States who have been injured through the negligence or incompetent operation of public vessels of the Government of the United States.

I do not think I can do better, in the discussion of the question of the moral responsibility of the Government in these cases, than to quote from a very able brief of Senator Hoar, of Massachusetts, who was chairman of a committee that investigated this question. This report of Senator Hoar has been commented upon favorably in a number of cases in the Court of Claims.

> The committee think that the Government of the United States is not liable for loss or damage occasioned to private citizens by reason of any imperfection in the performance of the ordinary functions of government or by reason of the acts, omissions, or negligence of its officers or agents in the discharge of such functions. * * *
> But we are of the opinion that there are two classes of cases where sound public policy requires the United States and all other sovereign Governments to hold themselves responsible for injuries occasioned by the negligence of their agents. One is where the Government, through its agents, manages or controls property from which it receives a benefit or profit. * * *
>
> Another class of cases where this responsibility is recognized is where the Government is using or managing property through its agents under circumstances where these agents mingle on terms of equality with the general mass of citizens, and where the security of the citizens requires that the same obligation shall rest upon them, and that it shall be enforced by similar responsibility, as in the case of private persons.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. THOMAS. I yield to the gentleman from New York 10 minutes more.

Mr. HUSTED. The report of Senator Hoar continues:

> Congress has always recognized the obligation of the Government for injuries occasioned by the fault of the officers of its naval and other vessels in maritime collisions. * * *

The whole theory of governmental immunity for torts is based on the monarchical idea that the king can do no wrong. I contend that that has no place whatever in a democratic form of government. There is no reason why the Government of the United States should not do justice, and speedy and full justice, to citizens who are injured by negligence of officers where they engage together on equal terms. This idea of immunity of the sovereign has been departed from in this country. The Navy Department has told us that they never objected to a bill authorizing the claimant to go into the courts of the United States to have their liabilities in cases of this character determined. It has been the uniform practice.

We have also passed a general act authorizing the Navy Department to settle all claims which do not exceed $500 in amount. But when a collision occurs on the high seas between naval vessels of the United States and vessels engaged in private enterprise the loss is always a large one. It is usually $10,000 or more; and what is the situation of the man whose property is injured? He is compelled to come here to Congress and ask for an enabling act to permit him to go into a court and receive justice. He always gets it, but he is put to a tremendous and inexcusable loss and delay through that requirement. He may live on the Pacific coast, and he has to come here at great expense and delay to appear before the committee of the House, and in many cases it has taken years to get an enabling act through. After the enabling act has been passed, then he goes into the court. I submit that as long as it is the uniform practice to grant these acts to citizens to enable them to eventually secure justice through the courts, why can not we pass a general act permitting them to do so, when it really does not change the practice in any single respect except to benefit the man who has suffered loss and injury?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUSTED. I will.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I have been informed that by the laws of England and France citizens are allowed to bring suit against Government vessels.

Mr. HUSTED. I was just coming to that. In Great Britain they authorize such suits, in France they authorize them, in Italy, and even in Germany they authorize them. Litigants there can get swift justice if they have suffered loss and injury, although three of the countries are or were monarchies, where you would expect, if anywhere, to find retained the idea of the immunity of the sovereign, and the other is a highly centralized democracy.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUSTED. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Does what the gentleman is now saying apply and have reference to the practice of other Governments in respect to the naval vessels as well as to merchant vessels?

Mr. HUSTED. To all vessels; vessels of every character, as I understand it. I simply want to call the attention of the House to the fact that this amendment, in the form in which I am to offer it, is either actually approved or else it is not disapproved by any department of the Government of the United States concerned with shipping. I want to refer first to a letter from the Secretary of State, a recent letter, under date of the 13th of November, 1919, addressed to the chairman of our committee, Mr. VOLSTEAD:

> With reference to your statement that a suggestion will be made that S. 3076 be so amended as to embrace within its provisions all vessels owned by the United States, whether engaged in commerce or not, I have the honor to state that while the matter would appear to be one to be determined by the various departments having possession or control of such vessels, subject to their approval, this department sees no objection to the proposed amendment. It is suggested, however, that if this amendment is adopted it may be desired to limit any remedy provided to citizens of the United States and to the citizens or nationals of those foreign Governments which provide substantially similar remedies against their publicly owned vessels.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUSTED. Yes.

Mr. OLIVER. Has the gentleman a communication from the Navy Department?

Mr. HUSTED. Yes; in approval, and I will read that.

Mr. OLIVER. Where did the gentleman get his information that the Government of England permitted a suit to be brought against the Government for negligence in the operation of a warship?

Mr. HUSTED. They do that substantially. You do not sue the Government, but you do sue the navigating officer of the vessel, and the Government of Great Britain pays the judgment.

Mr. OLIVER. And there is no limitation whatever on suits against the officer operating a strictly naval vessel?

Mr. HUSTED. There is absolutely no limitation, as I understand it, from the statements made by the officers of our Government who appeared before our committee and spoke to that subject.

Mr. OLIVER. I was anxious to know what officers of our Government gave that information to the gentleman's committee?

Mr. HUSTED. There were before us representatives of the Shipping Board, representatives of the Attorney General and of the War Department, of the Navy Department, and of the Department of State. I do not know which one stated that Great Britain recognized its liability for collisions due to the faulty operation of its Government vessels. I want to read one other statement in this connection made by Mr. Campbell.

Mr. Campbell from May 1, 1918, until August 1, 1919, was the admiralty counsel of the United States Shipping Board and from September 1, 1918, until the present time was, and is now, special assistant to the Attorney General in admiralty. He is the man who has had direct charge of these cases, and he says:

This bill has the support of practically all the admiralty lawyers. I will be followed by Judge Veeder. He is going to suggest an amendment, by which the word "merchant" shall be stricken out. I want to say that I personally am in thorough concurrence with his views. I believe that the Government ought now to grant the right of suit in personam in admiralty in all cases arising out of collisions and accidents with respect to Government ships. As the law now stands, if a battleship of the United States runs down a privately owned vessel, there is no relief unless the private owners come to Congress and get a special bill passed. I think history will show you that in practically every instance where request has been made the private bill has been passed, but with the result that the litigation is concluded many, many years after the accident.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has again expired.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield me one minute more?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I yield one minute more to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. HUSTED. I wish to say in conclusion that this amendment as I shall offer it is asked for by practically the entire private shipping interests of the United States on the Atlantic coast or on the Pacific coast. I think about 90 per cent of that interest was represented before our committee, either personally through their own officers or by attorneys. I could give you instance after instance of the incredible hardships suffered by men who, without fault of their own, have suffered great loss through collisions of their ships with Government vessels, where they have been not only kept out of the principal amount of damage, but have been kept out of the interest for so many years that it closely approximated the amount of the principal, and then finally, as a result of the uniform practice of our Government, they obtained special acts and went into court and have secured their judgments.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH].

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of the bill reported by the committee. The effect of the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. HUSTED], who has just addressed the committee, would be to announce as a governmental policy for the future that vessel owners whose craft have been damaged by any Government-owned vessel, war vessel, or naval vessel, Coast Guard vessel, lighthouse tender, or any Government-owned vessel could bring suit against the United States for damage resulting. If we are going to change the policy of the Government in that respect, we ought to enact a blanket provision that any body or corporation can sue the United States Government at any time anywhere for any cause, the same as he could sue an individual. One of the things that Congress has retained unto itself is the right to say when the Government can be sued. I think we ought to still retain that right, but with respect to merchant ships we have said in the shipping act, and we say by this bill, that the Government is operating vessels which it owns or controls as a business enterprise, and when the Government goes into that business enterprise it ought to go upon the same footing as a private individual or a private corporation, and it ought to be subject to the same liabilities for any act of Government officials in carrying out that particular business enterprise. In carrying on the operation of these ships we are operating them in commerce, in competition with privately owned vessels and ships, and we ought to be put upon the same footing as those others; but to say that persons owning vessels who have been damaged by other craft of the Government not operated in commerce, not operated as a business proposition, should have the right to go into court and sue the United States for injuries received I submit would be unwise. The result of it would be, in my opinion, while that may not be a persuasive argument against it, that the district courts of the United States would be flooded with claims for all sorts of alleged occurrences which would be claimed to have resulted in damages. Of course the departments will say, "Oh, yes; this is a good way to handle this; give them blanket authority to sue and then we will not be bothered looking up these claims and preparing all these cases and getting all this evidence and papers—just throw them into court and they will summon us as witnesses and we will go there and testify."

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. HUSTED. If the right of action was given generally, would not the officers of the Government be more under a compulsion to more carefully prepare their cases than if no right of action was given?

Mr. WALSH. Oh, it would not be in the same department at all. It would be taken over to the Department of Justice. Now, as to the Navy Department representatives, who seem to favor this, the Navy Department now has jurisdiction to settle claims by adjusting them between the persons who claim the injury, individual or corporation, up to $500. Now, if there are a large number of cases pending, I think Congress might well increase that to $2,500 or $5,000, if you please, and allow them to adjust them, but to open the door of the courts to litigation for this, I submit, is unwise, and we ought not to be influenced too much by these opinions expressed by representatives of the departments, because this question after all is not a question of administration. It is a question of policy to be determined by the legislative branch of the Government, and the legislative branch of the Government has control of the purse strings, and we ought to move very carefully before we announce that we are willing that all vessel owners may sue the Government for claims for damages resulting from collisions at sea.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. WALSH. Yes, sir.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. What would be the distinction in the rights between the right of a captain of a vessel or the owner of a vessel injured at sea to bring a suit against the Government of the United States and letting a private individual do so who had his leg broken by an officer of the Government vessel performing his proper function as an official? Why should we grant the right to the owner who had his property injured and not grant the right to the one who had his leg broken?

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman means a member of the crew?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Oh, anybody a citizen of the United States. We propose to let the owner of property bring suit. There is no proposition, as I understand it, to let a man who has his leg broken by an official of the United States in performing his official duty to bring a suit against the Government.

Mr. WALSH. No.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I wondered what was the moral difference between the two propositions.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I yield to the gentleman two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized for two additional minutes.

Mr. WALSH. This is, as the gentleman knows, a peculiar jurisdiction, that of admiralty. They have it in the gentleman's district, I think, in respect to the operation of Lake vessels.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Well, I am not talking about these merchant vessels. I am talking about a naval vessel under the proposed amendment.

Mr. WALSH. The proposed amendment; I thought the gentleman was seeking to interpret the provisions of the bill.

Mr. WHITE of Maine. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. Yes, sir.

Mr. WHITE of Maine. The first section of this act defines the party to these suits to be either a vessel owned by the United States or by any corporation in which the United States or its representatives shall own the entire stock. Now, the United States has all sorts of representatives, ambassadors, consuls, members of the Shipping Board, a great army of people who help the United States in one capacity or another. I do not suppose it is intended by this language to include in this a corporation in which any officer of the United States happens to be the sole stockholder. I take it that it refers primarily to the Shipping Board or any other department or board of the Government. Am I right in that?

Mr. WALSH. I think that language is intended to cover the Emergency Fleet Corporation, who owns shares of stock as the representative of the United States in these Government-owned vessels.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. There are certain officers of these corporations who hold stock on behalf of the Government and hold the stock simply in trust.

Mr. WHITE of Maine. You do not intend to open this thing up to any corporation the stock of which may be owned by representatives of the Government, and yet I think you would have to concede that language was broad enough to cover any such case.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. WALSH. My time expired while a question was being asked me by the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I yield the gentleman two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized for two additional minutes.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I simply want to conclude by saying, and perhaps repeat it, that I do not think it is wise at this particular time for Congress to settle a policy of letting down the bars and letting these suits be brought against the United States. I think we should reserve that right as we have in the past, irrespective of what they may have in England or France or Germany or any other power on earth. We have gone along under that for a good many years. Of course, it will be contended, with a good deal of pathos, that some people have attempted to bring suit and have had to wait for 15 or 20 years before they could get Congress to act. I believe that if a person has a just cause and his district is properly represented, that he will have no difficulty in having jurisdiction conferred whereby the suit may be prosecuted and he may recover damages whenever the facts show that the United States is at fault.

But I am opposed to going further than this bill does, and I would be willing, as I stated before, to raise the maximum whereby these other departments which are operating vessels might be permitted to adjust claims without resorting to litigation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend and revise my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to extend and revise his remarks. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN].

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I am in favor of the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. HUSTED] to this measure, and I trust that it will be adopted. I want to speak, however, briefly upon another subject.

My colleague from Alabama [Mr. HUDDLESTON] made a speech a few moments ago expressing his opposition to a measure looking to the suppression of seditious utterances in the United States. I have not seen the bill to which he refers. There may be some bad provisions in it. If so, they should be eliminated. I am heartily in favor of the Congress of the United States making clear the American meaning of sedition in its broadest sense, and then I want the punishment made severe enough to prevent the crime of sedition in the United States. [Applause.] I am sure that my friend from Alabama and I are agreed in this matter.

As a result of seditious preachings indulged in by red anarchists in the United States an attempt was made to murder Attorney General Palmer right here in the Capital of the Nation. That poor misguided being who went to the home of the Attorney General to murder him did not do so of his own accord. He went as the result of seditious teachings and preachings carried on right here in the United States, and the outcome of it all was an attempt to commit murder in the effort to express contempt and hate for the Goverhment of the United States. The murder at Centralia, Wash., last November of American soldiers in a peace parade was the result of seditious preachments. The cowardly men who shot those boys from ambush simply put into action the things that had been advocated in the bitter speeches and writings of sedition and treason. [Applause.] Why, in New York City some months ago a man by the name of White burned the American flag before an audience that applauded his treasonable and damnable act. He then hoisted the red flag of anarchy over the ashes of the Stars and Stripes.

While the deadly enemies of our country shrieked their approval that villain and those who applauded his crime are the dangerous and deadly enemies of this Government. [Applause.] I am the friend of free speech and free press. And no man or woman who believes in the Constitution and who favors the American form of government need ever fear prosecution for anything that grows out of a law that seeks to protect and safeguard American institutions against the utterances of sedition and treason. [Applause.] A new condition confronts us. There are persons in the United States who came here for the purpose of stirring up strife. They are part and parcel of a world propaganda directed and leveled against representative government. They are here for the purpose of destroying our Government. Many of them are bold and brazen enough to admit that they are seeking to weaken and to ultimately overthrow our Government. Now then, gentlemen of the House, what are we to do with such characters? We love the Government of the United States. We are the trusted guardians of American ideals and institutions. What are we going to say to those who come here and denounce the Government itself, mock its courts, defy its authority, and urge its overthrow? Surely the Government, as a matter of self-preservation, is justified in imposing the death penalty upon those who seek to kill the Government. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. THOMAS] has 35 minutes remaining, and the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VOLSTEAD] has 15 minutes remaining.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. MCARTHUR]. [Applause.]

Mr. MCARTHUR. Mr. Chairman, the overshadowing issue before the American people to-day is: "Shall we have government of, by, and for the people or shall we have government of, by, and for special interests?" This question transcends all other issues now before the country, and it is one that must be met squarely and fearlessly—not only by men in public office but by political parties and also by the great body of the people. It can not be dodged or evaded, and, as it involves a principle, it can not be compromised.

Congress is face to face with this issue in the antistrike provisions of the Senate substitute for the bill H. R. 10453—the bill providing for the termination of Federal control of railroads, and so forth. This measure is now in conference between the House and Senate, and I for one hope that the House will have an opportunity to vote directly upon the antistrike provision and agree to the same.

The Senate substitute bill provides for a board of wages and working conditions, which possesses original jurisdiction over questions involving hours, wages, and working conditions; provision is also made for three regional boards of adjustment for questions of discipline. No decision of either board is final until approved by the transportation board—the general administrative board provided in the bill. It is proposed that this board shall consist of five members who shall be appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate; each member of the board shall receive a salary of $12,000 per year. The proposed committee on wages and working conditions is to consist of eight members, four of whom shall represent labor and four of whom shall represent the railroads. The regional boards of adjustment are to be similarly constituted, but with a total membership of six. The bill provides that the transportation board shall recognize all railroad crafts in the selection of employee members on the committee on wages and working conditions and regional boards of adjustment.

As proposed by the Senate substitute bill these boards and committees constitute governmental agencies or tribunals for the settlement of disputes between labor and capital. These tribunals are to be fairly selected and their awards, subject to appeal, as heretofore noted, to be final. If this feature of the pending measure is finally agreed to and signed by the President, the country will have tribunals for the settlement of these labor disputes which will be clothed with the dignity and authority of the Federal Government. An award or decree of such a tribunal will be more than a "scrap of paper."

In view of the adequate machinery which the Senate substitute provides for the settlement of disputes between railroad employees and employers, it would seem that the antistrike provision of said bill is fully warranted. This provision reads as follows:

SEC. 30. It shall be unlawful for two or more persons being officers, directors, managers, agents, attorneys, or employees of any carrier or carriers subject to the act to regulate commerce, as amended, for the purpose of maintaining, adjusting, or settling any dispute, demand, or controversy which under the provisions of this act can be submitted for decision to the committee of wages and working conditions or to a regional board of adjustment, to enter into any combination or agreement with the intent substantially to hinder, restrain, or prevent the operation of trains or other facilities of transportation for the movement of commodities or persons in interstate commerce, or in pursuance of any such combination or agreement, and with like purpose substantially to hinder, restrain, or prevent the operation of trains or other facilities of transportation for the movement of commodities or persons in interstate commerce; and, upon conviction, any such person shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $500 or by imprisonment not exceeding six months, or by both such fine and imprisonment: Provided, That nothing herein shall be taken to deny to any individual the right to quit his employment for any reason.

SEC. 31. Whoever knowingly and with like intent shall aid, abet, counsel, command, induce, or procure the commission or performance of any act made unlawful in the last preceding section hereof shall be held guilty of a misdemeanor and, upon conviction, shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $500 or by imprisonment not exceeding six months, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

In the consideration of this proposed legislation the first question that naturally presents itself is, Has Congress the power to enact such a measure? Section 8 of Article I of the Constitution of the United States says:

The Congress shall have power * * * to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several States * * *.

The question of this power was definitely settled in the memorable decision of the Supreme Court of the United States about three years ago, when the court upheld the validity of the so-called Adamson Act. That act had been attacked by counsel for the railroads on the ground that it was not an act limiting the hours of service of trainmen, but in reality a wage act. Replying to this objection, and writing the prevailing opinion of the court, Chief Justice White said:

Congress has the power to adopt the act in question, whether it be viewed as a direct fixing of wages to meet the absence of a standard on that subject, resulting from the dispute between the parties, or as the exercise by Congress of the power which it undoubtedly possessed to provide by appropriate legislation for compulsory arbitration—a power which inevitably resulted from its authority to protect interstate commerce in dealing with a situation like that which was before it. (Wilson v. New, 243 U. S., 359.)

Those justices who disagreed with the prevailing opinion clearly recognized that portion of it which I have just read, for Mr. Justice McReynolds, in his dissenting opinion, said:

It follows as of course that Congress has power to fix a maximum as well as a minimum wage for trainmen; to require compulsory arbitration of labor disputes which may seriously and directly jeopardize the movement of interstate commerce; and to take measures effectively to protect the free flow of such commerce against any combination, whether of operatives, owners, or strangers. (Wilson v. New, 243 U. S., 389.)

In view of this plain and positive language of the highest judicial tribunal in the land, I feel that it is a waste of time to argue further upon the right of Congress to enact legislation of this character.

Those who are opposed to this legislation have busied themselves with the circulation of propaganda to the effect that the antistrike section of the proposed act is unconstitutional in that it requires involuntary servitude and thereby violates section 1 of Article XIII of the Constitution of the United States. This argument is altogether unsound in that the section in question expressly provides that an individual may quit work whenever he pleases and for any reason. There is a vast distinction between an individual quitting work and a body of men engaging in a strike. A striker does not quit work in the sense of terminating his services; he joins with others in refusing to work and in trying to prevent others from filling his place until his demands are granted. He expects to return to his work under conditions prescribed by him and his associates and obtained by the rule of force rather than the rule of reason. He should not be permitted, in concert with his fellows, temporarily to quit work for the purpose of penalizing transportation in order to advance his own interests at the expense of and damage to the public. [Applause.] As Mr. Justice McKenna said:

When one enters into interstate commerce one enters into a service in which the public has an interest and subjects oneself to its behests. And this is no limitation of liberty; it is the consequence of liberty exercised, the obligation of his undertaking, and constrains no more than any contract constrains. The obligation of a contract is the law under which it is made and submission to regulation is the condition which attaches to one who enters into or accepts employment in a business in which the public has an interest. (Wilson v. New, 243 U. S., 363.)

The "involuntary-servitude" talk is not likely to fool anyone who has read the section in question and who knows anything about strikes and strikers. There is no merit in the bogus plea that this section of the proposed act violates section 1 of Article XIII of the Constitution of the United States. [Applause.].

We hear much these days of the rights of organized labor, but hear little of the rights of the general public, who in the final analysis bears the burden and pays the sacrifice demanded by the senseless strike with its diminished production. The general public has no strike weapon and no rule of force to secure obedience to its demands. The general public must go to court for the determination of its grievances and must abide by the decrees of the court. There is no such thing as a strike for the general public; it must submit to the law of the land and the decrees of the courts. If Smith and Jones have a grievance, they settle it before a legally constituted tribunal. If Smith, Jones, and Brown are associated together in business and become involved in a dispute with some other business concern, they must settle their difficulties in the manner provided by law; the doctrine of force is unknown to them in the adjustment of their difficulties. Organized labor, however, wishes to continue its mad orgy of applying the rule of force for the settlement of its demands. What is there so sacred about organized labor that it can not submit its grievances to a legally constituted tribunal of the Government for adjudication? If a citizen commits an offense against society, he is haled into court and tried not by the rule of force but by the rule of reason and under the law of the land. His property, his liberty, even his life, may be at issue, yet he is required to submit to the decision of a governmental tribunal. The rights of large business concerns, of large associations of individuals, of cities and States, and even the Federal Government itself are thus determined. Why should not organized labor be required to meet the rest of us on common ground and submit itself to the same authority that governs us? Why should organized labor be accorded special privileges? If there were no provision for a fair and impartial settlement of grievances in the pending bill, I for one could not subscribe to the antistrike section, but I feel that ample provision has been made for the adjustment of any and all disputes that may arise and that the tribunals proposed to be set up by this bill will act with fairness and justice. In view of this belief and with an abhorrence of strikes and their consequent train of misery and suffering, I intend to vote for the retention of the antistrike section. [Applause.]

I do not believe in class legislation or class exemption. When the railroad brotherhood chiefs came here in the fall of 1916 and applied their "strong-arm" methods to secure passage of the Adamson bill I was one of those who opposed their program and the measure referred to. I shall not attempt at this time to argue the unwisdom of this particular piece of legislation, but can not refrain from voicing my disapproval of the methods by which it was passed. They constituted an abdication of the functions of lawmaking to the four brotherhoods, active through their chosen spokesmen. They enunciated the doctrine of force in the highest degree—force that would have tied up the transportation systems of the country at one of the most critical periods in the Nation's history. It was essentially class legislation in the interests of a well-organized and highly efficient group of men.

As a sequel to the Adamson law we are told by the railroad machinists that if the pending bill with its antistrike provision is passed they will strike. They thus maintain that their right to strike is superior to the right of the people to have uninterrupted railroad service, but they go still further when they tell Congress that it must not pass a certain measure with a certain provision. This is nothing less than a bold attempt of a minority to force its will on the lawmaking power of the country under the threat of a nation-wide disaster. If Congress succumbs to this threat, it will be construed everywhere as an invitation to well-organized groups whose services are essential to the production or transportation of the necessities of life to coerce Congress into passing or rejecting any legislation in which they may happen to be interested. The action of the machinists is a direct challenge to the Government and if carried to its logical conclusion will breed revolution.

It has been suggested that the antistrike provision of the pending bill can not be enforced. Such objection assumes the disloyalty of the great body of railway employees—a most violent assumption. I have only to refer to the great strike of 1894 to show that the great body of American workers prefer to obey the law of the land rather than the lawless commands of disloyal advisers. Furthermore, if any considerable number of persons should act in disobedience to law, the Government would compel obedience. I can not conceive of any situation that would arise in this country where the Government could not enforce the laws on our statute books. The history of our country, replete with accomplishment and progress, is sufficient answer to those who say the law can not be enforced. [Applause.]

The common welfare of the American people demands free and uninterrupted transportation of passengers and freight in interstate commerce, especially food, fuel, and clothing. A nation-wide railroad strike, if carried on for any considerable period, would cause untold misery, suffering, and starvation, not to mention financial losses running into the billions. Surely the Government has a sovereign and inherent right to protect its people from the consequences of such a situation, and surely the great law-making power of the Government will hold the general welfare of all the people paramount to the right of a minority of them to strike and apply the rule of force to the settlement of grievances that can be settled in a manner provided by law.

It has been urged that we should not single out the railroad workers and make them amenable to antistrike legislation without applying it to all classes of workers. The answer to that objection is the lack of jurisdiction of the Federal Government except in questions affecting interstate commerce. Congress unquestionably has the right to pass legislation regulating interstate commerce and labor connected therewith, but it would not be warranted in entering the field of State or local legislation. [Applause.]

A railroad man recently told me that this proposed legislation is useless, for the reason that there is no likelihood of a strike. I can not subscribe to his belief, because I well remember the near approach to a general strike which we experienced in 1916, when the Adamson bill was jammed through Congress. I am convinced from long study and observation that an overwhelming majority of the American people are opposed to strikes and lockouts and wish to see some legally constituted tribunal set up for the settlement of industrial disputes. The strike is unsound, uneconomic, destructive, revolutionary, and altogether useless. There has never been a strike in this or any other country that could not have better been settled by men reasoning together. If they persist in refusing to do this, the Government must step in with the strong arm of the law and compel them to do so. If our modern-day civilization can not find a legally constituted substitute for the strike, then man has made little progress along the lines of wisdom, truth, and justice. [Applause.]

Objectors tell us that "Wall Street" and "powerful financial interests" are back of this antistrike campaign. This is the usual last-ditch argument of demagogy—something by way of billingsgate to be flung when sound argument fails. If the issue were one in which organized labor and "powerful financial interests" were alone concerned, these elements could fight each other to a finish and the public would look on complacently. The chief interest, however, in the pending legislation is the public interest. The public is the great third party that pays the bills and bears the burdens of all our economic and industrial woes. Surely the public has a right to be heard in the enactment of this or any other legislation.

The antistrike section of the pending bill plays no favorites; it applies to "officers, directors, managers, agents, attorneys, or employees." It forbids them "to enter into any combination or agreement with the intent substantially to hinder, restrain, or prevent the operation of trains or other facilities of transportation." It is aimed at combinations, not individuals. It is not designed especially to punish laboring men, but includes them along with others.

I have no quarrel with the legitimate aims and purposes of organized labor. I would not propose for it a law that would not apply with equal force to any and all other factions or elements, nor would I be willing to grant special privileges to organized labor or any other group or faction of our people. I am opposed to special privilege in all its forms, and believe in equal rights and equal obligations for all men. [Applause.]

A decade ago our Government was fighting to regulate organized wealth—fighting to prevent organized plunderers from exploiting the Nation. To-day we are face to face with the ruthless demands of organized labor whose lobbyists and henchmen swarm the Capitol in their efforts to secure special privileges and special immunities. They are not only opposing the measure now in conference but they are clamoring for two years more of Government operation of railroads at the expense of the traveling public, the shippers, and the country generally, and for the especial benefit of the railroad employees. They are also clamoring for the adoption of the Plumb plan, which would turn over the railroads, bag and baggage, to the brotherhoods and their affiliated organizations, allowing the taxpayers the high privilege of putting up the deficits. These organizations to-day possess the power to inflict the awful conditions of a nation-wide strike upon this country. They are the most highly organized of all the trades; they have the funds to finance a big strike and the affiliations to make such a strike effective. They hold in their hands the power to bring a terrible calamity upon the American people as a weapon for enforcing their will. They hold the fortunes and the very lives of millions of their fellow citizens within their grasp. Are the American people content to have any class of citizens wield such a tremendous power over the public? Are the American people willing to countenance this gigantic monopoly? Are the American people willing to subordinate their interests to the interests of the railroad men?

This House must answer these questions directly, courageously, and without shirking. [Applause.] It is for this House to say whether Government is to be a thing of worth—the embodiment of the highest hopes and aspirations of a majority of all the people—or whether it is to be the decree of groups and factions. It is for this House, speaking for all of the American people, to say whether we shall have government by law or government by men. [Applause.] It is for this House to say whether it believes in the government of our fathers or in government by force. It is for this House to determine whether Lincoln's conception of government of, by, and for the people shall be discarded for government of, by, and for special interests. [Applause.]

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

Mr. VOLSTEAD. And I yield five minutes to the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I can not believe that the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HUDDLESTON] voiced the sentiment of all of the good people of the great southern city of Birmingham. Since he has seen fit to severely criticize the framers of the proposed House sedition act and those who favor its passage I might not be out of place in calling the gentleman's attention to a criticism on the other side of the question coming from one of the great southern Democratic newspapers of our country, the Houston Daily Post, of Houston, Tex. In its issue of Monday, January 12, 1920, it says this editorially:

When a Congressman declares that the Graham antitreason bill is too strong that man is evidently afraid of the anarchist vote in his district.

The gentleman intimates, Mr. Chairman, that he might possibly be in favor of a severe penalty if there were persons successfully advocating the overthrow of this Government by force of arms, causing bloodshed, and so forth, but at the same time seemingly scoffs at the idea of any such acts existing in the United States, and, as I understood his argument, he favored a maximum punishment of not exceeding 10 years in prison for the crime of sedition.

Let me call the attention of the gentleman from Alabama to the fact that during last April in the city of New York Dr. Scott Nearing, to an audience of 3,000 union men, preached revolution and advocated the overthrow of this Government by force of arms and was applauded to a man by that great organized audience. Let me call the attention of the gentleman from Alabama to the fact that here in Washington, his Nation's Capital, if you please, on last May Day eve, in the Pythian Temple, under the auspices of the fur worker's union, there met representatives from every union in this city, and they were addressed by speakers waving the red flag of anarchy, singing the red I. W. W. songs and anthems of anarchy; that the Washington Star the next day said of that meeting that anarchy reigned supreme, unhindered, and unchecked, and that not only bolshevism was preached, but that anarchy, bloody revolution, and nihilism was advocated without hesitancy.

Has the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HUDDLESTON] so soon forgotten about the murderous bomb that was sent to the home of his distinguished colleague, the late lamented and beloved statesman, Hon. John L. Burnett, and has he forgotten about the numerous other bombs that were sent to other prominent Government officials, and even the one which, in the dead hour of the night, was placed upon the doorstep of the Attorney General in the city of Washington? Does not the gentleman from Alabama know that all of the above were seditious conspiracies against the Government of the United States?

Has the gentleman from Alabama so soon forgotten the attempted assassination of the whole family of our beloved and highly respected colleague, Congressman COOPER, of Ohio, when the gas pipes in his residence were disconnected in a hellish attempt to murder him, his wife, and his innocent little children?

Has the gentleman from Alabama so soon forgotten the attempt upon my own life and that of my family when in the darkness of the night a rifle ball was shot through both glass doors of the sides of my automobile, shattering glass upon my wife and five children?

Has the gentleman from Alabama so soon forgotten the dastardly, murderous attack made upon our uniformed soldiers carrying their victorious flag when in cold blood they were shot down in peaceful parade without warning in their own land?

Then, think of the acts of violence that have occurred in this country since! Yet the gentleman from Alabama thinks that the people of America should continue to sleep and slumber under such circumstances.

Let me call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that several of the New York newspapers of this morning tell us that the distinguished gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL], the chairman of the great Committee on Rules, has seen fit to deny a rule making in order this Graham sedition bill, stating that such action was taken because Mr. Samuel Gompers and the American Federation of Labor were against this sedition bill and had demanded a hearing on it. Because of what? Why was the rule denied and a hearing granted? Why, if you please? Because Mr. Gompers and the American Federation of Labor had asked that no rule be granted, but the matter be suspended; and said New York newspapers stated that upon such demand of Mr. Samuel Gompers and the American Federation of Labor a hearing had been granted on the bill for next Thursday.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas rose.

Mr. BLANTON. Did the New York newspapers correctly report my friend from Kansas?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I do not know where the newspapers could have gotten that impression. After consulting other members of the committee I did fix on next Thursday at 10.30 o'clock to hear both the proponents and the opponents of the measure.

Mr. BLANTON. Did the opponents of the measure include Mr. Gompers?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Not that I know of.

Mr. BLANTON. This morning's New York newspapers so report, and I have not seen any denial from Mr. Gompers. Before this sedition bill was reported the Committee on the Judiciary held exhaustive hearings on the measure, considering not only the sedition bill introduced by me but likewise numerous others.

I want here to call the attention of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HUDDLESTON] and all his people to the fact that in that great "march" from Atlantic City on the Capital made by Mr. Samuel Gompers and his cohorts of the American Federation of Labor on Flag Day that in front of this Nation's Capitol he said that if beer and wine were taken from the laborers of this country there would be revolution throughout this land. I call the attention of the gentleman from Alabama to the fact that subsequently, when the thought was attempted to be foisted upon this country that there should be passed what is known as the Plumb plan, one of the most pernicious plundering plans that was ever presented to a free Republic, whereby $20,000,000,000 of the people's money was to be taken ruthlessly from them and given to a class, Mr. Gompers cabled from Europe to this country and said that 400,000 railroad men demanded the passage of such a law, and that if it were not passed by Congress revolution would follow. Again, both Mr. Samuel Gompers and the American Federation of Labor have arrogantly threatened that if an antistrike provision is placed in the railroad bill now pending before Congress that there will be revolution in this country. Because the American people have unheeded the cry of "Wolf!" "Wolf!" so many times are we to slumber longer and be wholly unprepared when the all-crushing nation-wide catastrophe does come upon us? If the American Federation of Labor is opposing the proposed sedition bill, in what way does it excuse itself in thus lining up in favor of the anarchists in America?

Gentlemen, it is time for all this revolutionary talk to stop. Adequate punishment is the only thing that will stop it. Law and order must once more prevail if America is to remain a decent place to live. If this talk incites people to preach and do acts of anarchy in this Nation, and through such anarchistic efforts on the part of individuals and through conspiracies the death of innocent people is caused, I say there ought to be a hanging, and it will take a hanging to stop it. And I say that the Graham sedition bill ought to meet with the approval of every American citizen, because it comes from the Attorney General of the United States; it comes by his request, with the statement that he needs this law to stamp anarchy out of this country. Are we going to give the Attorney General what he asks for and what he needs? Or, because certain anarchists object to being punished and deported, as it interferes with their business, are we to further imperil the life and peace of the people of this Republic?

The gentleman from Oregon [Mr. MCARTHUR] referred to the Adamson law, which in 1916, by just such threats of destroying the industrial life of this Nation, was crammed down the throat of Congress. Was it to give an eight-hour workday to the brotherhoods? No. You and I and everyone else know that it was passed merely to pay them extra for all time they put in over eight hours per day. Examine the statements which have been sent to me from the general managers of various railroads, and you will see that in numerous cases the overtime pay for the various members of crews amounts to quite a substantial increase in monthly earnings, and as a result we are getting the poorest service possible. Not a train runs on time. All trains are always late. It is almost impossible for business men to get freight. Making train connections is a dream of the past. We pay the crew on every train to run it late rather than on time. When a train is several hours late the entire crew profits thereby by getting overtime pay, while a whole trainload of passengers suffer. We reward railroad men for poor service. Every posted man knows that it is largely with railroad employees as to whether a train gets out of a station late or on time, according to how they each do their work and perform their individual tasks at stations.

Are we to meet the issue now before us in this railroad legislation like men, or are we to again cringe and give in, like was done by Congress in 1916? Are we to be guided and controlled by threats, or are we to act for all the people of the United States?

The splendid editorial appearing in this morning's Washington Post should appeal to every Congressman and Senator. It is of such merit that I here insert it, to wit:

[Editorial from Washington Post, Jan. 17, 1920.]

TO MEMBERS OF THE HOUSE.

Gentlemen of the House of Representatives, it has long been your boast that you, more directly than the Senate, represent the people; that you are in closer touch with them, know better their feelings and wants, and are more ready to respond to the people's will.

Whatever may have been the case in the past, it is to-day the Senate that stands firmly and courageously for the rights of all the people as against the unjust demands of a class. In your railroad bill you have sacrificed the people's rights in favor of a selfish and threatening minority, and you have done it because, no doubt, you believed it would avoid a labor war. You have sought, by dodging the issue and by surrendering the people's rights, to evade the unpleasant duty of voting against the demands of this selfish minority. You do not wish to have this minority mark you for defeat, and you hope that the people will demand less of you than is demanded by this compact and determined minority.

While Americans have shown that they are unalterably opposed to having an overseas supergovernment supplant this Nation, and that they are equally opposed to turning over this Nation to red anarchy, the fact remains that a would-be supergovernment has worked itself into power here at home and is now intimidating the House of Representatives. The Adamson Act was nothing but a surrender by the President and Congress to a minority of the people, and this minority now demands further concessions in its own favor and against the interest of the people.

Until recently the people have been too much absorbed in their own affairs and in the progress of peacemaking to pay strict attention to the character of legislation enacted by their representatives in Washington. They have not supervised their representatives as they should have done. The coal strike, which began to freeze them, and the threatened railroad strike caused the people to turn their attention to the demands of organized classes, led in some instances by un-American bolshevist agitators and professed anarchists. The people took note that the best and patriotic leaders of these organizations were thrust to the rear, while red leaders stepped forward with thinly disguised threats of revolution.

The danger of a universal railroad strike, which was actually threatened, aroused the country and the Senate. This is a state of anarchy that will never be permitted. The people will not submit to such an atrocious violation of their rights. The railroads are indispensable servants of the people, without which the people can not exist. No set of men can have it in their power to paralyze this service with impunity. If they should attempt it, they would be ground to death under the heel of an enraged and aroused Nation. The people do not wish to be aroused to fury by the ignorant and extortionate demands of unpatriotic men who have wormed their way into the leadership of some labor organizations. The people wish to avoid a clash between large bodies of fanatics and the Nation itself. Therefore they expect Congress to legislate in such manner as will put this misguided minority on notice that it is pursuing the wrong road; that it will not be permitted to disrupt the transportation system of the United States; that if it yields to the advice of anti-American leaders it will do so at its peril.

Now, gentlemen, the Senate has courageously given this notice. It is a warning, nothing more. It imprisons no man and takes from no man any of his rights as a citizen. It merely safeguards the people. Are you in favor of that action or against it?

Gentlemen of the House, the bill you passed is not acceptable to the people and not worthy of your responsibilities as representatives of the people. You know you have not risen to your duty. Your bill reads as though it had been drafted by a minority for the purpose of clinching its unfair advantages over the whole people. Have you considered carefully just where your duty and interest lie? Do you think the American people can be fooled by such legislation? Do you suppose that each congressional district will fail to look into the record of its Representative when this all-important question becomes acute?

Do not be so impressed by the influence and votes of organized class combinations as to lose sight of that greater and more powerful organization, the American people! The show-down is at hand, gentlemen. The United States is either to continue under the control of the American people or it is to pass to other hands. On which side do you stand?

If you think the people do not know and appreciate courage and faithful service, how do you account for the popularity of Gov. Coolidge, of Massachusetts, and Gov. Cornwell, of West Virginia? Look into their records. President Taft vetoed as pernicious class legislation the proviso exempting labor unions and farmers from penalties visited upon all the rest of us for certain offenses. Did he lose standing before the American people on that account? That veto stands as a pillar of Americanism, and all true Americans, including the bulk of the labor unions and the farmers, recognize it as fair and square.

Think it over, gentlemen of the House. Look ahead. Don't make the mistake of thinking the American people are willing to be bossed by a minority at home or by a League of Nations abroad. Do your duty by the whole people and you need not fear anybody.

Not only Members of Congress but the President as well has had so many appeals made from the brotherhoods and organized labor on this subject that it is an easy matter to forget the general public, as very few citizens ever write to Congressmen or to the Chief Executive.

In order to offset the many propaganda letters coming from unions all over the country, and to let the President know what I believed was the sentiment of my State on this subject, I sent to the President the letter and editorial which I now insert:

MY DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: The inclosed splendid editorial from the South's leading Democratic newspaper, the Dallas News, December 30, demanding an antistrike provision in the railroad bill, voices the sentiment of Texas.

I have lately visited much of Texas, cities such as Dallas, Fort Worth, Waco, Austin, San Antonio, Brownwood, Abilene, and Texarkana, seeking to ascertain the public sentiment of Texas generally, and I believe that fully 90 per cent of Texas citizens unqualifiedly indorse this editorial.

Every thinking man knows that a railroad strike would soon starve every big city in this Nation, bringing death and untold misery upon thousands of helpless women and innocent children, besides utterly destroying our industrial life. Are we longer to be put to sleep with the assertion that the brotherhoods have no intention to resort to strike?

By a threat to stop every train in the United States, the brotherhoods forced the Adamson law, which does not limit the working hours to eight, but merely pays to the train crews extra compensation for all over eight hours. To put in more than eight hours means more pay. Schedules are based on eight hours. To get increased pay, every train crew has an incentive to reach division points late. The natural result has been abominable service. A train is run largely according to the will and activity of its crew. Trains rarely run on time. Train crews are rewarded for being late. Only the public suffers. Making connections is now a dream of the past.

By a threat to stop every train in the United States in war time, the brotherhoods forced almost a billion dollars increases from Director General McAdoo. By such a threat they later forced additional millions from Director Hines. And in the Esch bill passed by the House, with every word of the adopted labor amendment prepared by the brotherhoods' attorney, all of these forced increases are made permanent, with no right of railroads to change them in the future unless raised. What would have happened if their demands had been denied?

Certain leaders of the brotherhoods, together with Mr. Samuel Gompers, are now threatening the country with disaster if a law is passed protecting the public. It is my opinion that the time has come when the people of the United States expect the Congress to protect them, and no longer are going to stand for any evasion of this momentous issue. It must be met some time. Now is the proper time to solve it.

Respectfully and sincerely,

THOMAS L. BLANTON.

[Editorial from the Dallas Morning News, Dec. 30, 1919.]

THE NATURE OF THE STRIKE WEAPON.

One who had not read the provision of the Cummins bill which forbids railroad employees to strike would infer from the arguments that are being made against it that its purpose is to disarm all laboring men of the strike weapon. The fact is, as a casual reading will suffice to show, that this provision is applicable only to the employees of railroads. Of course to those who think the wageworkers have a natural, and therefore inalienable, right to strike the distinction will seem to be an insignificant one. The invasion of a right at a single point must he regarded as no less reprehensible, in the political sense, than an assault intended to destroy it utterly. But to those who feel that to strike is not a right, but merely a privilege which wageworkers have been allowed to exercise only because it has been thought socially expedient that they should be, the fact that this provision of the Cummins bill is applicable only to railroad employees will seem to be a distinction which must be taken into large account if a just judgment on this proposal is to be made. For if to strike is merely a privilege, the exercise of it is subject to such regulation or limitation as Congress may think the public interest requires, and the question to be considered becomes simply whether there are attached to the transportation service any particular circumstances which justify Congress in depriving those engaged in it of a privilege which all other wageworkers are allowed to exercise. This is the concrete question this provision of the Cummins bill presents to all who deny that the strike is a weapon which wageworkers have a natural, and therefore inalienable, right to use for the enforcement of their demands.

There can be but one answer to that question. The transportation industry is affected by circumstances which attach to no other. It is not singular in being a public utility. There are numerous public utilities. But it is singular by reason of the fact that all other public utilities, and even all other industries, are abjectly dependent on the uninterrupted functioning of the railroads.

There is hardly an individual in the country who has not suffered inconvenience or financial loss from the inability of the railroads during the last two years to function adequately. The financial loss has mounted literally into the hundreds of millions of dollars. By so much as a stopping of service exceeds a merely inadequate service by that much would the inconvenience, suffering, and cost of a strike exceed the inconvenience and loss which the country has experienced during the last two years. There is no exaggeration in saying that a railroad strike lasting only a week would inflict financial loss on every man in the country, ruin on many institutions, suffering on every community, and death on thousands, for it is to be remembered that there is not a large city in the country which could subsist a week on its accumulated stores of foodstuffs. By striking and remaining idle a week, the railroad employees would throw ten times their number into enforced idleness twice as long. Their strike might be successful, extort an increase of wages which would reimburse them for a week's idleness. But for the millions whom they had enforced into idleness the loss in wages and famine prices would be an irretrievable one. Can it be thought that any group of men have a natural right to do a thing which entails consequences so calamitous? Can the infliction of ruin, suffering, and death be justified with the plea that the result from the enforcement of an arbitrary wage demand—arbitrary, for the reason that this provision of the Cummins bill which forbids railroad men to strike also creates a tribunal to which their demands may be submitted for arbitrament?

Appreciating the enormity of the consequences of a strike, the chiefs of the railroad brotherhoods protest that a general railroad strike never has occurred and never will occur. Assuming the statement to be true, although it is so only in a highly literal sense, if at all, it makes no argument against this provision of the Cummins bill. Without implying that there is any analogy in the moral sense between the demand of organized wageworkers and that of a highwayman, it may be said that the highwayman would make as good a plea in insisting that he had a right to carry a gun if he should protest he never had killed and never would kill a man who refused to throw up his hands. It would be a sufficient refutation of that plea to cite the fact that only three years ago the four great brotherhoods of railroad employees solemnly declared that they would stop every train in the country if the demands they then made were not granted. It was not to the forbearance of the railroad employees that the country owed its escape from the calamity with which they threatened it but to the fact that Congress, cowed by that threat, itself forced a compliance with those demands by the use of its legislative power. That was a triumph of terrorism, and it is because this immense power of terrorism lies in the mere threat to strike that the railroad employees covet the use of it. When it is only by submitting to any demand which the railroad employees insist on that the country can escape the calamity of a strike it is a mockery to say that they ought to be allowed to retain that weapon because they have never pulled its trigger. The highwayman could with as good grace claim from his victim a tribute to his forbearance. It is because they can, by threatening to strike, render it unnecessary to strike that the railroad employees insist on being allowed to retain the use of it. It is because it invests them with a tyrannical power that it is valuable to them.

By insisting that they shall be allowed to retain this weapon they, in effect, declare their unwillingness to submit to arbitration or to any justiciable proceeding, for not only is fair adjudication of any demands they may make assured to them by the force of public opinion but it is specifically instituted by this provision of the Cummins bill to which they object. It does not now, in the practical sense, lie in the power of any railroad company to reject the demands of its employees. It can only dissent and, by dissenting, appeal to the judgment of some impartial individual or body improvised for the occasion. It is ridiculous, therefore, to say that the employees need the strike as a weapon with which to defend themselves against the power of railroad companies, because the railroad companies are themselves subject to the greater power of public opinion. For the railroad employees the strike is not a defensive but an offensive weapon and one to be used not against the power of the railroad companies but against the greater power of public opinion. By insisting that they be allowed to retain this strike weapon they insist on making their own will a force superior to that of 110,000,000 people expressed through an agency created for that purpose. Hence their attitude is an utter repudiation of democratic and an assertion of the autocratic rule, and if they should strike in protest against the enactment of this provision of the Cummins bill they would make war for an ideal which was defeated when Germany signed the armistice.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask leave to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VOLSTEAD] has 10 minutes and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. THOMAS] has 15 minutes remaining.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I think it due to the Committee on Rules and to the Members of the House that I should say that no rule has been denied to the Committee on the Judiciary for the consideration of the Graham bill. I am sure that the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary [Mr. VOLSTEAD] will bear me out in that statement.

The rule was introduced, and it has taken its course, as others have. Demands were made for hearings upon it, and the Committee on Rules has always given hearings on resolutions which come before that committee. The Committee on Rules is not an arbitrary body. We are not reflecting the sentiments of or doing the will of an autocracy. We are living under a representative government, and we are not afraid to hear both sides of any question under consideration by the American people. [Applause.] We are not afraid to hear the proponents of the Graham bill. We are not afraid to hear any opponents on criticism of that bill, and it is for the purpose of giving people an opportunity to express their views upon the measure that we have fixed a time for a hearing. That time will be next Thursday at 10.30, and I shall be glad if the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] is present.

Mr. BLANTON. I shall be there.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Other gentlemen have said that they would be there, so that "a good time will be had by all present," I hope.

Now as to the threat of revolution by Mr. Gompers that was made at the time of the parade in Washington on May Day. This morning was the time set for the "revolution," because John Barleycorn and all his subordinates went out of business at 12.01 this morning. I have not observed anything that approaches a revolution in Washington or elsewhere.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I yield.

Mr. BLANTON. No such cowardly threat was ever carried out by the kind of men that would make it.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I think there is a good deal of loose talk about the overthrow of the Government if you do this or do that, and much of such comment would amount to about the same thing as the threat of revolution if the workers of the country were not permitted to buy wine and beer whenever they wanted to.

The Committee on Rules will consider the rule on the Graham resolution, and will give a rule for the consideration of that bill just as soon as we can find time for its consideration—a time that will be agreeable to the House; and we shall give plenty of time for the discussion of the measure. [Applause.] It is a matter of the greatest importance, and should have serious consideration by the American Congress. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VOLSTEAD] has five minutes remaining.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, there seems to be no desire for further general debate, and I will ask for the reading of the bill; but first I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the Senate bill be dispensed with and that the amendment reported by the Judiciary Committee be read and subject to amendment as an original bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent that the reading of the Senate bill be dispensed with and that the amendment reported by the Judiciary Committee be read and subject to amendment as an original bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading, read as follows:

SEC. 2. That in cases where if such vessel were privately owned or operated, or if such cargo were privately owned and possessed, a proceeding in admiralty could be maintained, a libel in personam may be brought against the United States or against such corporation, as the case may be, provided that such vessel is employed or intended to be employed in the carriage of cargoes or of passengers for hire. Such suits shall be brought in the district court of the United States for the district in which the parties so suing, or any of them, reside or have their principal place of business in the United States, or in which the vessel or cargo charged with liability is found. The libellant shall forthwith serve a copy of his libel on the United States attorney for such district and mail a copy thereof by registered mail to the Attorney General of the United States, and shall file a sworn return of such service and mailing. Such service and mailing shall constitute valid service on the United States and such corporation. In case the United States or such corporation shall file a libel in rem or in personam in any district, a cross libel in personam may be filed or a set-off claimed against the United States or such corporation with the same force and effect as if the libel had been filed by a private party: Provided, That upon application of either party the cause may, in its discretion, be transferred to any other district court of the United States, or to any such court upon which they may agree.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HUSTED: Page 10, lines 10 and 11, after the words "Provided, That," strike out the words "such vessel is employed or intended to be employed in the carriage of cargoes or of passengers for hire," and substitute the following: "in the case of a vessel not employed as a merchant vessel (a) no suit may be brought under this act on causes of action arising since April 6, 1917, and prior to the approval of this act, unless the consent of the Attorney General of the United States is first obtained in writing; and that (b) where an investigation has been held by a department of the Government as to the facts of any such cause of action arising since April 6, 1917, and prior to the approval of this act, and a witness can not be produced upon the trial, his testimony given at the investigation may be offered by the United States and shall be admissible, if such witness was cross-examined at the investigation by the party suing or his attorney; and that (c) no officer or member of the crew of any such vessel may be subpœnaed in connection with any such suit without the consent of the commander of said vessel; and that (d) no suit may be brought under this act by the National or any foreign Government unless it shall be certified by the Secretary of State that said Government under similar circumstances allows nationals of the United States to sue in its courts."

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York desire to be heard?

Mr. HUSTED. I desire to be heard briefly on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman, because the point of order is reserved.

Mr. HUSTED. I do not want to be heard on the point of order unless it is made. If the point of order is made, I want to be heard on the point of order.

Mr. WHALEY. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HICKS, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 3076) authorizing suits against the United States in admiralty, suits for salvage services, and providing for the release of merchant vessels belonging to the United States from arrest and attachment in foreign jurisdictions, and for other purposes, had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted—

To Mr. MARTIN, for two weeks, on account of important business.

To Mr. ALMON, for one week, on account of important official business.

To Mr. LAZARO, for seven days, on account of important business.

To Mr. WATKINS, indefinitely, on account of important business.

FIRE DEPARTMENT OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. MAPES presented for printing under the rule the conference report on the bill (H. R. 10137) to amend an act entitled "An act to classify the officers and members of the fire department of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes," approved June 20, 1906, and for other purposes.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 19 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Monday, January 19, 1920, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, a letter from the acting chairman of the Federal Board for Vocational Education, transmitting statement of travel by employees, etc., from Washington to points outside of the District of Columbia (H. Doc. No. 615), was taken from the Speaker's table, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. CRAGO, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 11730) to increase the efficiency of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, Coast Guard, and the Public Health Service, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 555), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. MINAHAN of New Jersey, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 6077) directing the Secretary of the Treasury to pay the claim of the King Coal Co., of San Francisco, Calif., reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 556), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

SENATE.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we come to Thee in this sacred moment after the manner and custom of our people. We pray that we may use it lifting our hearts to Thee, that we may maintain that relation to Thyself which our fathers have always maintained, that we may be subject to the will of God, bearing in our faith trust in Thy leadership, and thoroughly committed to the great ideals which Thou hast made known to us in the Gospel of Thy Son. Lead us this day and help us to discharge the duties of Christian statesmen. For Christ's sake. Amen.

On request of Mr. CURTIS, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of Saturday last was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Reading Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Brandegee	Henderson	McNary	Sheppard
Calder	Jones, N. Mex.	Nelson	Sherman
Capper	Jones, Wash.	New	Smith, Md.
Chamberlain	Kellogg	Norris	Smoot
Cummins	Kendrick	Nugent	Sterling
Curtis	Kenyon	Overman	Thomas
Dial	King	Page	Trammell
Edge	Kirby	Phelan	Underwood
Elkins	Lenroot	Phipps	Walsh, Mont.
Fernald	Lodge	Pomerene
Harding	McLean	Robinson

Mr. CURTIS. I was requested to announce the absence of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. KEYES] on account of illness in his family. I will let this announcement stand for the day.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I desire to announce the absence of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], and the Senator from Michigan [Mr. NEWBERRY], who are engaged as a subcommittee of the Committee on Naval Affairs.

I wish also to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. FLETCHER] on account of illness.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. My colleague, the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], is absent on official business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Forty-two Senators have answered to their names. There is not a quorum present. The Secretary will call the names of the absentees.

The reading clerk called the names of the absent Senators, and Mr. HARRIS, Mr. MCCORMICK, Mr. MCCUMBER, and Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts answered to their names when called.

Mr. MCKELLAR, Mr. HITCHCOCK, Mr. SUTHERLAND, Mr. CULBERSON, Mr. FRANCE, Mr. MOSES, Mr. COLT, Mr. BECKHAM, Mr. STANLEY, Mr. MYERS, Mr. BORAH, Mr. GRONNA, and Mr. TOWNSEND entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

Mr. MCKELLAR. The Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] is detained by illness in his family.

The junior Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], the Senator from Delaware [Mr. WOLCOTT], the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS], and the senior Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH] are absent on official business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Fifty-nine Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present.

TREATY OF PEACE WITH GERMANY.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, in furtherance of furnishing to the Senate the statistical results of the intercollegiate voting test on the peace treaty, I desire to have inserted in the RECORD to-day the vote as finally canvassed of 418 colleges, including the faculty and students of each college. For unqualified ratification there were 48,232 votes; against ratification in any form, 13,933 votes; for the Lodge reservations, 27,970 votes; for compromise reservations, 61,494 votes; for the Knox plan substantially, separating the league from the treaty, 6,449 votes; or a total of 158,078 votes.

In commenting upon the vote, I desire to say that I have already had inserted in the RECORD a tabulated statement showing that these votes were taken in colleges all over the United States, East, West, North, and South; they were taken in large colleges and in small colleges. They were taken in a very careful manner by a bureau which established itself in New York and which conferred with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] upon one side and with me upon the other side, first, as to the form of ballot, and finally to the extent of inviting the Senator from Massachusetts and myself to supply to voting colleges an argument on each side. The Senator from Massachusetts presented an argument in favor of the Lodge reservations. I did not present an argument in favor of unqualified ratification, for I admitted that under the conditions reservations had become inevitable. The argument which I presented was for a compromise of reservations between the destructive reservations presented by the Senator from Massachusetts and the interpretative reservations presented by me in accordance with the instructions of the Democratic caucus.

I say this by way of explanation, and each Senator can judge for himself by reading the figures as to what the opinion is of these intelligent young men in the colleges throughout the land.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I yield to the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. EDGE. In this connection, Mr. President, in the interest of accuracy, it might be well to supplement the statement of the Senator from Nebraska——

Mr. HITCHCOCK. If the Senator desires to ask a question, I will yield. Otherwise, I should like to finish, and let the Senator speak in his own time.

Mr. EDGE. I was simply going to call attention to the fact——

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Does the Senator desire to interrupt what I have to say?

Mr. EDGE. I am going to ask a question, if I may be permitted to formulate it.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Very well.

Mr. EDGE. The percentage of the total vote for unqualified ratification amounting to 45 per cent, according to the statement of the Senator two or three days ago, has been reduced to about 34 per cent according to the later returns. I was going to ask the Senator from Nebraska, in making his explanation, to include that change of percentage in the RECORD in the interest of accuracy.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I have not figured out the percentages, but later in the day I shall be glad to insert them.

I might say that of the colleges that voted there were 89 that voted upon a six-blank ballot which had been first prepared. The ballot was afterwards changed as the result of conference between the Senator from Massachusetts and myself to a four-blank ballot. The result of the change was to reduce the number of voting blanks to four, but that was in the interest of a closer, concrete result. I have not figured out the percentages; but I draw attention to the fact that out of 158,000 votes polled the compromise reservations which we advocate and unqualified ratification for which we are ready to stand polled, approximately, 100,000 votes; and the Lodge reservations, which we oppose, polled out of 158,000 votes only 27,970. Every Senator can figure that percentage for himself.

Mr. President, in addition to that, I desire to have inserted in the RECORD, without reading, the ballot taken by the members of the Chamber of Commerce of Charleston, S. C.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Total vote, 418 colleges.

For unqualified ratification	48,232
Against ratification	13,933
For Lodge reservations	27,970
For compromise reservations	61,494
For Knox plan	6,449
Total votes	158,078

"Result of membership referendum by the Charleston (S. C.) Chamber of Commerce on peace treaty, January, 1920, is as follows:

"1. Should there be some covenant amongst the nations of the world? No, 13; yes, 312.

"2. Should the treaty as proposed by the President be accepted? No, 117; yes, 205.

"3. Should the treaty be accepted with interpretative reservations? No, 131; yes, 172.

"4. Should the treaty be accepted with amendments which would require resubmission to the peace conference? No, 253; yes, 43.

"5. Should the treaty be rejected and a separate peace be made with Germany? No, 280; yes, 31.

"In compliance with this vote, this chamber is on record as favoring—

"1. Some covenant amongst the nations of the world.

"2. That treaty as proposed by the President should be accepted.

"3. Interpretative reservations.

"And opposed to—

"1. Amendments that would require resubmission to peace conference.

"2. Rejection of present treaty and making separate peace with Germany."

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I desire also to have inserted in the RECORD the statement that I have received from the president of the Blackstone College for Girls in Blackstone, Va., that on a ballot taken there 473 votes were for the treaty without change, 2 were for mild reservations, and there were no other votes for any other proposition.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The statement is as follows:

BLACKSTONE COLLEGE FOR GIRLS,
Blackstone, Va., January 13, 1920.

Senator HITCHCOCK,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: In unison with the other colleges, I presented the matter of the league of nations and the peace treaty to my student body and professors, numbering about 475. I am glad to announce to you that the vote was 473 for the ratification of the treaty without reservations and 2 votes for mild reservations. I am giving you this result that you may hand it to the Committee on Foreign Relations with the other colleges.

In this connection please allow me to congratulate you on the heroic fight which you are making for the treaty in face of almost overwhelming odds. I am confident that with the hearty sentiment of the people in your favor you will at last win out.

With respect and good wishes, I am,

Yours, truly, ——— ———.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, merely to make the RECORD complete—I was unable to follow all that the Senator from Nebraska stated in connection with the poll—I think there should be set forth in one concrete statement that the vote for unqualified ratification totaled 34½ per cent of the votes cast; the three other classes—proposed compromises, the Lodge reservations, and against ratification—totaled 65½ per cent; demonstrating that the only conclusion one can arrive at in analyzing the entire vote is that it is almost 2 to 1 against an unqualified ratification without the crossing of a "t" or the dotting of an "i."

Mr. McCORMICK obtained the floor.

Mr. HITCHCOCK and Mr. POMERENE addressed the Chair.

Mr. McCORMICK. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I desire to say that the Senator from New Jersey has made an impossible combination. He is trying to mix oil and water. He is now trying to mix the vote for compromise reservations, which we on this side of the aisle advocate with the Lodge reservations, which we oppose. I call his attention to the fact that the Lodge reservations, for which he stands or for which he has heretofore stood, only polled 27,970 votes out of 158,000, and that we on this side believe we have the right to combine in this vote the 61,494 votes for compromise reservations which we advocate with the 48,233 votes for unqualified ratification, which we are ready to accept. That is the way the combination can be made. You can not combine the Lodge reservations with anything except the vote to kill the treaty.

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. President, I am entirely willing that the Senator from Nebraska should combine any votes to suit his taste, provided that he does not succeed in combining the Lodge reservations with his interpretative reservations. I pray devoutly that any such effort may prove a mixing of oil and water, and that there may be no enduring blend of them.

Mr. President, it was to point out that this vote among the colleges has been a shepherded vote that I rose. No sooner was it published that the vote was to be taken than the League to Enforce Peace wrote to the colleges offering speakers to sustain the league's point of view. Among them, so I am informed, was the gentleman who celebrated the death of Theodore Roosevelt because he could not take part in this discussion of the league. Senators who are considering this college vote—and, of course, it must be considered—ought not to forget that in the polling booths of the country from Oklahoma and Alabama to New Jersey and Massachusetts there also has been registered a vote; they ought not to forget that votes have been registered not only in the United States, but in the joint assembly of the French Republic which elected to the Presidency of France not M. Clemenceau, that principal signer of the treaty for France, but M. Deschanel.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President——

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. McCORMICK. I yield first to the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. NELSON. I merely wish to ask the Senator a question.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I call the attention of the Senator from Illinois to the further fact that in connection with the propaganda which has been going on in the colleges some very distinguished speakers have been brought to this country and have been touring the colleges and speaking on the League of Nations, instructing our people as to their own interest, among them a very distinguished gentleman connected with the College of London—Dr. Newton—whom I happened to meet here in the city, and who told me that he was touring the colleges of this country for the purpose of speaking on the League of Nations.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. McCORMICK. I yield to the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. EDGE. I do not wish to take the time of the morning hour, but the Senator from Nebraska apparently takes to his side the credit for the entire total of 49,000 votes for compromise reservations. It seems to me that I make a perfectly accurate statement when I call attention to the fact that the movement for compromise on the treaty has up to quite recently come entirely from this side. Therefore the 49,000 votes, it seems to me, whether they favor directly the Lodge reservations or other reservations, represent the compromise that has emanated principally from this side of the Chamber.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. McCORMICK. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. NELSON. I wish to ask the Senator from Illinois—and the question is addressed to all of the Senators who have just spoken—are we as Members of the Senate to exercise our own judgment upon an important question of this kind or are we to be mere dummies?

Mr. McCORMICK. The Senator is not addressing his question to this corner of the Senate, I trust.

Mr. President, before I conclude let me say, by way of reply to the Senator from West Virginia, that at an early opportunity I hope to lay before the Senate some part of the discussion upon the treaty which has occurred in London, in Paris, and at Cape Town. As time elapses we learn more of the bitter fruits of the treaty and of the opinion in which it is coming to be viewed in other countries. I believe that the material which has reached me throws an interesting light upon the great question of six votes accorded one of the signatories to the treaty as against one vote for each of the others. As Mr. Hoover has indicated, the treaty condemns Austria to perpetual famine, and hence to anarchy; it condemns Czechoslovakia to perpetual civil strife, and hence to civil war, with the horrible consequences in central Europe which must flow therefrom.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCORMICK. Certainly.

Mr. KING. Assuming that the last two statements made by the Senator are correct—that Austria is condemned to economic servitude——

Mr. McCORMICK. That was the statement of Mr. Hoover, and not the statement of the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. KING. Assuming that Mr. Hoover did make the statement, does the Senator think that the rejection of the treaty by the United States is going to effectuate any cure or any relief?

Mr. McCORMICK. The Senator undoubtedly does think so.

Mr. KING. Does not the Senator believe that if the United States becomes a signatory to the treaty, and if the League of Nations should be formed and the United States should participate in the League of Nations, the conditions in Austria and in Czechoslovakia would be relieved and improved if the treaty is so sinister toward them as the remarks attributed to Mr. Hoover would seem to indicate?

Mr. McCORMICK. In what sense does the Senator from Utah think that the States of Austria and Czechoslovakia would be relieved, and how?

Mr. KING. I asked the Senator if they would not be. I can easily conceive that they could be relieved if the treaty does bear too heavily upon them.

Mr. McCORMICK. The Senator from Utah, who has studied the treaty as thoroughly as any man on this floor, knows that by the treaty their frontiers and racial constitutions are made permanent—substantially irrevocable under its terms. It is those frontiers which condemn the one, as Mr. Hoover says, to perpetual famine and the other to perpetual civil strife. The Senator recalls the veto to the change of those frontiers for which the treaty provides, does he not?

Mr. KING. Well, I do not know that I quite assent to the broad statement made by my distinguished friend from Illinois.

Mr. McCORMICK. Is there no veto to a modification of those frontiers in the treaty?

Mr. KING. If the Senator will permit me, while I can not answer categorically, I believe that there is a power within the League of Nations to mitigate the severities of the treaty, if there should be any severities, with respect to the lines delimiting——

Mr. McCORMICK. The Senator knows that a single European power may veto any modification of the terms of the treaty touching either of those two countries in central Europe.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. KING. Without assenting to the latter statement, I repeat, as a statement——

Mr. McCORMICK. Oh, Mr. President, the Senator's assent is not necessary to the terms of the treaty. It has been ratified in Paris.

Mr. KING. If the Senator will permit me, I will repeat as an expression of my belief what I propounded to the Senator as an inquiry, namely, that with the United States being a member of the league, the conditions of those nations whose boundaries have been improperly fixed would be considerably ameliorated and improved.

Mr. McCORMICK. Oh, the faith of the Senator would move mountains. It is not so long since another preacher held that "the sun do move."

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House disagrees to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3184) to create a Federal power commission and to define its powers and duties, to provide for the improvement of navigation, for the development of water power, for the use of lands of the United States in relation thereto, to repeal section 18 of "An act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes," approved August 8, 1917, and for other purposes; agrees to the conference asked for by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. ESCH, Mr. SINNOTT, Mr. HAUGEN, Mr. SIMS, Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado, and Mr. LEE of Georgia managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 10074) to enlarge the jurisdiction of the Municipal Court of the District of Columbia and to regulate appeals from the judgments of said court, and for other purposes, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10137) to amend an act entitled "An act to classify the officers and members of the fire department of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes," approved June 20, 1906, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills, and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

S. 2999. An act to amend section 97 of the act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911;

H. R. 9089. An act releasing the claim of the United States Government to the block or square of land in the city of Fort Smith, in the State of Arkansas, upon which is situated the old Federal jail, to the city of Fort Smith for a site for a convention hall, community building, or other public purposes; and

H. R. 9183. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to adjust the terms of the contract for the sale of the old post-office property in New Haven, Conn.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I present a petition, which I ask may be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The petition will be read.

The Reading Clerk read as follows:

NEW YORK, January 17, 1920.

Hon. FRANK B. BRANDEGEE,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: The China Society of America respectfully petitions and urges the Members of the United States Senate to firmly uphold the essential features of the Shantung reservation to the Paris peace treaty adopted by the United States Senate November 15, 1919, in order to preserve the honor of our country, which induced China to enter the war, and also to maintain the vital interests of the United States, which will be seriously endangered if we fail to make clear our absolute right to freedom of action in the future.

Yours, very truly,

THE CHINA SOCIETY OF AMERICA,
A. B. HUMPHREY, Director.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I refrain from asking that that be submitted to a straw vote of the college boys of the country.

Mr. McKELLAR. I present a short communication from a large number of citizens of Henry County, Tenn., in reference to the Cummins bill, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD without reading. I also ask unanimous consent that the signatures attached thereto may be printed.

There being no objection, the communication and accompanying signatures were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

To the honorable UNITED STATES SENATORS FROM TENNESSEE:

We, the undersigned citizens of Henry County, protest the putting into effect of the Cummins bill. This bill is a guaranty to the private owners of an increase in freight rates, thereby increasing the cost of living.

We further protest the antistrike clause, which is unfair to railroad employees and places them in chattel slavery.

We ask you to support the two-year extension bill of Government control of railroads.

J. H. Timmons, R. L. Hampton, Eugene S. Paulding, J. E. Collins, C. Q. Collins, J. B. Cronin, I. L. Wilson, C. C. Halliday, Aubrey Williams, W. L. McClain, Herman Bruhn, John Etheridge, Alois L. McClain, Harry B. Wilson, J. B. Hart, Earnest McFadden, H. A. Burton, Hugh Baggett, R. B. Oliver, R. J. Dean, H. G. Richardson, G. L. Dodson, F. L. McHugh, R. J. Pryor, J. D. Ballard, J. T. Dumas, James A. Pollard, Robert Wheeler, P. E. Ray, S. L. Jones, M. B. Dickson, D. T. Spaulding, W. L. Edgar, W. P. Wynns, A. H. Sturdivant, Burl L. Pierce, Tom Hathaway, Juit McDaniel, J. E. Snow, Frank Parten, E. C. Gilbert, J. W. Smith, E. P. McFadden, L. B. Phelps, S. I. Hill, T. W. Ray, W. W. McFadden, R. C. Gloney, W. W. Markey, E. C. Givens, Leander D. Holcomb, C. E. Townsend, Arthur Crews, B. T. Crawford, George Taylor, Albert Turner, R. McFarland, J. H. Buckingham, Edwards & Curran, J. N. Cooper, F. M. Drummond, W. D. Hunt, T. S. Norld, J. B. McNeill, E. C. Lewis, Jno. A. Freeman, J. S. Kirkland, J. J. Weatherspoon, A. Norld, J. F. Rice, Z. F. Broadway, J. S. Lindsey, Jno. H. Arnett, Frank B. Meggs, W. A. Williams, J. B. Gillespie.

Mr. McKELLAR. I also ask to have printed in the RECORD a communication from the Memphis Rotary Club, of Tennessee, on the bill introduced by Congressman DAVEY defining sedition.

There being no objection, the communication was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MEMPHIS, TENN., January 14, 1920.

Senator KENNETH McKELLAR,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR McKELLAR: At a regular meeting of the Memphis Rotary Club, held at the Chisca Hotel Tuesday, January 13, 1920, the following resolution was offered and unanimously adopted:

"Be it resolved by the Memphis Rotary Club, That House bill 10650, now pending before Congress and which is a bill introduced by Congressman MARTIN L. DAVEY defining sedition, the promoting thereof, and providing punishment thereof, be, and is hereby, approved, and that the Senators and Representatives from this State be requested to support this measure, or a similar measure, which provides immediate relief from the red menace; and be it further

"Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to each Senator and Representative from Tennessee."

We hope that you can consistently support this legislation when it comes before Congress for passage.

Yours, very truly,

MEMPHIS ROTARY CLUB,
H. C. McKELLAR, Secretary.

Mr. McKELLAR. I wish to present a communication from the chairman of the Tennessee State legislative committee of the Order of Railway Conductors of America, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the communication was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ORDER RAILWAY CONDUCTORS OF AMERICA,
TENNESSEE STATE LEGISLATIVE COMMITTEE,
Knoxville, Tenn., January 16, 1920.

Hon. KENNETH MCKELLAR,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Five thousand railway conductors whom I have the honor to represent and who are citizens of the State of Tennessee most heartily indorse the stand taken by you in opposing the Cummins railroad bill.

And we most respectfully request that you continue to use your voice, vote, and influence against this unfair measure, as any law which seeks to enslave should not pass in this the greatest country on earth. Again expressing to you the heartfelt thanks and appreciation of the 5,000 railway conductors of Tennessee for your opposition to the Cummins bill, I am,

Yours, respectfully,

J. T. LAWRENCE,
Chairman Tennessee Legislative Committee.

Mr. McKELLAR. I present resolutions adopted by Old Hickory Post, No. 1, Thirtieth Division, American Expeditionary Forces, of Chattanooga, Tenn., which I ask to have printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

There being no objection, the resolutions were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

OLD HICKORY POST, No. 1,
THIRTIETH DIVISION, AMERICAN EXPEDITIONARY FORCES,
Chattanooga, Tenn., January 9, 1920.

At a regular meeting, Old Hickory Post, No. 1, Thirtieth Division, American Expeditionary Forces, held January 8, 1920, the following preamble and resolutions were unanimously and enthusiastically adopted:

"Whereas the attention of this post has been called to Circular Letter No. 345 from the War Department, which letter outlines the policy of the Government in regard to hospital treatment of wounded and sick soldiers; and

"Whereas our interpretation of said circular letter would work an undue hardship upon certain cases of wounded and sick comrades now in our Government hospitals; and

"Whereas we are determined and hereby pledge ourselves to use every legitimate means to gain a healthy public sentiment in favor of giving these comrades every facility for the recovery of their health: Be it

"Resolved by Old Hickory Post, No. 1, Thirtieth Division, American Expeditionary Forces, That the honorable the Secretary of War be urgently requested to at once modify said order, not only that these men, our comrades, may be provided by a just and generous Government every opportunity for recovery that science can give, but that their minds may be relieved of the unrest and harassment which such an order creates.

"That we pledge ourselves to stand back of this cause as these men stood with us overseas.

"That a copy be forwarded at once to the honorable the Secretary of War, a copy made in our minutes, and a copy furnished the local press."

Respectfully,

D. N. MCMILLIN,
ELSWORTH BROWN,
M. W. FROST,
Committee.

Mr. GRONNA. I have here a brief resolution adopted by Georgia Division Farmers' Educational and Cooperative Union of America, which I ask to have read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the resolution will be read.

The Reading Clerk read as follows:

Senator A. J. GRONNA,
Washington, D. C.

A resolution by Martin F. Amorous, president the Cobb County Farmers' Union, Marietta, Ga.

"Whereas the treaty of peace with Germany contains a proposal to create an international labor congress, which when ratified by the United States Senate limits labor to '8 hours a day, 48 hours a week, and 24 hours rest each week,' and also taxes landowners with old-age pensions, disability pensions, and unemployment wages; and

"Whereas the enforcement of these conditions will be ruinous to the farming industry of the country: Therefore be it

"Resolved, That the Georgia division of the Farmers' Educational and Cooperative Union of America, in convention assembled, in Atlanta, Ga., this the 26th day of November, 1919, does hereby request the President of the United States and the United States Senate to exempt all farmers and agricultural workers from the international labor congress control: Be it further

"Resolved, That the president and secretary of this convention mail to the President of the United States and each Member of the United States Senate a certified copy of these resolutions."

The above resolution is a correct copy of the original resolution, which was read to the convention, discussed, and unanimously adopted.

J. H. MILLS, President.
ANDREW J. FLEMING,
Secretary and Treasurer.

Mr. SMOOT. I will ask the Senator if he desires to have the resolution printed in the RECORD, as well as read?

Mr. GRONNA. Yes; I do, Mr. President.

Mr. SMOOT. It has already been printed in the RECORD, about two weeks ago.

Mr. GRONNA. I will say to the Senator that I am aware of that fact.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from North Dakota to which committee he desires the communication referred?

Mr. GRONNA. I think it had better go to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. KING. I agree with the Senator and hope it will receive consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The petition will be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. HALE presented a petition of sundry citizens of Portland, Me., praying for the enactment of legislation providing for the retirement of superannuated Government employees; which was ordered to lie on the table.

JOHN B. H. WARING.

Mr. SUTHERLAND, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 907) for the relief of John B. H. Waring, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 373) thereon.

FORT BERTHOLD INDIANS.

Mr. CURTIS. From the Committee on Indian Affairs, I report back favorably with an amendment, the bill (H. R. 4382) to confer on the Court of Claims jurisdiction to determine the respective rights of and differences between the Fort Berthold Indians and the Government of the United States, and I submit a report (No. 372) thereon. I call the attention of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] to the bill.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I have a similar bill, which I introduced and which passed the Senate in November last. It was somewhat different in form. This same measure has passed this body several times. It is recommended by the department. I do not believe any objection will be made, and I ask unanimous consent that it may be considered at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Dakota asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of House bill 4382. Is there objection?

Mr. KING. Let the bill be read.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I should like to have it read first. I do not remember it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. For information, the Secretary will read the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Whereas the Indians of the Fort Berthold Indian Reservation, in the State of North Dakota, including the tribes known as the Arickarees, the Gros Ventres, and the Mandans, and the individual members of such tribes make claim against the United States on account of various treaty provisions which, it is alleged, have not been complied with, and on account of various encroachments upon the appropriation by said Government of territory of said tribes of Indians: Therefore

Be it enacted, etc., That all claims of whatsoever nature which any or all of the tribes of Indians of the Fort Berthold Reservation, N. Dak., may have against the United States, which have not heretofore been determined by the Court of Claims, may be submitted to the Court of Claims, with the right of appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States by either party, for determination of the amount, if any, due said tribes from the United States under any treaties, agreements, or laws of Congress, or for the misappropriation of any of the funds of said tribes, or for the failure of the United States to pay said tribe any money or other property due; and jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the Court of Claims, with the right of either party to appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States, to hear and determine all legal and equitable claims, if any, of said tribe against the United States, and to enter judgment thereon.

SEC. 2. That if any claim or claims be submitted to said courts, they shall settle the rights therein, both legal and equitable, of each and all the parties thereto, notwithstanding lapse of time or statutes of limitation, and any payment which may have been made upon any claim so submitted shall not be pleaded as an estoppel, but may be pleaded as an offset in such suits or actions, and the United States shall be allowed credit for all sums heretofore paid or expended for the benefit of said tribe or any band thereof. The claim or claims of the said tribes or band or bands thereof may be presented separately or jointly by petition, subject, however, to amendment, suit to be filed within five years after the passage of this act; and such action shall make the petitioner or petitioners party plaintiff of plaintiffs and the United States party defendant, and any band or bands of said tribe the court may deem necessary to a final determination of such suit or suits may be joined therein as the court may order. Such petition, which shall be verified by a petitioner or an attorney employed by said petitioner, tribes of any bands thereof, shall set forth all the facts on which the claims for recovery are based, and said petition shall be signed by the attorney or attorneys employed, and no other verification shall be necessary. Official letters, papers, documents, and public records, or certified copies thereof, may be used in evidence, and the departments of the Government shall give access to the attorney or attorneys of said tribe or bands thereof to such treaties, papers, correspondence, or records as may be needed by the attorney or attorneys for said tribes or bands of Indians.

SEC. 3. That upon the final determination of such suit, cause, or action the Court of Claims shall decree such fees as it shall find reasonable to be paid the attorney or attorneys employed therein by said tribe or bands of Indians, under contracts negotiated and approved as provided by existing law, and in no case shall the fee decreed by said Court of Claims be in excess of the amounts stipulated in the contracts approved by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the Secretary of the Interior, and no attorney shall have a right to represent the said tribe or any band thereof in any suit, cause, or action under the provisions of this act until his contract shall have been approved as herein provided. The fees decreed by the court to the attorney or attorneys of record shall be paid out of any sum or sums recovered in such suits or actions, and no part of such fee shall be taken from any money in the Treasury of the United States belonging to such tribes or bands of Indians in whose behalf the suit is brought unless specifically authorized in the contract approved by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the Secretary of the Interior as herein provided: Provided, That in no case shall the fees decreed by said court amount to more than 10 per cent of the amount of the judgment recovered in such cause.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, withholding the right to object for a moment, I should like to ask the Senator some questions.

I notice that the bill provides that certain other Indian tribes may be made defendants in this action. Does that imply that if the action is successful, the rights or interests of the other Indian tribes may be diminished as the result of this action?

Mr. GRONNA. I will say to the Senator that these Indians claim that certain treaty stipulations have not been complied with by the Government of the United States. This bill is drawn by the department in the usual form. The bill which was given to me, and which I introduced, is somewhat different. This bill was passed in the House. It is a House bill, and I accept it rather than the bill which the Senate passed last November. I do not think it will in any way interfere with the claims of any other Indians belonging to the same tribe.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I am asking the question because if that bill is what I think it may be, it would result in bringing in at a very late day some additional claimants to awards of trust property or trust funds, and would diminish some funds that are otherwise to be paid to Indians in Nebraska. I should like to have a little opportunity to examine the bill for that reason, because I know that those Indians, if it refers to their case, object very much to having the matter dug up now, with the result that claims which they think they have established may be diminished by this proceeding.

Mr. GRONNA. I have no objection, Mr. President, to giving the Senator time to examine the bill. I am quite sure that the conditions are such that the Senator's apprehensions are not well founded, but I am perfectly willing to let it go over for a day if the Senator desires it.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Let it go over for a day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The request for unanimous consent is withdrawn.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I want to make a suggestion to the Senator from North Dakota. I presume probably the bill was drafted the way it is because in the division of the Indians into tribes some other tribe will probably claim the right to participate in whatever funds the Indians named set up a claim to, and the department desires the whole matter adjudicated in the one action. So the bill provides for bringing in any other tribe of Indians that may possibly assert a claim to the same fund.

I want to suggest to the Senator that he probably ought to have some provision in the bill as to the manner in which the other tribe could be brought in. I really do not know of any way in which service could be had upon anybody who would represent the other tribes, unless the statute so expressly provided. The tribe is merely an aggregation of individuals. I presume probably service upon the chief would not be regarded as service upon the entire tribe. Possibly the bill might provide for service upon the agent of the reservation upon which the other tribe is located, or something of that kind. I am apprehensive that the provision of the bill could not be made effective as it stands now.

Mr. GRONNA. I will say to the Senator that as I understand the bill—and I talked with the department about it—exactly the same kind of a bill was passed more than three years ago by the Senate, but it failed in the other House, and it is a measure which has been pending in Congress for some considerable time.

It is true, as the Senator from Montana states, that there are other Indians who might lay claim under the treaty, but they would not be prohibited by the passage of this legislation from participating. They have just as much right to come to the Court of Claims and establish their claim as the Indians who are named in the bill. We name only the Arickarees, the Mandans, and the Gros Ventres, who all belong to the Sioux Tribe of Indians.

It is a matter which has been gone over very thoroughly, but if the Senator desires to make a further examination I have no objection, although I assure the Senator that it has nothing to do whatsoever with the Indians who reside in his State, outside of this band.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The Senator misunderstood me. I do not desire to be understood as saying anything by way of criticism of the bill.

Mr. GRONNA. I understand, and I thank the Senator for his kindly suggestion.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I merely throw out to the Senator the suggestion that unless some provision is made for the making of service upon the other tribes I fear that portion of the bill will be ineffective.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the calendar.

CHARLESTON (S. C.) NAVY YARD.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, if I may have the attention of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. DIAL], the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BALL] was authorized by the Committee on Naval Affairs this morning to report favorably two bills—one to suspend further dredging of the Charleston Channel and the other to suspend further work upon the dry dock. The Senator from Delaware is preparing a report, and will submit the report at the earliest possible moment. I wish to state to the Senator from South Carolina that the committee will ask for the consideration of those measures at the earliest possible moment. I wanted the Senator from South Carolina and his colleague, or those who are opposed to the measures, to be advised of the report of the committee, so that they will not be taken unawares.

Mr. DIAL. I will state that my colleague is absent to-day, but he will be here to-morrow.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. CALDER:

A bill (S. 3743) for the relief of W. R. Grace & Co.; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. McKELLAR:

A bill (S. 3744) for the relief of Alfred Clark (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. FRANCE:

A bill (S. 3745) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to provide medical, surgical, and hospital service and supplies for discharged soldiers, sailors, marines, Army and Navy nurses (male and female), and for other purposes; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

STATE BANKS IN FEDERAL RESERVE SYSTEM.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I have a Senate resolution calling for some information. I ask that it be read, and then I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The resolution (S. Res. 284) was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Federal Reserve Board be, and it is hereby, instructed to inform the Senate whether the Federal Reserve Board or any Federal reserve bank, under instructions or with the consent or knowledge of said board, has resorted to any method of coercion to compel State banks to join the Federal Reserve System, or by threats or other coercive means has attempted to require such State banks to submit to any rules and regulations made by the Federal Reserve Board or any Federal reserve bank.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS—CHARLES SCHLABURG.

On motion of Mr. HARDING, it was Ordered, That the papers accompanying the bill S. 4799, Sixty-fifth Congress, second session, granting a pension to Charles Schlaburg, be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, no adverse report having been made thereon.

ADDRESS BY POSTMASTER GENERAL BURLESON.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. President, I have here an address on Benjamin Franklin, delivered by Postmaster General Burleson on the occasion of the presentation by the postmasters of Pennsylvania of a life-size portrait of Benjamin Franklin to the Post Office Department of the United States. It is of interest not only on account of Franklin's connection with the Post Office Department, but also on account of his connection with international affairs. I ask that it may be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, what was the request? There was so much confusion that we could not hear it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the general character of the request.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. The request is to print in the RECORD an article on Benjamin Franklin, written by the Postmaster General.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

BENJAMIN FRANKLIN.

"It would be well for the people of America at this time to 'brush up on their Ben Franklin.'

"It is as the first Postmaster General that his portrait is now presented to be hung in the Post Office Department at Washington. But Franklin was not only the first Postmaster General, but was the first representative of the school of diplomacy and the democratic theory of international relations which is now recognized throughout the world as 'American.'

"The connection between these two distinctions is not remote. Universality of communication makes for democracy in diplomatic relations. The situation of the present hour should awaken new interest in the thought and actions of Ben Franklin during that period where his hand held the balance between success and failure of the cause which introduced real democracy to the family of nations, where it is now received as a 'big brother.'

"A review of the career of Franklin merely from his appointment as Postmaster General in 1775 to the close of the Revolution will bear an application to the present hour which should be illuminating to those who seek to secure democracy in its own dominions and to establish its fellowship among the nations of the earth.

"An examination of the reasons for the appointment of Franklin as Postmaster General and for the policy which obtained in the service under him, which is the policy of the Post Office Department to-day, will bring a realization that the Postal Service is something more than a mere transportation facility. It is the circulation system of the Republic upon which unity, progress, liberty, and national defense depend for vitality. One of the earliest lessons of the Revolution—in Franklin's time—was that the success of a struggle for liberty and independence depended upon the establishment and control of lines of general communication. Without this the Revolution would have been a failure.

"The struggle for control of means of communication was begun between the 'parliamentary' postal service established by Great Britain for the Colonies and the Postal Service of the American patriots several years before the Declaration of Independence and even before the Battle of Bunker Hill. The 'constitutional' post office established in July, 1775, with Franklin as Postmaster General, was deemed indispensable because, as stated in a resolution of the Continental Congress, 'Communication of intelligence with frequency and dispatch from one part to another of this extensive continent is essentially requisite to its safety.'

"The establishment and control of a general means of communication is one of the first essentials to unity and the fixing of national character. In time of peace the extent and efficiency of a national service of communication measures the progress of the Nation, both in general intelligence and in material prosperity. In time of war, it constitutes a line of national defense not less important than armies, fortifications, and ships of war.

"The establishment of posts for the conveyance of letters and intelligence throughout the Colonies was one of the first steps toward independence taken by the Continental Congress assembled at Philadelphia in 1775. While factions still contended in that Congress as to measures corrective of British oppression and a petition to the Crown had been adopted and when the Declaration of Independence was not yet born, Franklin drew up the report to Congress recommending the appointment of the Postmaster General for the United Colonies and a plan for the establishment of the Postal System which is essentially that which is now in operation, and upon its adoption he was appointed Postmaster General. This was one of the most practical measures to cement unity of the Colonies and has since served as a binding influence to hold together the common interest of the Nation by the intercommunication of intelligence, insuring a common understanding of the general welfare among people widely dispersed and affected by diversified local and special interest.

"Wharton, in analyzing the diplomatic correspondence of Franklin while representing the Colonies at France, says:

"Of all men in public life Franklin was the most familiar, when he came to France as envoy, with the political conditions with which he had to deal. As Postmaster General he had traversed every inhabited section of the United States.

"The fame won by Franklin in the field of diplomacy was due to his understanding of the value of things simple and commonplace which enter into everyday life and a realization that national and international relations are but an enlargement of these and their extension into broader fields. He was the author of our postal system, and in turn his diplomacy was a product of the experience derived through its operation and was a demonstration of the value of that common understanding and impulse which arises from ready communication and exchange of intelligence.

"There can be no doubt of the value to Franklin in his later career of his early experience in the Postal Service. It is also manifest that the postal system which he established contributed largely to the growth of the spirit of liberty and to the final independence of America. His postal experience began years before his appointment as Postmaster General by the Continental Congress. In 1753 he was made postmaster general of the Colonies, then under the Crown, and that at that early day instituted improvements and extensions of the service and put into effect a policy which has developed into a national system. His realization of the importance of having a national system of communication is undoubtedly responsible for the provision of the Constitution, which he helped to frame, making the agencies for communication of intelligence a Government monopoly.

"Soon after taking charge of the service in 1753 he made a tour of inspection throughout the Colonies, visiting every post office except that of Charleston. During four years, without financial reward, he worked for the extension and expansion of the service, and at the end of that time the department was in debt to him £400. After that, however, his system began to be felt and the salaries of postmasters were paid from the postal revenues, and a small surplus accrued.

"The first battle against the subsidy of free postage for the press was fought by Franklin, himself a publisher. In the early colonial times newspapers were published by postmasters and circulated free, the postmasters exercising the privilege of excluding rival publications from the mail. Franklin, on assuming charge of the service, abolished this monopoly-subsidy system and fixed a postage charge for newspapers based upon a zone system. In doing this he encountered antagonism and attack. Publishers at that time objected to the loss of a subsidy and were resentful of this rule, as many are now resentful of the present zone law, which deprives them of a very substantial subsidy. He charged each subscriber who received his newspaper by mail 9 pence a year for 50 miles and 18 pence a year for 100 miles, and compelled his riders to carry all newspapers offered instead of carrying only those published by postmasters.

"Ben Franklin is credited with participation in drafting the Declaration of Independence; he took part in framing the Constitution of the Republic, being author of the compromise providing for equal representation of the States in the Senate and popular representation in the House, the adoption of which determined the fate of this charter of the Union; and by him the Revolution was sustained, when but for his efforts in France it seemed doomed to failure. It was only through him that the American Congress could negotiate with France, and from the time of his arrival in Paris until the treaty of peace was made with Great Britain he conducted almost exclusively the financial operation of the United States, providing money, arms, and supplies. Congress relied upon him for funds during the period 1781 to 1782.

"In addition to these diplomatic and financial functions, which put him in the position of a secretary of state and of a secretary of the treasury—

"Wharton says—

"he had to exercise the function of a secretary of war in the selection and forwarding of supplies, of a secretary of the navy in supervising the fitting out and regulation of privateers numerous enough to scour all the European waters, and of a supreme admiralty judge in determining prize questions in which these privateers were concerned and in adjusting the almost innumerable controversies in which those concerned in these privateers were engaged.

"The functions exercised for the United States by Franklin alone corresponded to those which were performed for England by a chancellor of the exchequer, secretaries of foreign affairs, the admiralty board, war secretaries, and the courts of admiralty.

"There is much harping at this time about the domination of one man in the making of a great treaty to secure peace and to establish democracy securely among the civilized nations of the world, and the suggestion of association and alliance with European nations, or the intimation of an interest in European affairs is received with well-staged mimicry of horror by leaders of an opposing party.

"Yet this Republic would have been stillborn from an abortive revolution and liberty have been given no life upon this earth had the feeble Colonies of America not sought and procured alliance in Europe.

"Franklin's mission was to make alliance and to secure support, and the alliance made with France which obligated the Colonies to support her in event of war with Great Britain, as she supported the Colonies; and which pledge this young Government, not yet fully organized nor secure in her sovereignty to conclude no treaty of peace with Great Britain, except with the knowledge and assent of France, was not deemed an acknowledgment of vassalage or an abridgment of sovereignty on the part of the Colonies, but was an agency and guaranty for the establishment of a new sovereignty of the people which will survive when the 'sovereignty of lords' shall be but a hateful memory. Washington, whose friend and collaborator Franklin was, deprecated, not alliances, but 'entangling' alliances. Alliances and support were sought. Entanglements were avoided.

"Franklin, like Washington, comprehended the full meaning and essential characteristics of an independent democratic government. While Washington sustained our military forces in the field, enduring untold privations and subjected to the cabals of hostile elements in Congress, Franklin sustained the morale of our young Nation and provided the sympathetic, financial, and material support which made success possible, and, like Washington, encountered hostility and interference directed by a hostile element in Congress.

"Franklin had his Lodges, his Knoxes, and his Reeds to contend with in the person of the Adamses and the Lees.

"America has produced no man having better understanding of the principles of democratic government than Ben Franklin, and none who understood better their practical application to individual liberty, free government, and international relations. The highest authorities, both in America and abroad, credit him with being the ablest diplomat who has ever represented this Government in our foreign relations. Yet he was a philosopher. This was said of him in derogation of his usefulness to his country. He was spoken of as an indolent philosopher who, from his love of aimless intrigue and his dislike of bold push, would deprive his country of advantages which a courageous front would procure. There was practically no limit to the slur and slander of Franklin and the hindrances and embarrassments thrown in his way by his personal enemies and those who were the enemies of his policies in Congress.

"The futility of an attempt by Congress to direct and control foreign negotiations was most conspicuously demonstrated during this early period when the Republic had not yet 'found itself' and Congress was dominated and blinded by its jealousy of Executive authority. The experiences of that time led to the constitutional provision placing our foreign negotiations under the Executive. Our foreign relations were conducted through a Committee of Foreign Affairs, the personnel and policy of which changed from time to time and which was controlled alternately by contending factions, absolutely destroying the stability of our foreign affairs and endangering any negotiations that might be undertaken. The policy of Congress was determined by resolution, communications being received from foreign ministers and envoys, policies initiated or reversed according to the spirit that might dominate the committee or the Congress for the moment. Two factions were constantly contending for control, and whenever that of Samuel and John Adams and Richard H. Lee was dominant every conceivable embarrassment and hindrance was thrown in the way of Franklin. From this resulted a vacillating foreign policy which would undoubtedly have meant disaster but for the confidence inspired with France by Franklin and the unwillingness of the French foreign office to deal with any other than him.

"Wharton in his commentaries on the diplomatic correspondence of the American Revolution says on this subject:

"The fluctuating policy of Congress as to foreign affairs is illustrated by the provisions in the committee to whom these affairs were intrusted and the changes in the tone of our diplomatic correspondence as one or the other of these parties was in its turn in the ascendency. When the committee was first constituted it contained, under the title of the 'secret committee,' the names of Franklin, Jay, Harrison, and Morris, to the first two of whom Arthur Lee objected as unfriendly to himself, while Harrison and Morris were known to be devoted friends of both Washington and Franklin. But Franklin and Jay were abroad; Morris after a while transferred his attention to the finance department, and frequently we find important instructions signed only by Richard H. Lee and Lovell, Lovell being a devoted friend of the Lees and of Samuel Adams. It was during periods when this committee was thus composed that instructions withdrawing, as far as could be decently done, the control of foreign relations abroad from Franklin and placing it in the hands of those singular functionaries, our envoys without residences, whose very existence was ignored by the courts to which they were commissioned. * * *

"Our foreign relations then labored, in the first place, under the difficulty arising from the alternations of ascendency of the school (of diplomacy) which, on the one side, desired to establish a diplomatic system as known by the law of nations and which advocated a central diplomatic executive, selecting Franklin as the proper foreign representative of this executive, and the school on the other side, which sought to do away with such executive, sending out a series of delegated representatives, keeping each under congressional control, under immediate congressional impulse.

"In the end the policy of Franklin, which was that of Washington, triumphed, and our diplomatic relations have since been established upon the principle of executive authority in negotiation. But even in the triumph of Franklin and the final negotiations of a desirable peace with Great Britain, the sinister evil of a fluctuating, irresponsible influence upon our diplomatic relations was reflected in a seeming, if not actual, breach of faith on the part of American representatives in a disregard of the treaty obligation to France that neither France nor the United States should conclude a truce or peace with Great Britain without the formal consent of the other being first obtained. The fact that the treaty negotiated separately by the American representative proved to be in itself acceptable to France and that Franklin signed the treaty with his colleagues, Vergennes, the French minister of foreign affairs, having been from time to time informally advised of the nature of negotiations pending, saved the United States from having its good faith impugned. This delicate question of good faith—though France has never raised it against us—was a consequence of the conflict of views between Franklin and his colleagues, Franklin holding to the policy of frankness and good faith to a degree not deemed essential by his colleagues.

"The treaty of alliance made between France and the United States in 1778 provided in the first article that—

"If war should break out between France and Great Britain during the continuance of the present war between the United States and England, his majesty and the said United States shall make it a common cause, and aid each other mutually with their good offices, their counsels, and their forces, according to the exigence of conjunctures, as becomes good and faithful allies.

"And in the eighth article that:

"Neither of the two parties shall conclude either truce or peace with Great Britain without the formal consent of the other first obtained; and they mutually engage not to lay down their arms until the independence of the United States shall have been formally or tacitly assured by the treaty or treaties that shall terminate the war.

"When it came to the application of this treaty Adams and Jay, while agreeing that no definite peace could be signed without the assent of France, made 'reservations.' Congress had passed resolutions of instruction reavowing adherence to this alliance. It was held by Jay that so far as these instructions implied the subjection of the American envoys to the court of France, they imposed a degrading submission which no high-spirited nation ought to impose on its envoys.

"Yet there is the best of authority for the assertion that such conditions as those imposed by the French treaty are not only consistent with the reciprocal independence of the contracting sovereigns, but that they are the essential incidents of all treaties for joint wars. Such a reciprocal treaty obligation, whether for peace or for war, is recognized by all nations as consistent with their independent sovereignty. A pledge to entertain peace propositions in common is not regarded by any nation as placing either party to the treaty in a dishonorable vassalage to the other. Such mutual obligations are essential to alliances of belligerency. Corresponding obligations are also essential to an international alliance for the preservation of peace.

"Franklin, who was in fullest sympathy with and had a broad comprehension of our independent institutions, of which he was one of the most democratic and practical sponsors, saw no sacrifice or impairment of our independent sovereignty in a treaty which obligated us to go to war if need be in support of an ally and to refrain from making a peace without that ally's participation and approval.

"There could be no question as to the devotion of Franklin to the independence of the United States. No man could be more zealously regardful of this than he, and none better understood and was more in sympathy with our institutions of complete freedom. None better than he mastered the intricacies of diplomacy, and from his time to this day there is but one other who has so fully recognized the people of a nation in his dealings with their government.

"Franklin's political and diplomatic training was founded upon communication and intercourse with people of all sorts and from all sections, in which he acquired an understanding of their needs and desires, their mode of thought, and impulses to action. Being endowed with the power of keen observation and a natural instinct of analysis, he reasoned readily from cause to effect or from effect to cause. Elemental things were not beneath his attention and he was able to attain results of great magnitude through simple agencies. As an apprentice he knew the meaning of work at small remuneration; dependent in youth upon his own resources, he knew the importance of economy; having a keen sense of the enjoyment of life he learned to make the most of his resources; of philosophical mind, he measured with accuracy the value of things and their relation to each other in action and reaction; a ready wit and sometimes whimsical humor, he gave buoyancy to his philosophy and kept it in tune with things commonplace and human. His versatility of mind and accuracy of observation were at all times remarkable, and his instincts constructive as well as inquisitive. As a newspaper publisher and as a postal agent, he was brought in contact with the public, and his various employments familiarized him with the politics and the actual living conditions of men in Europe as well as in America. As an analyst he visualized the construction of things physical, philosophical, or political, and by virtue of this could construct or reconstruct and organize.

"In his politics and diplomacy he was constructive and capable of laying down a general principle to which matters of detail might be applied as occasion arose.

"Franklin was the personification of American democracy in his diplomacy, and in his mission to France, while accredited to the French court, he actually became the representative of America before the people of France, his credentials to whom was his personality. The philosophers and political enthusiasts, who had nothing in common with the Government, and people in every walk of life adhered to and supported him. John Adams writes on Franklin's being overwhelmed by correspondence from all quarters, mostly on trifling subjects and in a more trifling style, and with unmeaning visits from innumerable people, chiefly from the vanity of saying they had seen him.

"An examination of the correspondence of Franklin justifies the statement of John Adams as to its voluminousness, but not as to its being trifling. Mr. Adams bears testimony as to the astounding influence of Franklin among people of all classes in France. He wrote that Franklin's reputation—

"was more universal than that of Leibnitz, or Newton, Frederick, or Voltaire, and his character more beloved and esteemed than any or all of them. * * * His name was familiar to Government and people, to foreign countries, nobility, clergy, and philosophers, as well as to plebeians to such a degree that there was scarcely a peasant or a citizen, a valet de chambre, coachman or footman, a lady's chambermaid or a scullion in a kitchen, who was not familiar with him and who did not consider him a friend to mankind.

"As an apostle of democracy, Franklin, like President Wilson, realized that our international relations are with the people of a nation as well as with their Government. He believed in the awakening of a righteous public sentiment as being more potent than the exercise of arbitrary authority. He sought and procured the recognition of American independence by the people of France and all the intelligent, liberty-loving people of Europe, as well as by the French Government. Franklin procured the recognition by nations of Europe of a new, independent sovereignty. To-day this new sovereignty, without jeopardy to its independence, is extending its influence to restore the equipoise of sound government in peace throughout the world."

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

H. R. 10074. An act to enlarge the jurisdiction of the municipal court of the District of Columbia, and to regulate appeals from the judgments of said court, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

THE CALENDAR.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Morning business is closed.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House bill 6863, to regulate the height, area, and use of buildings in the District of Columbia and to create a zoning commission, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands that under Rule VIII the Senate must proceed to the consideration of the calendar.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I was going to ask unanimous consent to begin with Calendar No. 252, the number of the calendar that we reached last Monday.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Utah?

Mr. McCORMICK. What is the request of the Senator?

Mr. SMOOT. Last Monday we reached Calendar No. 252. I ask now that we begin there; and then, if we conclude that calendar, we can go back to No. 1, so that the Senate will have a chance to consider all bills on the calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the consideration of the calendar will begin at No. 252, Senate bill 3245.

MARRIAGE IN THE ARMY AND NAVY.

The bill (S. 3245) to regulate the marriage of persons in the military and naval forces of the United States in foreign countries, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill was considered on a former day and the amendments of the Committee on Military Affairs were agreed to. If there be no further amendments, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LOAN OF ARMY RIFLES.

The bill (H. R. 9112) authorizing the Secretary of War to loan Army rifles to posts of the American Legion was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with amendments, on page 1, line 5, to insert before the words "Army rifles" the words "obsolete or condemned"; in line 8, page 1, after the word "purposes," to strike out the words "and uses"; and in line 10, page 1, after the word "transportation," to add a proviso, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized, under rules, limitations, and regulations to be prescribed by him, to loan obsolete or condemned Army rifles to posts of the American Legion for use by them in connection with the funeral ceremonies of deceased soldiers, sailors, and marines, and for other post ceremonial purposes, and to sell to such posts blank ammunition in suitable amounts for said rifles at cost price, plus cost of packing and transportation: Provided, however, That not to exceed 10 such rifles to any one post.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

ORDNANCE SERGEANTS.

The bill (H. R. 2980) to increase the efficiency of the Military Establishment of the United States was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 1110, Revised Statutes, and the first proviso of section 12 of the act entitled "An act for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes," approved June 3, 1916, be, and the same hereby are, repealed.

Mr. SMOOT. I would like to ask the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] to explain the purpose of the bill. It simply seeks to repeal section 1110 of the Revised Statutes. I have not the statutes before me.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I will say to the Senator that the part of the law which it is desired to repeal reads:

That ordnance sergeants shall be selected by the Secretary of War from the sergeants of the line or Ordnance Department who shall have served faithfully for eight years, including four years in the grade of noncommissioned officer.

That is the portion of the law proposed to be repealed. The ordnance work has become of such technical character that ordnance sergeants, as a rule, can not do it, and besides there are not enough of them to do the work that is necessary to be done by the Ordnance Department. The War Department asks that it may be relieved from selecting them from the line. It needs the men in the line to train the noncommissioned personnel.

Mr. SMOOT. In other words, it authorizes the designation of trained men to be storekeepers, and so on.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. Not confining it to the selection of men in the line?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. That is it.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CLAIMS AGAINST COAST AND GEODETIC SURVEY.

The bill (S. 3270) authorizing the Superintendent of the Coast and Geodetic Survey, subject to the approval of the Secretary of Commerce, to consider, ascertain, adjust, and determine claims for damages occasioned by acts for which said survey is responsible in certain cases was announced as next in order.

Mr. GRONNA. The Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES], who introduced the bill and reported it from the Committee on Commerce, is not present. It is a measure of some importance, and I ask that it may go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

CHANGE OF NAMES OF VESSELS.

The bill (H. R. 3620) to authorize the Commissioner of Navigation to change the names of vessels was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I was wondering whether the bill would guard a case like this: Many vessels are mortgaged, and if we authorize a change of name, it seems to me there ought to be some provision to the effect that wherever a mortgage is placed upon a vessel, which, of course, would be of record, the parties holding the mortgage should receive notice of the change of name and thus be enabled to require a new mortgage upon the vessel in its new name.

The Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES], who introduced the bill, is out of the Chamber at this time, and therefore I ask that the bill go over until I can have time to study it or talk with the Senator about that feature.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

STATE HOMES FOR DISABLED SOLDIERS AND SAILORS.

The bill (H. R. 1216) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide aid to State or Territorial homes for the support of disabled soldiers and sailors of the United States," approved August 27, 1888, as amended March 2, 1889, was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 1 of an act entitled "An act to provide aid to State or Territorial homes for the support of disabled soldiers and sailors of the United States," approved August 27, 1888, as amended March 2, 1889, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"That all States or Territories which have established, or which shall hereafter establish, State homes for disabled soldiers and sailors of the United States who served in the Civil War or in any previous or subsequent war who are disabled by age, disease, or otherwise, and by reason of such disability are incapable of earning a living, provided such disability was not incurred in service against the United States, shall be paid for every such disabled soldier or sailor who may be admitted and cared for in such home at the rate of $120 per annum.

"The number of such persons for whose care any State or Territory shall receive the said payment under this act shall be ascertained by the Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers under such regulations as it may prescribe, but the said State or Territorial homes shall be exclusively under the control of the respective State or Territorial authorities, and the board of managers shall not have nor assume any management or control of said State or Territorial homes.

"The board of managers of the national home shall, however, have power to have the said State or Territorial homes inspected at such times as it may consider necessary, and shall report the result of such inspections to Congress in its annual report: Provided, That no State shall be paid a sum exceeding one-half the cost of maintenance of each soldier or sailor by such State: Provided further, That one-half of any sum or sums retained by State homes on account of pensions received from inmates shall be deducted from the aid herein provided for. That no money shall be apportioned to any State or Territorial home that maintains a bar or canteen where intoxicating liquors are sold: Provided further, That for any sum or sums collected in any manner from inmates of such State or Territorial homes to be used for the support of said homes a like amount shall be deducted from the aid herein provided for, but this proviso shall not apply to any State or Territorial home into which the wives or widows of soldiers are admitted and maintained."

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I wish to say to the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. KIRBY], who reported the bill from the Committee on Military Affairs, that this is rather an important measure, because it is entering into a new line of caring for disabled soldiers, not only of the Civil War but the wars that have since taken place.

The Senator will remember that there is an estimate already of some $85,000,000 with which to build hospitals for the purpose of taking care of disabled soldiers of the recent war. I wish to say now that there is no necessity for the expenditure of $85,000,000 for that purpose. I simply mention the fact in connection with this bill because I want to call the attention of the Senate to what I know is under way at the present time.

Under the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers the soldiers' homes throughout the country, located in different States, as the Senator well knows, have very few soldiers in them. Mr. Wood, president of the board, was in my office about 10 days ago. He has submitted information, not only to myself but to other Senators, I think, as well, to the effect that if the soldiers' homes now built and in complete operation, and located in the very choicest parts of the country, for the purpose of caring for the disabled soldiers, were utilized to their fullest extent there need be no more homes or hospitals built; at least, there need be no more than one or two at most. The president of the board assures me that the present homes will furnish ample room and facilities to take care not only of soldiers who are there at the present time from the Civil War and the Spanish-American War, but for all of the disabled soldiers who require a home that they may be taken care of because of injuries or illness resulting from the recent war.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. May I suggest to the Senator that the bill makes absolutely no change in the law now on the statute books with reference to those homes except to increase from $100 to $120 a year the compensation of the States for caring for these soldiers. The Senator from Utah knows that the expense of maintaining the homes is great. He knows what the States do for the soldiers, and that the increased cost which has entered into everything has entered into these homes as well. The bill simply provides for a slight increase for the States.

Mr. SMOOT. I recognize that fact, I will say to the Senator; but I will state what I had in mind. I had in mind that not only those soldiers could be taken care of by the homes in the States but that we have arrived at a point where we have got to decide whether the national homes are to be maintained or not. The expenses now are altogether too high for the number of soldiers who are being treated in those homes. Everybody concedes that. It seems to me that it would be the best policy for the Government to utilize all the space in the present national homes, and I think it can be done with a very, very small increase of expense, and save an immense amount of money that is contemplated to be expended for additional space. I am sure the Senator from Arkansas would not be averse to a program such as that.

Mr. KIRBY. The chief purpose of this amendment of the act is, as stated by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN], to increase in the amount of $20 a year the compensation contributed by the Government to the State homes located in the various States. It is a negligible quantity in amount, so far as the whole amount is concerned, and the inmates will be better taken care of. To the States it is, of course, important, because of the increased cost of maintenance. I do not think the amendment of the law would at all interfere with the proposition which the Senator from Utah has in mind.

Mr. SMOOT. The object I have in speaking at this time is not by way of objection to this bill. That is not my purpose. My purpose was to call the attention, not only of the Senate but of the House as well, that when the $85,000,000 estimate for the new hospitals is considered for the purpose of caring for these disabled soldiers, in my opinion, it should not be granted, because we have at present ample facilities, if the president of the board is correct in his statement, for caring for them all. The grounds are beautiful around all the homes and every convenience exists for caring for the soldiers. There is a hospital within every home, and every requirement for the care of disabled or sick soldiers is now provided by Congress for that purpose. If that bill is ever brought to the Senate either in a special bill form or in an appropriation bill, I think the Senate, when the facts are called to its attention, will positively refuse to appropriate the $85,000,000, or, I was going to say, any portion of it.

Mr. KIRBY. There can be no objection, in my opinion, to the proposition as made by the Senator from Utah. If the homes that are already established and maintained are sufficient to take care of the condition that seems to need to be taken care of by the hospital program, then the hospital program is unnecessary, and nobody will vote more readily against the matter than I will. Government business ought to be transacted in a businesslike way, and if we have the facilities already at hand, new facilities should not be supplied at an additional expense to the Government.

I shall cooperate hearily with the Senator from Utah if the conditions develop on that point as he says, but this is a small matter, and the conditions require it, and I hope the bill will pass without any delay.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I feel constrained to differ with the Senator from Utah about this measure. These homes are provided for by the States——

Mr. SMOOT. I am not objecting to the bill.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Oh, I thought the Senator was.

Mr. SMOOT. I said I was not objecting to the bill, but I took occasion to speak of conditions which we will be called upon to meet hereafter whenever the estimate of $85,000,000 for new hospitals comes before the Senate.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Then I misunderstood the Senator.

Mr. KIRBY. I understood the Senator from Utah not to be objecting to this bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EMBASSY BUILDING AT SANTIAGO, CHILE.

The bill (S. 2782) for the purchase of the embassy building and grounds of the United States at Santiago, Chile, was announced as next in order.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, this bill provides for the purchase by the Government for embassy purposes of the property which has for a long time been occupied by the United States Embassy at Santiago, Chile. The State Department wrote the Committee on Foreign Relations about it, and the ambassador to Chile, Mr. Shea, wrote to me about it. At the time it was stated that the Government had an option on the property which expired on the 1st of January, 1920. I presume, therefore, that the option has lapsed; but I do not know. I have tried to get in communication with the State Department in the last few minutes, but could not find anybody there who knew anything on the subject.

The purchase price calls for the expenditure of $130,000. The assurance is given, both by the ambassador and by the State Department, that the price is a very reasonable one, and that the Government ought to have the property. It is further stated that in case the United States does not exercise its option France will take the property. As I have said, I do not know whether or not the option has expired; but it would certainly do no harm to pass this bill, and I suggest that the Senate act on it. If the option has expired, of course the action of the Senate will pass for nothing; if it has not expired, or if it has been renewed, the purpose of the State Department can be carried out.

Mr. SMOOT. Would it not be better for the Senator from Indiana to ascertain from the State Department whether or not the option has expired before passing the bill?

Mr. NEW. I have made such an effort and I have been unable to ascertain in time to present the information to the Senate now.

Mr. OVERMAN. I think the bill had better go over, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. STERLING in the chair). The bill will be passed over.

Mr. LODGE. One moment, if I may be allowed to say a word. The purchase of the embassy building at Santiago, Chile, has been very strongly recommended by the State Department. I think I had printed such a letter written by the department in connection with the matter, but have not had time to go back and look it up. It would put the Government to very great expense if we failed to get this property. The case was such a strong one that the committee were unanimous about it. It is not easy to get suitable quarters in some of the South American cities for such purposes; prices are very high there, as they are here. I think it would be wise to pass the bill. Of course, if the option has expired no money would be taken from the Treasury; but there is no need of waiting to see whether or not we can renew the option. If the option still exists we can get the building, but if the option has expired the bill amounts to nothing. I hope, however, that it will go through, because it has been long delayed and is a measure that ought to be passed. We pursue the most penny-wise and pound-foolish policy in regard to making such purchases. We have allowed one building after another to slip by and have ended by paying a great deal more in the way of rent and interest than would have been required to make the purchase in the first instance if we had only taken such buildings at the prices for which they were offered.

Mr. OVERMAN. I think there was a policy adopted several years ago to purchase so many buildings every year.

Mr. LODGE. We passed an act to appropriate $500,000 a year for the purchase of buildings for embassies and legations, but nothing has been spent under that act; the other House has made no appropriation for that purpose.

Mr. OVERMAN. The policy was on the recommendation of the committee, of which the Senator from Massachusetts is now chairman, to purchase so many buildings each year. I remember that we bought one in Costa Rica for $40,000, and it was a very handsome building.

Mr. LODGE. I had forgotten that. I did not know that we had ever bought any buildings under that act.

Mr. OVERMAN. We bought several buildings under that act. It seems to me $130,000 is pretty high for a building such as this.

Mr. LODGE. This building is located in the capital of Chile, which is a great city. Chile is rather a different country from Costa Rica; indeed, it is one of the most powerful countries in South America.

Mr. OVERMAN. We have not an ambassador there, have we?

Mr. LODGE. Yes; we have an ambassador there.

Mr. OVERMAN. I think the bill ought to go before the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. LODGE. It has been before the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. OVERMAN. The bill has been reported by the Committee on Foreign Relations; but the appropriation ought to be included in the regular appropriation bill.

Mr. LODGE. There is no use discussing the matter if the option has expired; but if it has not expired, if we do not take advantage of it, when the option does expire France is going to take the building. So the Senator need not be disturbed about the building not being sold.

Mr. OVERMAN. That may be; but I remember that in the case of a building in Paris, of which the price, as I recall, was $400,000, it was said some other nation would take it if we did not do so; but I doubt whether or not that has happened. We have got to watch these matters very carefully. I think there ought to be a settled policy in regard to them.

Mr. LODGE. Some years ago we were offered a building in Rome, which we could have then bought for $350,000; Congress would not hear of it; but two years later the Italian Government paid $1,200,000 for the same building for its own use.

Mr. OVERMAN. This bill, of course, is a matter for the consideration of the able Senator and his committee. We make appropriations for foreign relations in the Diplomatic and Consular appropriation bill, and probably this proposed appropriation might be included in that measure. I understand that there is a question now as to whether or not the option has expired.

Mr. LODGE. There is some doubt.

Mr. OVERMAN. I think the bill had better go over.

Mr. LODGE. But if the option has expired, the Government will be in no trouble.

Mr. OVERMAN. I repeat that I think the bill had better go over.

Mr. LODGE. And if the option has not expired, of course the Senator's action helps to kill it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Before the Senator from North Carolina objects, will he permit me to ask a question of the chairman of the committee in order that I may refresh my memory concerning this matter? The bill provides for the purchase of the property that we are now occupying as our embassy there, does it not?

Mr. LODGE. Yes.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Is the price stated?

Mr. LODGE. Yes; it is $132,000.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. My memory is a little defective, but I recall that at the time the matter was considered the arguments in favor of exercising the option and purchasing the property were quite strong. We have adopted the policy of gradually acquiring embassies and legations in the capitals of nations where it is thought desirable so to do. In this particular case unless we purchase the property we will be compelled to move and there will be great difficulty in locating ourselves in proper quarters, and in a country like Chile to have the United States practically turned out of its embassy, which it has occupied for a number of years, would have a very bad moral effect. I am inclined to think that if the Senator from North Carolina had been at the meeting at which this bill was considered and heard the recommendation of the State Department and of our representative in Chile he would have agreed that it is a very desirable step to take. It is not a very large price, as such matters go, and Chile is of sufficient importance on the Western Hemisphere to justify the proposed action.

Mr. OVERMAN. I shall not object further, inasmuch as the Senator from Massachusetts says it has been thoroughly considered by his committee. I am familiar with the policy which was proposed of purchasing embassy and legation buildings, including one in Chile, but in the case of the purchase of the building in Santiago, for instance, for which it is proposed to pay $130,000, we pay the representative of the United States who is to live in it $17,500 a year. He can not live in it on such a salary, and the consequence is we have got to have rich men fill these places. We ought to increase the salaries if we are going to give them such expensive buildings in which to live.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, the Senator overlooks the fact that the purchase of this building will eliminate also the item of rent which the Government pays for offices at the embassy. It will provide for the chancellery and all the offices of the embassy for which we now pay rent. It is the case in connection with practically all our embassies and legations that, in order to enable our embassies to get along at all, there have to be made large allowances for rent for offices.

Mr. OVERMAN. I understand that. I have visited one country where they allowed rent to the ambassador, but the offices were in the embassy building; and that was right, too, because he could not possibly live in the building upon the salary paid him.

Mr. LODGE. That is true.

Mr. OVERMAN. These officials can not live on the salaries paid them. I understand that in London the rent of the embassy amounts to $35,000, while we pay the ambassador only $17,500 a year; so that, unless a man is rich, he can not afford to occupy such a position.

Mr. LODGE. The passage of the bill providing for the acquisition of buildings for embassies and legations will do a good deal to relieve that situation. All our diplomatic officers are very badly underpaid.

Mr. OVERMAN. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. LODGE. If they are allowed their rent—which would be the case if we purchased legation and embassy buildings and furnished them to our representatives—that would, to a certain degree, save the necessity of raising the salaries of some of them, although that will have to come.

Mr. OVERMAN. We are represented in Chile by an ambassador, are we not?

Mr. LODGE. Yes; there is an embassy there.

Mr. OVERMAN. He is a first-class ambassador, receiving $17,500?

Mr. LODGE. Yes; he is paid $17,500, just as the other ambassadors are paid. I ask the Senator to realize that the Committee on Foreign Relations, as the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] has stated, considered this matter with great care; we examined all the statements made by the Secretary of State. I introduced the bill at his request. We found they made such a case, as it seemed to the entire committee, that it was the only sensible thing to do. Delay may have caused us to lose the opportunity of acquiring the building.

Mr. OVERMAN. I withdraw my objection to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Massachusetts yield?

Mr. LODGE. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. HARRISON. I should like to inquire what was the amount appropriated by Congress for the purchase of the consulate at Shanghai? It was about $400,000, was it not?

Mr. LODGE. I do not remember. That was included in the law passed by Congress.

Mr. HARRISON. That provision passed some two years ago, my recollection is, and quite a large sum was appropriated.

Mr. LODGE. I do not recall exactly what the amount was.

Mr. HARRISON. It strikes me that this is a most reasonable amount.

Mr. LODGE. It is a very reasonable amount, indeed.

Mr. HARRISON. Some years ago the policy was declared that we would spend $500,000 a year, I think, to acquire embassy and legation buildings abroad, none of which was to cost more than $150,000, I believe. This is within the law, the amount, as I understand, being $130,000.

Mr. LODGE. It is within the law.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 2707) for the relief of Ellen M. Willey, widow of Owen S. Willey, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I ask that that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 848) to reimburse Isaiah Stephens, postmaster at McMechen, Marshall County, W. Va., for money and postage stamps stolen was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I ask that that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 849) to reimburse S. S. Buzzard, postmaster at Berkeley Springs, Morgan County, W. Va., for cash stolen was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I ask that that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 3066) to provide for the incorporation of cooperative associations in the District of Columbia was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill goes over.

The bill (S. 1661) for the relief of Maj. Ellis B. Miller was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I should like to have any Senator who is familiar with that measure give an explanation concerning it.

ISAIAH STEVENS.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, I should like to ask what became of Calendar No. 263 and Calendar No. 264?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection was made and they went over.

Mr. KING. I objected.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I hope the Senator will withdraw his objection to the consideration of those bills.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, Calendar No. 261 is a bill to restore to the pension list a deserter.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I am not interested in that bill, but in the next two bills.

Mr. KING. I decline to withdraw my objection to that measure.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I am interested in Order of Business No. 263 and Order of Business No. 264, and I hope the Senator will withdraw his objection to those measures.

Mr. KING. With respect to Senate bill 848, the record shows, as I recall, that the postmaster failed to conform to the instructions which had been given him by the Post Office Department in caring for the stamps and the money of the post office, and the Post Office Department recommended adversely upon his claim. I will withhold my objection as to that pending the explanation of the Senator.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I will say to the Senator from Utah that the safe in which these funds and stamps were kept was inspected by the inspector of the Post Office Department and thoroughly approved. The larger amount of this claim, almost the entire amount of it, is for postage stamps stolen, with which the postmaster was charged. They only cost the Government the amount involved in printing them, and yet he has been obliged to pay in full for them. The building was thoroughly approved and was a new building. The safe in which these funds were kept was thoroughly approved, and with the knowledge and consent of the Post Office Department officials they were keeping these funds in that safe.

I think the bill is an entirely meritorious one. It has passed the House on one or two occasions, and has been recommended now by the committee after consideration; and if the Senator from Utah will read the report he will find, I am sure, that there was no negligence on the part of the postmaster, and that it is a meritorious case.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I have read the report.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I helped write the report, so, of course, I know what is in it.

Mr. KING. The next to the last sentence of the letter written by the Acting Postmaster General under date of August 20, 1919, and addressed to the chairman of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, states as follows:

> The postmaster filed in this department under the terms of the act of May 9, 1888 (25 Stat., 135), a claim for credit on account of $59.39 postal funds, $1,950.21 postage stamps, and $61 money-order funds lost in said burglary, but in view of his failure to afford proper protection to said property by using the facilities provided for him at Government expense, his claim was disallowed under date of October 22, 1912. Since that time no facts not previously before the department have been furnished.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I will say to the Senator that there is some dispute about some of the facts in relation to this matter, the department claiming, as is fully set out in the report, that inasmuch as the adjoining bank had in it a burglar-proof safe which they had arranged that the postmaster could use, he should have put these funds and stamps in that burglar-proof safe. The postmaster, however, disputes that fact in part. He says that his clear understanding was that that safe was only to be used for the overflow of stamps or money when he had large amounts which his space could not accommodate. As the Senator has read, $1,950 plus of this amount was in postage stamps. The postmaster had an unusually large amount on hand, because the Christmas season was approaching, and it was necessary for him to have this large number of stamps. They only cost the Government the cost of printing them; and this man having put them in a safe approved by the Government, inspected by the Government, and burglarized under conditions which probably would have wrecked any kind of a safe, it does not seem fair now that he should be obliged to pay for them.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield for a moment, just for a correction, I want to say that I think the Senator is mistaken when he says that the loss of the stamps only cost the Government the amount involved in printing them. When stamps are stolen they are disposed of by the person who steals them, and then they go into the regular channels just like any other stamps, and the mail is carried by those stolen stamps just the same as if they had been purchased originally by the man who used them; and therefore the Government does lose more than the cost of printing the stamps.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Of course, it does give transportation to mail matter; but, as shown by some of the department's reports, they are making a very large return, and a part of that, at least, is profit. The stamps did not cost the Government at that time, however, more than the cost of printing them. The postmaster is a poor man, a man of the highest repute and standing, a man whose character is not questioned by anybody, who had always made it a practice prior to the installation of this safe to take the postal funds to his house for safe-keeping, and who was told, when this safe was put in the post-office room, that it was not necessary for him to do that. He therefore left these funds in the post-office safe. He had always taken them to his house every evening, and the actual money that was there was simply the money taken in after banking hours. The banking hours are from 9 to 3. This post office is kept open from 7 in the morning until 8 at night. It was absolutely impossible for him to keep all of these things in the bank vault, because he could not have access to it. It was absolutely necessary for him to keep a large amount available in his safe for use prior to and after banking hours; and I hope the Senator will not continue his objection to the consideration of this very meritorious bill.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, it is very difficult to resist the request of the distinguished Senator from West Virginia, but nothing which he has said will occasion me, for the present at least, to withhold my objection.

There are hundreds and thousands of post offices in the United States. There must be some rule, and postmasters must be held to the highest degree of accountability. If not, if the department were to let down the bars—to use the language of the street—there would be much negligence, and there would be appeals made constantly to the Congress of the United States to reimburse postmasters for their negligence in caring for the funds and stamps of the Government.

I will say to the Senator, insisting upon my objection, that because of his earnestness in this matter I shall take the trouble to consult the department myself. I shall go and see Mr. Koons, who wrote this letter, and I shall be glad to confer with the Senator, and next Monday, if he will call up the matter, if I can find evidence to support the position which the Senator takes, I shall withdraw my objection. Under the report of the Post Office Department, however, I should feel derelict in my duty if I did not make the objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made. The bill will be passed over.

S. S. BUZZERD.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, I believe the Secretary called the next bill on the calendar, Senate bill 849, to reimburse S. S. Buzzerd, postmaster at Berkeley Springs.

Mr. KING. I will withhold my objection until the Senator makes an explanation of that bill.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I call the Senator's attention to the latter part of the letter written to the chairman of the committee by J. C. Koons, Acting Postmaster General, in which he says:

> The safe was provided with a burglar-proof chest, and when the claim was first considered—

That is, by the department—

> it was understood that this chest was large enough to accommodate all stamps and funds. It seems, however, that in this burglar-proof chest at the time of the burglary there were deposited $1,306.07 postage stamps and $38.50 postal funds, which completely filled the chest and left no room for the Government property which the burglars secured.

This claim was rejected by the Post Office Department plainly under a misapprehension, as is confessed in this letter. This is undoubtedly and without any question a meritorious case and not subject to the same criticism which the Senator made with reference to the previous bill.

Mr. KING. I have had no time to go into the report. I will withdraw my objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The objection is withdrawn.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 849) to reimburse S. S. Buzzerd, postmaster at Berkeley Springs, Morgan County, W. Va., for cash stolen. It authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to S. S. Buzzerd, postmaster at Berkeley Springs, Morgan County, W. Va., out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $120.30, the same to be in payment for certain cash taken from the post office of Berkeley Springs, Morgan County, W. Va., on February 13, 1914, by unknown persons.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 1661) for the relief of Maj. Ellis B. Miller, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

HERMAN L. KARPELES.

The bill (S. 866) providing for the issuance to Herman L. Karpeles of a duplicate of an original medal of honor awarded to his father, Leopold Karpeles, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes and directs the Secretary of War to issue to Herman L. Karpeles a duplicate of the original medal of honor awarded to his father, Leopold Karpeles, late sergeant, Company E, Fifty-seventh Regiment Massachusetts Volunteer Infantry, for gallantry at the Wilderness, Va., on May 6, 1864, the original medal having been destroyed by fire on March 10, 1913, the cost of which shall be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 3109) to amend section 26 of the act approved July 17, 1916, known as the Federal farm-loan act, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the Banking and Currency Committee have granted to certain interested parties a hearing upon this bill, and the hearing is not yet completed, as I understand. Therefore I ask that the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 3383) to increase the efficiency of the commissioned and enlisted personnel of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, Coast Guard, and Public Health Service was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1455) for the relief of John L. O'Mara was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts in the chair). The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2954) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Albert F. Smith, deceased, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 3152) for the relief of George W. Mellinger was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1453) for the relief of Adolph F. Hitchler was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

JOHN F. KELLY.

The bill (S. 1454) for the relief of John F. Kelly was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I have examined the record in this case pretty carefully and I believe it is a meritorious case, although a charge of desertion was placed against this man. Therefore I have no objection to the consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read as follows:

> Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers John F. Kelly, who was a private in Company F, First Regiment Maryland Volunteer Cavalry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been discharged honorably from the military service of the United States as a private of said company and regiment on the 15th day of February, 1863: Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other allowances shall accrue by reason of the passage of this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARION C. RAYSOR.

The bill (S. 3176) to authorize the President of the United States to appoint Marion C. Raysor an officer of the Army was considered in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, in line 6, after the words "Regular Army," to strike out "with the rank therein which he would have attained in the service in due course of lineal promotion," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint Marion C. Raysor, formerly a captain of Cavalry of the Regular Army, to that grade in the Cavalry branch of the Regular Army, but no back pay or allowances shall accrue and the total number of officers now authorized by law shall not be increased by reason of the passage of this act.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to ask the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. DIAL] to explain to the Senate why this bill should be passed, and to state exactly the circumstances which led to the introduction of the bill, and what extenuating circumstances have occurred of late that would justify the passage of such legislation.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, this is a bill to restore Mr. Raysor to the position in the Army from which he was dismissed as the result of court-martial proceedings. He entered the Regular Army about 1898 as a private. He was promoted from time to time, went to Cuba, and afterwards went to the Philippines—I believe three times—and after that he was down on the border, and was promoted to the rank of captain. He was charged then with drunkenness and with falsifying his accounts. He was something like 75 miles from a railroad and some 200 miles from a bank. The charges fell down; there was no attempt to prove that he had embezzled any funds. In fact, I think the amount in dispute was only $2.11, and it was a question of filling out the proper check.

There was no moral turpitude at all proven against Mr. Raysor. There was some prejudice against him, and the charge of drunkenness was poorly proven, if proven at all. It was not a question of habitual drunkenness, but he was charged with being under the influence of whisky possibly once, or something like that. But he was discharged from the Army. The testimony is that there was some prejudice against him on the part of a higher official, and he was retired to private life.

Mr. SMOOT. Does the Senator state that there was no charge of embezzlement proven against him?

Mr. DIAL. No; I did not say there was no charge.

Mr. SMOOT. I say proven against him?

Mr. DIAL. No; there was no embezzlement. The Government lost nothing. There was a discrepancy—my recollection is of only $2.11 in his accounts. I think that charge fell down.

Mr. SMOOT. Does the Senator claim that he was court-martialed, convicted, and dismissed from the Army for drunkenness alone?

Mr. DIAL. No; I do not say that. I say that the charge of embezzlement was made against him, but it was not proven, according to my recollection.

Mr. SMOOT. That is what I said. Then if that charge was not proven the only charge that was proven was drunkenness.

Mr. DIAL. Yes. On page 3 of the report the committee says:

In the fall of 1913 Capt. Raysor was tried by a general court-martial at El Paso for making a false official certificate and being drunk on duty, and on the findings was dismissed from the service October 27 of that year. The finding of the court-martial seems to be essentially of negligence rather than of deliberate falsification, and there is some extenuation in the exigent circumstances of border field service, 75 miles from a railway and more than 200 miles from his banking place. It appears that the Government lost nothing and that there was no attempt to prove embezzlement or conversion of funds.

That is the statement I tried to make.

The evidence as to alleged instances of drunkenness is not satisfactory as to cohesiveness, definiteness, or disinterestedness, nor was it alleged that such indulgence was habitual. Capt. Raysor himself represents that his dismissal was largely due to animus on the part of a superior who was active against him.

Mr. President, when we entered the European war this man, who had been trained as a soldier, and who was, I believe, 49 years old, wanted to fight for his country, and in order to join the Army as a private he had to get permission from the War Department. He sought that permission, and was allowed to join the Army. He went to France and made good in the Army. He came back here recommended by all of the officers under whom he served, and he desires to get his name cleared.

Since that time he has been employed by the Government here in the Liberty Hut, in the Commissary Department, and he has been promoted two or three times in the last few months. He does not live in my State now. He originally lived there, but he joined the Army from Texas, and his home is now in California. He was ambitious to serve his country, and it does seem to me that when a man over the draft age, who did not have to go to the war, voluntarily joined as a private, and went out and made good, such flimsy charges should not be kept over him forever. He wants to have his name cleared, and is staying here in Washington for that purpose. He is a most competent, most efficient man, and has been promoted, as I said, and had his salary increased three times in the last few months. He is now serving in the Commissary Department, in the Liberty Hut, here.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, in view of the statement made by the Senator as to the man's enlisting in his later years and serving as a soldier in the war in France; and, further, as the report shows, in view of the fact that the proof of embezzlement was not positive, I have no objection whatever to the passage of the bill.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, I will state that I served on a subcommittee which thoroughly investigated this matter. The subcommittee went to the bottom of it, and reported to the Military Affairs Committee, and the full committee unanimously recommended the bill for passage. There was no moral obliquity in the charges. It was merely a technical error of bookkeeping more than anything else, involving $2.11; and as to drunkenness, the proof really did not amount to anything, and the committee felt that the man ought to be given another chance.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CIVIL AND COMMERCIAL AVIATION.

The bill (S. 3348) to create a department of air, defining the powers and duties of the director thereof; providing for the organization, disposition, and administration of a United States air force; creating the United States air reserve force; and providing for the development of civil and commercial aviation was announced as next in order.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, there are but seven minutes of the morning hour remaining. It is perfectly apparent that the consideration of this bill will occupy some time and that the only effect of taking it up now would be to waste the remaining six or seven minutes of the morning hour. I therefore ask unanimous consent that this bill may be considered next in order when the calendar is again taken up.

Mr. SMOOT. Of course, Mr. President, the Senator can make his request next Monday, when the calendar is taken up, but it is hardly in order now to ask unanimous consent to consider a bill a week hence. I do not think there will be any objection at all a week from now.

Mr. NEW. I expect to ask for the consideration of the bill in less than a week; in fact, within the next 48 hours.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

LONGEVITY CLAIMS FOR OFFICERS.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, as the time is about up for the consideration of cases on the calendar to-day, I desire to call to the attention of the Senate the fact that the last time the calendar was called there was reached the bill (S. 411) to confer jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to certify certain findings of fact, and for other purposes. It is a bill that has been reported by the committee in two Congresses heretofore and has always passed without opposition. It relates to the longevity claims of officers. All the longevity claims were paid except those of a few officers who happened to file their claims and got an adverse ruling of the comptroller, and the Court of Claims has held that those claims have once been dismissed. But subsequently that ruling was set aside, and everybody else was paid except the men who by their diligence came in at that time. I was not here when the bill was called the last time, and as the call of the calendar to-day started with a number beyond this case I ask unanimous consent that it be considered now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there any objection to the request of the Senator from Alabama?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I would like to ask the Senator how many cases are involved.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I can not say absolutely, but I think probably less than a hundred. All of the rest of the longevity claims were paid. It is merely to put these particular officers on the same basis as the others with whom they were associated. Because they put their claims before an adverse comptroller, the Court of Claims has held that they were disposed of. But the ones who did not file their claims with the comptroller were passed on favorably, and this is merely to put these men on the same basis. In two Congresses a similar bill has been reported by the Judiciary Committee. It failed in the House, although the House has passed a bill for the same purpose, but not the Senate bill.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I had an impression that these matters were before the Military Affairs Committee at some time.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. No; it has always been before the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. SMOOT. The Judiciary Committee reported it out. I notice that the legislative reference service, in giving a digest of the bill, makes this statement:

This bill would direct the Court of Claims to certify to the proper accounting officers findings of fact heretofore made in claims of Army officers for longevity pay under decisions in United States v. Horton (112 U. S., 1), United States v. Watson (130 U. S., 80), and Stewart v. United States (34 Court of Claims, 553). Accounting officers to settle the claims certified and all other claims for longevity pay and allowances of Regular Army officers in accordance with decisions of Supreme Court in cases where claims were disallowed by any accounting officer between 1890 and 1908; no decision of the comptroller to prevent such settlement. Claims to be payable to claimant or widow, or to a legal representative, on proof of existence of blood relations to whom fund would be distributed; but not to an assignee. Attorneys not to receive more than 20 per cent of amount allowed.

I suppose from that statement it simply means that the decision was rendered about 1908, and all claims after 1908 have not been allowed by the comptroller.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will state the case. It may take longer than from now to 2 o'clock, but I will ask the Senator in charge of the unfinished business to give me time to make the statement.

It relates entirely to West Point officers, and the whole question arose out of the fact as to whether or not, in considering the longevity allowances, the terms served at West Point should be counted. The leading case, I think, was that of Gen. Grant. Officers get additional pay for each 10 years they serve, and the question was as to whether the four years at West Point should count. Gen. Grant and some other officers were paid that amount. Then a comptroller came in who held that it had never been decided up to that time that the four years at West Point should count. Subsequently the Supreme Court of the United States held that it should count. Then they went on and paid all the officers, except a certain few who had filed their cases with the comptroller, who acted adversely on them. Then the Court of Claims said, that being an adverse decision of the comptroller, it had been decided already; it was not an open question. In other words, it allowed the great bulk of the Army officers to get the longevity pay, and they have been paid, and this covers only a very few, who happened to fall within this comptroller's period of service.

Mr. SMOOT. Does the Senator believe we ought to allow an attorney's fee of 20 per cent in such cases?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I think that is a smaller attorney's fee than is usually allowed. The purpose of putting that in the bill was to limit it.

Mr. SMOOT. We do not allow any attorney's fees in pension cases now. In nearly every pension bill we pass we positively refuse to allow them, and every one of the people interested know it. All they have to do is to file their claims and they will get their money.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I think the original bill did not contain that provision.

Mr. SMOOT. Let us strike out "20" and insert "10."

Mr. UNDERWOOD. These claims have been handled by lawyers here for a good many years, and 20 per cent would not be an unreasonable compensation to them. I would have no objection to striking it out entirely except that the House wanted to limit the fee, subject to the contract.

Mr. SMOOT. This is a Senate bill.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I know; but in introducing the bill I followed what the House had determined. I think it is entirely agreeable to the claimants. I have heard no opposition at all from the claimants.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. KENYON. I should like to ask the Senator from Alabama if it is going to bring forth any discussion?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. No; if it does I shall withdraw it.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Court of Claims shall certify to the proper accounting officers of the Treasury the findings of fact heretofore made for claimants in claims of officers of the United States Army for longevity pay under the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States in United States against Morton (vol. 112, U. S. Repts., p. 1), and United States against Watson (vol. 130, U. S. Repts., p. 80), and of the Court of Claims in Stewart against United States (vol. 34, Ct. of Cls. Repts., p. 553).

And that the accounting officers of the Treasury shall proceed to settle the claims so certified and all other claims for longevity pay and allowances on account of services of officers in the Regular Army arising under section 15 of an act approved July 5, 1838, entitled "An act to increase the present Military Establishment of the United States, and for other purposes," and subsequent acts affecting longevity pay and allowances, in accordance with the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States in all cases in which heretofore, namely, between 1890 and 1908, such claims were disallowed by any accounting officer of the Treasury; and no decision of the comptroller heretofore made against a claimant under said section 15 shall prevent a settlement under the terms of this act of any such disallowed claim. Every such claim shall be payable to the claimant or to his widow or to his legal representative: Provided, That no claim hereunder shall be allowed if made by any person who is an assignee of such claim, nor to a legal representative without proof of the existence of blood relations to whom the fund would be distributed: Provided further, That it shall be unlawful for any agent or attorney, firm of attorneys, or any person engaged heretofore or hereafter in preparing, presenting, or prosecuting any claim under this act to charge or receive more than 20 per centum of any amount appropriated in satisfaction of the claim.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMERICANIZATION OF ALIENS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which is Senate bill 3315.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3315) to promote Americanization by providing for cooperation with the several States in the education of non-English-speaking persons and the assimilation of foreign-born residents, and for other purposes.

Mr. PHIPPS obtained the floor.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Brandegee	Hale	McNary	Smoot
Calder	Harding	Moses	Stanley
Capper	Harris	New	Sterling
Chamberlain	Harrison	Norris	Thomas
Colt	Henderson	Nugent	Townsend
Curtis	Hitchcock	Overman	Trammell
Dial	Jones, N. Mex.	Page	Underwood
Edge	Jones, Wash.	Phelan	Walsh, Mass.
Elkins	Kendrick	Phipps	Walsh, Mont.
Fernald	Kenyon	Robinson
France	King	Sheppard
Gronna	McKellar	Smith, Md.

Mr. MOSES. I wish to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. KEYES] from the Senate and the city on account of illness in his family. I ask that the announcement may stand for the day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-five Senators having answered to their names, there is not a quorum present. The Secretary will call the names of the absentees.

The Reading Clerk called the names of the absent Senators, and Mr. SUTHERLAND answered to his name when called.

Mr. BECKHAM, Mr. BALL, and Mr. SHIELDS entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-nine Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present.

Mr. PHIPPS. Mr. President, I desire to submit a few remarks upon the bill now under consideration by the Senate. I shall occupy the time of the Senate for only a short period.

The present population of continental United States includes a large percentage of foreign-born people whose native tongue is other than the English language, and it also comprises many native-born citizens whose household language is other than English, such as numbers of residents of the Southwestern States who use the Spanish language and those of New England and the Canadian border who employ the French language. In fact, some of the schools in these sections of our country teach foreign languages instead of our officially recognized language, the English, now perhaps modified by local usage to the extent that it may properly be termed American.

In addition to these residents who do not understand our American language, there are great numbers of others who are illiterate in that they are unable to read or write any language. The question of education even to the primary extent that will enable these two classes of our resident peoples to understand, read, and write in our language is to-day a difficult problem demanding serious consideration and a definite solution.

The United States has frequently been called a melting pot because it has welcomed newcomers from all of the countries of the earth and has been eminently successful in assimilating these additions to its population, making them useful citizens and real Americans.

Promptly after we were forced to declare war on Germany in April of 1917 large numbers of foreign-born young men volunteered for service in our Army and Navy, many of them thereby taking a short cut to full-fledged citizenship, and their records during the war proved them to be loyal beyond question to the country of their adoption. It was not until the draft was resorted to, however, and careful records of birth and education were prepared that we became aware of the large percentage of men who were to serve this country in the war and yet were unable to read and write, or, in many cases, even speak its language.

Not all of these illiterates were of foreign birth, and those who were born in this country, excepting perhaps descendants of French, Mexicans, and Indians, were at least able to understand and to speak English. Many of foreign parentage understood and spoke a little English, but barely enough to carry out their officers' orders, while others had to be taught before they could execute even the simplest command. The percentage of illiterates in the Army during the war has been carefully figured out by The Adjutant General, whose records show that 24.9 per cent were either totally or relatively illiterate, the test being whether the soldier could read a newspaper or write a simple letter. Statistics compiled by the Department of the Interior prove conclusively that there are over 8,500,000 people in this country over 10 years of age who can neither read, write, nor speak our language.

One of our present problems, therefore, which should properly be termed a duty, is to make suitable provisions for the education of the large number of adults in this country who are unable to read, write, or speak English. Undoubtedly this duty rests primarily upon the individual States, which are supposed to provide the necessary facilities for the education of all of their inhabitants, but it is conceded that few of the States have as yet arranged for the education of grown men and women, and it will not prove an easy task to meet the demands of the situation disclosed by the records mentioned above.

It is true that our common-school system of instruction universally in use throughout the States has accomplished wonderful results in the education of the masses, but even where enforced attendance for children under 16 years of age has been the rule it is apparent that something must be added to reach those illiterates and persons of foreign speech over that age, who constitute so large a percentage of our population.

Several of the States are providing some special instruction for these two classes, and these efforts are being supplemented by private schooling furnished by a few large employers of labor, but the work is too vast to be properly cared for through sporadic action and must be undertaken in a systematic manner to reach all in need of such education.

It seems apparent to me that a comprehensive scheme or plan that will accomplish the desired results may properly be undertaken by the Federal Government, and that the bill now under consideration affords the proper and necessary basis upon which to found a movement that will return the investment many times over and prove of lasting benefit to the entire country.

No doubt critics will raise a cry of paternalism. Can they successfully contend that the Federal supervision and expenditure proposed at this time is either unwise, unjustifiable, or will prove unprofitable to the General Government?

True, these residents to whom we aim to give primary education are citizens of the different States, but they are primarily citizens of the United States and as such there was no hesitancy on the part of the Federal Government in calling for their services when it became necessary to defend the rights of our country against foreign aggression in 1917.

Were we to leave this problem of Americanization to the several States for solution it would no doubt eventually be solved, although the greater part of the benefit to be derived by the people, the States, and the Nation would be lost through the lapse of time necessary to accomplish by separate effort what may be more quickly and better done through concerted action.

Without for one moment intending to detract from the credit due the rank and file of our Army and Navy during the recent conflict, I venture the assertion that the wonderful, world-astounding action of our forces would have been much easier of accomplishment had every soldier and sailor who joined our forces been able at the time he entered the service to understand every military order given him, either in verbal or written English, and to make report in writing to his superior officer. A family connection of mine, who went abroad as captain in command of an Infantry company, informed me that three months before sailing his troop included men who spoke 15 different languages, that he was compelled to employ 8 interpreters among them, and even with this assistance was unable to make his orders understood until these foreign-speaking people had acquired a small vocabulary of English words.

The remarkable disclosures of the selective draft as to the percentage of illiterates and those unable to speak or understand the English language have already been referred to by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] in his able address introducing this bill, and I shall not take up the time of the Senate by repeating those statistics.

The business aspect of the proposed investment in education appeals to me as a feature well worth the consideration of this body.

Surely a citizen who has had elementary instruction in our language is of greater value to his country than one who has not. It is admittedly true that even a knowledge of the rudiments of education increases the earning power of any man or woman.

Of course, it is not intended to educate those who come to our country merely as visitors or in temporary employment as representatives of foreign business houses, and these temporary residents can easily be excluded from the operations of this act through the rules which will be adopted by the different States for the carrying out of their plans.

No population can become homogeneous unless and until its people speak the same language, and the attainment of such a condition in our country will be well worth whatever it may cost.

We have at the present time serious questions of bolshevism and I. W. W.ism to deal with, and it is generally conceded that the obnoxious and dangerous teachings of these sects have been spread over different sections of our Nation, principally through the proselyting of the ignorant and the foreign-speaking people who are unable to understand our language.

The education of illiterates and teaching our tongue to those who know only other languages will prove most effectual in putting a stop to the spread of these dangerous doctrines, and such form of education is the most essential step toward Americanization.

Having acquired the ability to read simple English, the thirst for knowledge has been instilled in the minds of the student, and the natural effect will be the reading of periodicals and books which will occupy the time and develop the latent abilities of the new American.

It has seemed to your committee that the Federal Government should take the initiative in this movement; that through its proper bureau it should systematize the plan of action and arrange for coordination and cooperation by the States; that it should be willing to appropriate one dollar for each dollar expended by the States in helping to carry on this important work.

It may be suggested by some that these foreign-speaking people and illiterates should be compelled to pay the cost of their own education, and there may be some merit in this contention.

To illustrate this thought I present a letter received by me under date of November 25, 1919, from one of my correspondents, Mr. Ralph W. Smith, of Denver, Colo., which I desire to have included in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letter referred to is as follows:

NATIONAL SURETY CO.,
Denver, Colo., November 25, 1919.

Hon. LAWRENCE C. PHIPPS,
Senate Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. PHIPPS: In a summary of legislative matters that will come before the session of Congress that begins December 1, according to press dispatches, are, first, the immigration law, and, second, the I. W. W. red law, among others.

In this morning's paper it is stated that the theory of educating immigrants that come into this country is by a combination of funds, part to be furnished by the Federal Government, part by the State government, and part by public-spirited citizens. That is contrary to my idea of what it should be. My idea is that the immigrant that comes into this country should deposit with the Government an amount sufficient to educate him in our language somewhat and toward our ideals, and that, at the end of two years, if he has not taken the education, he should then be deported from this country. We are educating at our expense our own citizens, and it is my opinion that the aliens and foreign citizens should be educated at their expense if they expect to come into this country and get all of the benefits that they get here which they do not get in their homeland. I can not see how this could be a hardship upon them.

If that were done it would also keep out of the country all of this riffraff stuff that is undesirable, and it would not keep out the industrious, saving man or woman who has acquired habits of thrift before coming over here.

Therefore it is my opinion that, first, he should certainly be required to become educated to our ideals and language, but I think it should also be done at his expense.

I understand that there are 27 foreign-language newspapers in one coal-mining strike center and 54 in another eastern city in the steel-strike district being circulated among our foreign-language-speaking aliens. These papers are published in various parts of the country but are being circulated in these districts. In my opinion a law should be passed absolutely forbidding the publishing of any newspapers or periodicals in anything excepting the American language. For a period of two years, say, it might be permitted to print one column in English and the same data and matter in the foreign language, thus permitting of the education of the reader to transpose in his own mind his foreign-language matter in the American print. However, I believe that the time has come when these foreign-language publications should cease, because I have made an examination of several of them and most of them are absolutely disloyal, and they are preaching powerful propaganda, the object of which is the overthrow of our Government.

Trusting that these suggestions may be in order,

Sincerely, yours,

RALPH W. SMITH.

Mr. PHIPPS. It has been shown through the statistics presented by the Senator from Iowa that the leading industries of our country must rely upon illiterate or foreign-speaking employees for over one-half of their working forces, and it is further true that our farming industry is largely manned by the same class of labor. In fact, all industries of these United States now depend upon illiterates and foreign-speaking workmen to a very large extent, and the ordinary or so-called common labor is generally furnished by these classes.

Owing to the cessation of immigration during and since the war, our industries are short of labor to-day and will continue to suffer from shortage of labor until the bars have been again let down, as there is no other source from which a sufficient supply of labor may be drawn.

Our task to-day is to assimilate and Americanize these elements of our present population, who will as a rule make desirable citizens, and we should also prepare for the influx of newcomers who will invade our shores so soon as the opportunity is afforded them.

Shall we say to those desirables who will come to us later or to those who are now resident among us, "You must be educated, must learn to speak, read, and write as Americans, for which you must pay," or shall we say, "The United States welcomes you, desires your allegiance, and to that end, in connection with the State in which you may reside, gives you opportunity for elementary education and a knowledge of the American language in order that you may become true citizens of this country"?

In advocacy of the latter proposition it may be said we should place no unnecessary obstacles in the way of labor needed for the development of our country's natural resources. Many desirable immigrants will come to us as quickly as they are in position to spend the money necessary to get them to America, and an education tax would delay their arrival or prevent their coming.

The bulk of taxation, both State and National, is derived from real estate and other tangible property, or from operations of business; and as these interests are the ones which will benefit most through the operations of the proposed measure it would seem wise to rely upon general taxation for the proposed education rather than to assess its cost upon those who will receive the instruction themselves.

The provisions of the bill have had much consideration at the hands of those who have been active in its advancement. It may require some slight amendment; and I desire at this time to call the attention of the Senator having it in charge to the language on page 2, line 19, where the word "board" occurs, as I think this should be changed to read "bureau of education."

Mr. KENYON. It should be.

Mr. PHIPPS. I also call attention to section 4, providing for the allotment of funds, where it appears that the States are cared for properly, but the Territories and possessions are omitted from the allotment of money.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, does the Senator recall the discussion in the committee on that point? That was, as I remember it, the intention.

Mr. PHIPPS. I was unable to get a clear understanding in reviewing the bill, and for that reason I desired to call attention to that clause of the bill as written, which does not appear to conform to the purpose of the measure as set forth in section 1.

Mr. KENYON. The trouble is, there is an incongruity between section 1 and the part of section 4 to which the Senator refers. Section 1 provides for the Territories and possessions of the United States, except the Philippine Islands. If the Senator will revert back in his mind to the discussion that evening, he will remember that we had the question of Porto Rico up, and I was rather insistent that Porto Rico go in. Finally it was determined that these possessions should be all left out, because it would have been almost impossible to get the proper ratio between the illiteracy in those Territories and the general illiteracy of the Nation. The major part of the funds will be absorbed in Porto Rico and the Philippine Islands. Now, my own judgment is that they ought to be put in in some way, but the committee's judgment was against them. I do not remember the position the Senator from Colorado took upon that question, but the words in section 1 as to Territories and possessions and the Philippine Islands should be stricken out.

Mr. PHIPPS. That would be the better way to amend the bill, in my opinion. I would favor an amendment to that end.

Mr. KENYON. I do not want to interrupt the Senator——

Mr. PHIPPS. It will not disturb me at all.

Mr. KENYON. But I feel very strongly that we should do more than we are doing for Porto Rico. We are doing a great deal for the Philippine Islands in the way of education, but we are not doing very much for Porto Rico, and it is a sort of a hobby of mine that we owe to the people of Porto Rico a greater duty than we are performing. The difficulty, however, is in picking out different ones of these possessions and putting them in here without putting them all in; so we concluded, as I remember, to leave them out.

Mr. PHIPPS. Yes; I remember the discussion particularly with reference to the Philippine Islands, which, I was informed, were already provided for in a different manner.

Mr. KENYON. They are.

Mr. PHIPPS. Would it not be wise to take up the consideration of provision for Porto Rico as a separate measure, the conditions being entirely dissimilar to those obtaining in the United States?

Mr. KENYON. I will say that I have had letters from Porto Rico, one from the superintendent of education there, earnestly urging that they be put in this bill; but I found that the committee was pretty strongly against doing that and in favor of handling Porto Rico as a separate proposition, because of the difference in conditions.

Mr. PHIPPS. Mr. President, the amount of the appropriations asked for and to be used over a period of four years, as the experimental limit of operations, is not large considering the magnitude and importance of the work to be performed, and particularly in view of the fact that every dollar paid out to the States will draw at least an equal appropriation from the States for educational purposes, with every reason to expect that in the majority of cases the States will contribute sums largely in excess of the national appropriation coming to them.

If our country is to continue to progress at the highest possible rate of development, it can only do so through the unity of purpose of a homogeneous people. To attain this end Americans must speak the same language, and that language can only be the modified English, which is really American.

[Mr. KING addressed the Senate. After having spoken, with interruptions, for over two hours, he concluded his remarks for the day.]

DISTRICT FIRE DEPARTMENT.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Iowa permit me to ask unanimous consent to submit a conference report on the bill for the relief of the District fire department? And I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

Mr. KENYON. I do not want to disturb that arrangement, but I simply ask, as a parliamentary inquiry, if in the middle of a speech there can be unanimous consent to consider a bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This is simply the report of a conference committee. The question whether the Senate will proceed with the report will come up afterwards.

Mr. KENYON. I thought the Senator asked unanimous consent to consider the report.

Mr. DIAL. I object, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be received, for it is a privileged report.

Mr. CALDER submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10137) to amend an act entitled "An act to classify the officers and members of the fire department of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes," approved June 20, 1906, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows: That the Senate recede from its amendment and accept the said House bill with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the amendment of the Senate insert the following:

"That sections 2, 3, and 4 of an act entitled 'An act to classify the officers and members of the fire department of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes,' approved June 20, 1906, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"'SEC. 2. That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia shall appoint, assign to such duty or duties as they may prescribe, promote, reduce, fine, suspend, with or without pay, and remove all officers and members of the fire department of the District of Columbia, according to such rules and regulations as said commissioners, in their exclusive jurisdiction and judgment (except as herein otherwise provided), may from time to time make, alter, or amend: Provided, That the rules and regulations of the fire department heretofore promulgated are hereby ratified (except as herein otherwise provided) and shall remain in force until changed by said commissioners: Provided further, That all officers, members, and civilian employees of such department, except the chief engineer and deputy chief engineers, shall hereafter be appointed and promoted in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate and improve the civil service of the United States," approved January 16, 1883, as amended, and the rules and regulations made in pursuance thereof, in the same manner as members of the classified civil service of the United States, except as herein otherwise provided: Provided further, That the chief engineer of the fire department shall hereafter be selected from among the deputy chief engineers, the battalion chief engineers, the fire marshal and the superintendent of machinery; the deputy chief engineers shall hereafter be selected from among the battalion chief engineers, the fire marshal and the superintendent of machinery: Provided further, That all original appointments of privates shall be made to class 1; privates who have served one year in class 1 shall, if found efficient, be transferred to class 2, and privates who have served two years in class 2 shall, if found efficient, be transferred to class 3. Such transfers shall not be subject to the provisions of such act of January 16, 1883, as amended, and the rules and regulations made in pursuance thereof. Whenever vacancies occur in classes 2 or 3 which can not be filled by such transfers, the commissioners may appoint additional privates in class 1 equal in number to the positions vacant in classes 2 or 3; and any moneys appropriated for the payment of the salaries for such vacant positions shall be available to pay to such additional privates of class 1 the salaries of their grade.

"'SEC. 3. That the fire department of the District of Columbia shall consist of one chief engineer, two deputy chief engineers, all of whom shall have had at least five years of experience in some regularly organized municipal fire department; such number of battalion chief engineers as said commissioners may deem necessary from time to time within the appropriations made by Congress; one fire marshal; such number of deputy fire marshals, inspectors, and clerks as said commissioners may deem necessary from time to time within the appropriations made by Congress; such number of captains, lieutenants, and sergeants as said commissioners may deem necessary from time to time within the appropriations made by Congress; one superintendent of machinery; and such number of assistant superintendents of machinery, pilots, marine engineers, assistant marine engineers, marine firemen, privates of class 3, privates of class 2, privates of class 1, hostlers, and laborers as said commissioners may deem necessary from time to time within the appropriations made by Congress: Provided, That the chief engineer of the fire department of the District of Columbia shall have the right to call for and obtain the services of any veterinary surgeon employed by the District who at the time shall not be engaged in a more emergent veterinary service for the District: Provided further, That the police surgeons of said District are required to attend, without charge, the members of the fire department of said District, and examine all applicants for appointment to, promotion in, and retirement from said fire department: Provided further, That the engineers and assistant engineers in the fire department shall be transferred to the position of privates of class 1, 2 or 3, respectively, depending on whether their length of service on August 1, 1919, was one, two, or three or more years; but such transfers shall not be subject to the act entitled "An act to regulate and improve the civil service of the United States," approved January 16, 1883, as amended, and the rules and regulations made in pursuance thereof, and the authorized number of privates in the various classes is hereby increased to provide for such transfers, and for additional privates equal in number to the vacancies existing in the positions of engineer and assistant engineer at the time this amending act becomes effective.'

"'SEC. 4. That the annual basic salaries of the officers and members of said department shall be as follows: Chief engineer, $4,000; deputy chief engineers, $3,000 each; battalion chief engineers, $2,400 each; fire marshal, $2,400; deputy fire marshal, $2,000; inspectors, $1,660 each; chief clerk, $2,400; clerk (who shall be a stenographer and typist), $1,660; captains, $1,900 each; lieutenants, $1,760 each; sergeants, $1,700 each; superintendent of machinery, $2,500; assistant superintendent of machinery, $2,000; pilots, $1,700 each; marine engineers, $1,700 each; assistant marine engineers, $1,660 each; marine firemen, $1,460 each; privates of class 3, $1,660 each; privates of class 2, $1,560 each; privates of class 1, $1,460 each; hostlers, $1,080 each; laborers, $1,000 each. Every officer and member of the fire department of the District of Columbia at the time this amending act becomes effective shall, in addition to the salary received by him for his period of service between August 1, 1919, and the time this act becomes law, receive for such period the difference between such salary and the salary payable to him under the provisions of this act for a period of equal duration.'

"SEC. 2. Section 5 of such act of June 20, 1906, is hereby amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"'No member of the fire department of the District of Columbia shall be or become a member of any organization, or of an organization affiliated with another organization, which itself or any subordinate, component, or affiliated organization of which holds, claims, or uses the strike to enforce its demands. Upon sufficient proof to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia that any member of the fire department of the District of Columbia has violated the provisions of this section it shall be the duty of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to immediately discharge such member from the service.

"'Any member of the fire department of the District of Columbia who enters into a conspiracy, combination, or agreement with the purpose of substantially interfering with or obstructing the efficient conduct or operation of the fire department of the District of Columbia by a strike or other disturbance shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction shall be punished by a fine of not more than $300 or by imprisonment of not more than six months, or by both.'

"SEC. 3. For the payment of the increases in salaries authorized in this act for the positions provided for in the act entitled 'An act making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes,' approved July 11, 1919, and for the payment of the salaries designated herein to the additional number of men in the various classes of privates authorized in this act, one-half of the amount necessary is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and the other one-half out of the revenues of the District of Columbia, to supplement the amounts appropriated for the salaries of the officers and members of such fire department in such act of July 11, 1919.

"SEC. 4. The Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized to determine and fix the minimum and maximum limits of age within which original appointments to the Metropolitan police and fire departments may be made."

And the House agree to the same.

LAWRENCE Y. SHERMAN,
WILLIAM M. CALDER,
MORRIS SHEPPARD,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

CARL E. MAPES,
N. J. GOULD,
JAMES P. WOODS,
Managers on the part of the House.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of this report. Is there objection?

Mr. DIAL. I object, Mr. President.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, if it is in order, I move that the conference report be considered at this time.

Mr. KING. I decline to yield for that purpose, Mr. President.

Mr. CURTIS. I ask the Senator in charge of the bill how late he wants to stay in session to-night? There are some 1,200 post-office nominations that ought to be acted upon.

Mr. KING. I will be glad to conform my course to the desires of the Senator. I will conclude in about half an hour.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Utah has the floor and the right now to proceed.

Mr. KENYON. Would not the Senator from Utah prefer to conclude in the morning?

Mr. KING. I would prefer that?

Mr. KENYON. It has been suggested that an executive session is necessary.

Mr. CALDER. Will the Senator permit me to ask that the pending bill be laid aside temporarily? I ask unanimous consent that the pending bill be temporarily laid aside.

Mr. KENYON. Before consenting to that I would like to ask the Senator the purpose of his request.

Mr. CALDER. To move the adoption of the conference report.

Mr. KING. I decline to yield for that purpose. I do not desire to have that report taken up this evening.

MEDALS OF HONOR AND DISTINGUISHED-SERVICE CROSS.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 10331) to amend an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919," approved July 9, 1918. This bill passed the House, and was referred to the Military Affairs Committee. It makes some slight change in the matter of conferring medals, a change recommended by the War Department. Under the law as it is now, when a division is serving at the front under a general, he could give a decoration. There are some who served under a colonel at the front for four months.

Mr. KENYON. If it is a measure that will not require discussion, I have no objection to it.

Mr. JONES of Washington. If it leads to discussion, I will withdraw it.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I understand the Senator to state that the bill has been reported out of the committee?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes; by the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH], the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs. It is Calendar No. 311, and is recommended by the War Department. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, and it was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That so much of the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919," approved July 9, 1919, as constitutes the fifth section under the subheading "Medals of honor, distinguished-service crosses, and distinguished-service medals" (40 Stat. L., p. 871), be, and is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"That no more than one medal of honor or one distinguished-service cross or one distinguished-service medal shall be issued to any one person; but for each succeeding deed or act sufficient to justify the award of a medal of honor or a distinguished-service cross or a distinguished-service medal, respectively, the President may award a suitable bar or other suitable device, to be worn as he shall direct. And for each citation of an officer or enlisted man for gallantry in action, published in orders issued from the headquarters of a force commanded by, or which is the appropriate command of, a general officer, not warranting the award of a medal of honor or distinguished-service cross, he shall be permitted to wear, as the President shall direct, a silver star three-sixteenths of an inch in diameter."

SEC. 2. That all laws and parts of laws in conflict herewith are rescinded.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. KENYON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After seven minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 2 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, January 20, 1920, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate January 19, 1920.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, January 19, 1920.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Father of light and life and purity, we seek Thy blessing that it may descend copiously upon us, to fit us for the new duties of the new day—the social, economical, national, and international problems which confront us—that we may solve them to our good and to the good of mankind.

To live and learn is to learn to live and develop all that is purest, noblest, godlike in our souls. Make us firm to resist, strong to overcome, that we may be followers of the Jesus of Nazareth, the world's Great Exemplar. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday last was read and approved.

SURVEYS OF AIRCRAFT.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for one minute.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to address the House for one minute. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Speaker, in the last naval appropriation bill a provision was made for a survey to be made of the Navy Department, the Post Office Department, and the War Department in reference to all aircraft on hand in the various departments so that each committee of the House, the Naval Committee, the Military Committee, and the Post Office Committee in considering their appropriation bills would be able to know what material each department had on hand. This was done with the hope that each department might be able to utilize by exchange the material on hand instead of buying new. These three reports have been made to the Speaker of the House. One, the report of the Navy Department, has been printed. I ask unanimous consent that the report made to the Speaker of the House of the aviation survey of the War Department be also printed.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that the report made to the Speaker of the House on the survey of the War Department aviation material be printed. Is there objection?

Mr. GARNER. Reserving the right to object, under what procedure was the naval report printed?

Mr. HICKS. I can not answer the gentleman. All I know is that I have a copy of the printed report, and am informed that the other reports have not been sent to the printer.

Mr. GARNER. I want to make this parliamentary inquiry: When a report of that character is made, is it not discretionary with the Speaker whether or not he will have it printed? I understand if it comes to the desk the Speaker refers it to a committee with instructions to print, or otherwise, as he may direct. Why was the report as to the Navy printed and the report as to the Army not printed? I do not want to object without knowing what I am doing, but the gentleman from New York does not seem to have sufficient information to justify the House in giving its consent.

Mr. HICKS. The Naval Committee is considering the subject of aviation in conjunction with naval appropriations. We know what the Navy has, because we have the printed survey. We do not know what the Army has, because the report has not been printed. The survey is in the Committee on Military Affairs, I presume, but I have not been able to find out anything about it. I do not want to trespass on the Military Committee, but the Naval Committee is anxious to obtain the information, and obtain it at once.

Mr. GARNER. The Committee on Military Affairs is authorized to have printing done under the rules of the House, and the War Department also has a printing fund.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. If the gentleman will yield, when these reports are made to the House through the Speaker, it was formerly customary to order them printed, but there has recently been an effort to somewhat conserve the use of print paper and money by not printing all of these reports which probably would not be used. In making the references in this case, apparently this report was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs without being ordered printed. Now, Members of the House desire to make use of it in the consideration of the naval appropriation bill.

Mr. GARNER. Has not the Speaker of the House the power to authorize or order the printing of the report as to the survey of the War Department as he did of the Navy Department?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I think not.

Mr. GARNER. Why not?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The Speaker has that authority when the report comes to him.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Because it has passed out of his hands.

Mr. GARNER. The gentleman from Illinois says that the Speaker has not the right and the gentleman from Missouri says he has the right. Which is right and which is wrong?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The former Speaker of the House does not mean to say that the Speaker did not have authority when the report was made?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. When the report comes in he has the right to make the reference, but the gentleman from New York is trying to get the Speaker to do a thing now that he has no authority to do.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The Speaker could not do it now, because it has been referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. GARNER. What about the Post Office Department?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I do not know anything about either of them.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Why not consolidate all of these reports into one?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Probably that would be the result. The Committee on Naval Affairs, in making up its appropriation, desires this information.

Mr. HICKS. We desire to have it printed so that we can use the information. It might save the Government considerable money if we can find out what the Army has, and arrange for a transfer if the Navy can utilize any of the material.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

FIRE DEPARTMENT OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill H. R. 10137.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 10137) to amend an act entitled "An act to classify the officers and members of the fire department of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, approved June 20, 1906, and for other purposes."

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The statement was read.

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10137) to amend an act entitled "An act to classify the officers and members of the fire department of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes," approved June 20, 1906, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment and accept the said House bill with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter proposed by the amendment of the Senate insert the following:

"That sections 2, 3, and 4 of an act entitled 'An act to classify the officers and members of the fire department of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes,' approved June 20, 1906, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"'SEC. 2. That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia shall appoint, assign to such duty or duties as they may prescribe, promote, reduce, fine, suspend, with or without pay, and remove all officers and members of the fire department of the District of Columbia, according to such rules and regulations as said commissioners, in their exclusive jurisdiction and judgment (except as herein otherwise provided), may from time to time make, alter, or amend: Provided, That the rules and regulations of the fire department heretofore promulgated are hereby ratified (except as herein otherwise provided) and shall remain in force until changed by said commissioners: Provided further, That all officers, members, and civilian employees of such department, except the chief engineer and deputy chief engineers, shall hereafter be appointed and promoted in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate and improve the civil service of the United States," approved January 16, 1883, as amended, and the rules and regulations made in pursuance thereof, in the same manner as members of the classified civil service of the United States, except as herein otherwise provided: Provided further, That the chief engineer of the fire department shall hereafter be selected from among the deputy chief engineers, the battalion chief engineers, the fire marshal and the superintendent of machinery; the deputy chief engineers shall hereafter be selected from among the battalion chief engineers, the fire marshal and the superintendent of machinery: Provided further, That all original appointments of privates shall be made to class 1; privates who have served one year in class 1 shall, if found efficient, be transferred to class 2, and privates who have served two years in class 2 shall, if found efficient, be transferred to class 3. Such transfers shall not be subject to the provisions of such act of January 16, 1883, as amended, and the rules and regulations made in pursuance thereof. Whenever vacancies occur in classes 2 or 3 which can not be filled by such transfers, the commissioners may appoint additional privates in class 1 equal in number to the positions vacant in classes 2 or 3; and any moneys appropriated for the payment of the salaries for such vacant positions shall be available to pay to such additional privates of class 1 the salaries of their grade.

"'SEC. 3. That the fire department of the District of Columbia shall consist of one chief engineer, two deputy chief engineers, all of whom shall have had at least five years of experience in some regularly organized municipal fire department; such number of battalion chief engineers as said commissioners may deem necessary from time to time within the appropriations made by Congress; one fire marshal; such number of deputy fire marshals, inspectors, and clerks as said commissioners may deem necessary from time to time within the appropriations made by Congress; such number of captains, lieutenants, and sergeants as said commissioners may deem necessary from time to time within the appropriations made by Congress; one superintendent of machinery; and such number of assistant superintendents of machinery, pilots, marine engineers, assistant marine engineers, marine firemen, privates of class three, privates of class two, privates of class one, hostlers, and laborers as said commissioners may deem necessary from time to time within the appropriations made by Congress: Provided, That the chief engineer of the fire department of the District of Columbia shall have the right to call for and obtain the services of any veterinary surgeon employed by the District who at the time shall not be engaged in a more emergent veterinary service for the District: Provided further, That the police surgeons of said District are required to attend, without charge, the members of the fire department of said District, and examine all applicants for appointment to, promotion in, and retirement from said fire department: Provided further, That the engineers and assistant engineers in the fire department shall be transferred to the position of privates of class 1, 2 or 3, respectively, depending on whether their length of service on August 1, 1919, was one, two, or three or more years; but such transfers shall not be subject to the act entitled "An act to regulate and improve the civil service of the United States," approved January 16, 1883, as amended, and the rules and regulations made in pursuance thereof, and the authorized number of privates in the various classes is hereby increased to provide for such transfers, and for additional privates equal in number to the vacancies existing in the positions of engineer and assistant engineer at the time this amending act becomes effective.

"'SEC. 4. That the annual basic salaries of the officers and members of said department shall be as follows: Chief engineer, $4,000; deputy chief engineers, $3,000 each; battalion chief engineers, $2,400 each; fire marshal, $2,400; deputy fire marshal, $2,000; inspectors, $1,600 each; chief clerk, $2,400; clerk (who shall be a stenographer and typist), $1,660; captains, $1,900 each; lieutenants, $1,760 each; sergeants, $1,700 each; superintendent of machinery, $2,500; assistant superintendent of machinery, $2,000; pilots, $1,700 each; marine engineers, $1,700 each; assistant marine engineers, $1,660 each; marine firemen, $1,460 each; privates of class 3, $1,660 each; privates of class 2, $1,560 each; privates of class 1, $1,460 each; hostlers, $1,080 each; laborers, $1,000 each. Every officer and member of the fire department of the District of Columbia at the time this amending act becomes effective shall, in addition to the salary received by him for his period of service between August 1, 1919, and the time this act becomes law, receive for such period the difference between such salary and the salary payable to him under the provisions of this act for a period of equal duration.'

"SEC. 2. Section 5 of such act of June 20, 1906, is hereby amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"No member of the fire department of the District of Columbia shall be or become a member of any organization, or of an organization affiliated with another organization, which itself or any subordinate, component, or affiliated organization of which holds, claims, or uses the strike to enforce its demands. Upon sufficient proof to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia that any member of the fire department of the District of Columbia has violated the provisions of this section, it shall be the duty of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to immediately discharge such member from the service.

"Any member of the fire department of the District of Columbia who enters into a conspiracy, combination, or agreement with the purpose of substantially interfering with or obstructing the efficient conduct or operation of the fire department of the District of Columbia by a strike or other disturbance shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction shall be punished by a fine of not more than $300 or by imprisonment of not more than six months or by both.

"SEC. 3. For the payment of the increased salaries authorized in this act for the positions provided for in the act entitled 'An act making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes,' approved July 11, 1919, and for the payment of the salaries designated herein to the additional number of men in the various classes of privates authorized in this act, one-half of the amount necessary is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and the other one-half out of the revenues of the District of Columbia, to supplement the amounts appropriated for the salaries of the officers and members of such fire department in such act of July 11, 1919.

"SEC. 4. The Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized to determine and fix the minimum and maximum limits of age within which original appointments to the Metropolitan police and fire departments may be made."

And the House agree to the same.

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House of Representatives at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to H. R. 10137, entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to classify the officers and members of the fire department of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes,' approved June 20, 1906, and for other purposes," submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conference committee and submitted in the accompanying conference report as to the amendment of the Senate, namely:

The Senate amendment struck out all after the enacting clause of the House bill and inserted a substitute therefor. The Senate recedes from its amendment and agrees to the House bill with an amendment as reported by the committee of conference.

The conferees report the bill substantially as it passed the House of Representatives, with the addition of the provision passed by the Senate placing the officers, members, and civilian employees of the fire department, except the chief engineer and the deputy chief engineers, under the civil service, and a proviso requiring that the chief engineer shall be selected from among the deputy chief engineers and the fire marshal and the superintendent of machinery, and that the deputy chief engineers shall be selected from among the battalion chief engineers, the fire marshal, and superintendent of machinery. The report also adopts the antistrike provision passed by the Senate in place of the one passed by the House of Representatives. It is identical in language with the antistrike provision in the police act, which was recently passed by Congress, and is adopted in order to make the two acts uniform in that respect.

The report of the conferees also authorizes the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to fix the minimum and maximum age limits within which original appointments to the police and fire departments may be made.

Section 3 of the report is a reenactment of section 3 of the original act, except that it omits the provision as to engineers and assistant engineers, as provided in the House bill, and adds marine firemen, privates of class 3, hostlers, and laborers, in order to conform to the provisions of the last District of Columbia appropriation act.

CARL E. MAPES,
N. J. GOULD,
JAS. P. WOODS,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the conference report be adopted.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAPES. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Do I understand that as the result of the conference the increases are somewhat less than provided for in the original bill as it passed the House?

Mr. MAPES. The increases remain the same as they were in the House bill—as the bill passed the House.

Mr. WALSH. So that the Senate receded from amendments reducing the amounts?

Mr. MAPES. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. And, with reference to the antistrike provision, it is identical with the one in the policemen's salary-increase law?

Mr. MAPES. Yes. The conferees accepted the Senate amendments putting on the civil-service provision and the antistrike provision, as agreed to in the police act.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAPES. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. I notice the statement indicated that there was a minimum age limit fixed for entrance into the service. What is that limit?

Mr. MAPES. The report authorizes the commissioners to fix a minimum and maximum age limit. The ages are not fixed in the bill.

Mr. MADDEN. And at what do they fix that?

Mr. MAPES. I really do not know what they have in contemplation.

Mr. MADDEN. It is giving them a good deal of latitude, is it not?

Mr. MAPES. It is giving them some latitude; but under the civil-service regulations and the law certain preferences are made which require the appointment of men without reference to their age.

Mr. MADDEN. I think that is not so. I think the age limit is fixed at 35 for entrance into the classified service.

Mr. MAPES. But we have given certain preferences to ex-service men which takes off the age limit; and under the operation of the police act they were afraid that men of 50 or more would get in and come under the retirement-fund provision and use up that fund.

Mr. MADDEN. Is there not something in the retirement act that requires a man to have served a certain number of years before he can take the benefit of it?

Mr. MAPES. I think not, if he is disabled.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAPES. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Might it not be productive of good to call to the attention of our conferees on the Esch railroad bill the fact that our conferees on the police measure as finally agreed upon retained the salutary antistrike provision, in the interest of all of the people of the country, and that they are still safe, sound, and well, and are getting along finely? Also that our conferees on the firemen's bill have finally agreed to retain the salutary antistrike provision likewise in that measure, in the interest of all the people of the country, and these conferees are still safe and well and sound and enjoying good health, and no revolution has occurred in the country as yet. It might be helpful to the conferees on the railroad bill to understand those facts.

Mr. MAPES. Of course, the gentleman from Texas has called attention to it, although there is a distinction between men in private employment and men in a fire or police department.

Mr. BLANTON. The railroad employees are engaged in a quasi-public service, the same as policemen and firemen in the District of Columbia.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAPES. Yes.

Mr. SISSON. The conference report gives the commissioners the right to fix the increase in the compensation?

Mr. MAPES. Oh, no; the conference report fixes the compensation.

Mr. SISSON. To what is the discretion of the commissioners limited?

Mr. MAPES. It is limited to fixing the age limit for appointment to the fire and police departments.

Mr. MADDEN. Can they oscillate back and forth from one age to another while they exercise this discretion, or must they fix a standard?

Mr. MAPES. They would have to fix a standard under the rules.

Mr. MADDEN. They would not have to under the provisions of the bill. They are given complete jurisdiction to go to one age in the case of one man and to fix another age in the case of another man, as I understand it. I think that is bad legislation. If we are going to have a rule it ought to be a fixed rule, which would be a standard, rigidly fixed and adhered to, and it should apply to all. I do not think that the provision of the law as indicated by the report compels them to do that.

Mr. MAPES. I think what the gentleman from Illinois says is largely true, but that is the practice now, as I understand it. It is fixed in the regulations.

Mr. MADDEN. If we make a pretense at legislating upon a subject upon which no legislation existed heretofore we really ought to legislate; but, as a matter of fact, this does not legislate. This only pretends to do it, and it leaves the commissioners with the same power they have always had to play favorites or to discriminate, whichever they please to do.

Mr. MAPES. I do not think I have made myself clear to the gentleman from Illinois or to the House. In the passage of the police act, for the first time a provision was inserted putting the department under the civil-service rules and regulations. When that was done certain provisions of law giving preference to ex-service men applied and abolished the age limits heretofore set by the commissioners in that respect, so that there was no limit placed upon the entrance of some of these men. It is to cover that particular situation that this provision is inserted in the report.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a letter from the Secretary of War in reply to parts of the speech of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GALLIVAN] made on Tuesday last.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a letter from the Secretary of War in reply to the speech of the gentleman from Massachusetts. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The letter referred to is as follows:

JANUARY 15, 1920.

Hon. JAMES A. GALLIVAN,
House of Representatives.

SIR: In your remarks, as reported in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for Tuesday, January 13, 1920, page 1498, you say:

"We had four different Chiefs of Staff here in Washington during the period we were at war with Germany. Every one who knows anything at all about the work of the War Department knows that the predecessors of the present high priest of Prussianism, Gen. Peyton C. March, were considered unequal to the task. Through one pretense or another they were removed."

In your subsequent discussion of this statement you continued the assertion that Gen. Hugh L. Scott, Gen. Tasker H. Bliss, and Gen. John Biddle were removed from the office of Chief of Staff because of insufficiency to the demands of that office.

These distinguished officers have no opportunity to reply to the statement made by you, which has attained a certain solemnity by being made a part of the permanent RECORD of the proceedings of the House of Representatives. It is due them, however, that I should state the facts.

Gen. Hugh L. Scott was born on the 22d day of September, 1853; he therefore retired, by operation of law, on the 22d day of September, 1917. He entered the Army as a cadet on the 1st of July, 1871, serving his country for 46 years, most of which service was on the plains, defending our frontier settlements against the Indians. No man in the history of America is more immediately responsible for the pacification of the Indian tribes, and it is to the credit of our country that he is looked upon by white men as the greatest safeguard of our civilization against Indian aggression, and by Indians as the squarest white man who ever dealt with them on behalf of the United States. His later service in the Philippine Islands was distinguished by gallantry and success; his service as Chief of Staff, which office he was occupying when I became Secretary of War, was a splendid illustration of the weight of a robust personality and a strong and upright character in the control of our Military Establishment. His service at our entrance into the war was conspicuous. On his retirement he was recalled into the active service, placed in command at Camp Dix, N. J., and there trained a division and administered the affairs of that great camp with the same administrative skill and effectiveness that had characterized his entire life as a soldier.

Gen. Scott was succeeded as Chief of Staff by Gen. Tasker H. Bliss, who was born on the 31st day of December, 1853, and therefore retired by operation of law on the 31st of December, 1917. While Acting Chief of Staff Gen. Bliss was designated to accompany our first mission abroad. He there made so profound an impression upon the military and civil authorities in the war councils of Europe that on his retirement he was designated permanent military representative of the United States at Versailles in association with the supreme war council, and later, because of his demonstrated wisdom and knowledge of the affairs of the world, he was appointed by the President a member of the American commission to negotiate peace. Gen. Bliss entered the Military Academy at West Point in September, 1871. His career as an active officer of the Army therefore covered a period of 46 years, a career distinguished by scholarship, breadth of view, and vision. He wrote the original order under which, in the administration of Secretary Root, the War College was organized; he has performed administrative tasks in Cuba and elsewhere in the difficult days of American control of alien peoples always with signal success; and both in the Philippines and at home has commanded troops with marked ability. There are perhaps few careers among living American soldiers which can be compared with that of Gen. Bliss, either in the strength and variety of gifts in the man or the opportunities for important service to the country.

On the 10th of September, 1917, in a letter to Gen. Pershing, I wrote as follows:

"There is a fourth subject upon which I want to say a confidential word. Gen. Scott will retire on the 22d of this month. He will, of course, be called back into the active service and put in charge of one of our training camps, where his fine character and soldierly experience will be an inspiring example to the young men under him. Gen. Bliss, who has three times acted as Chief of Staff, will succeed Gen. Scott for the three months which intervene until his own retirement, but when Gen. Bliss retires in December it will be necessary to select a Chief of Staff, and my strong desire is to have a young man who has had some months of experience in France. My mind has rather run in the direction of Gen. March, who by the middle of November will have had an excellent opportunity to become familiar with the whole situation abroad, and whose experience in the War Department has been such that there would be no loss of time on his part in understanding the intricacies of bureau operation here. In addition to that he is a man of positive and decided character. I realize, of course, that bringing Gen. March away might be a serious loss to you, and I have by no means decided upon him for the place, but I would like to have your judgment on this question. It seems to me that cooperation in Washington is of an importance impossible to overestimate, and that we can assure it best by having a young, aggressive man, who will realize from actual observation and participation your difficulties and be able to understand from the slightest hint just what it is necessary for us to do to be of the maximum support to you."

The plan thus outlined was agreed to by Gen. Pershing. Gen. March was given immediate and complete opportunity to study the entire situation in France, and Gen. Biddle, who had been Assistant Chief of Staff during Gen. Bliss's incumbency, understood perfectly that he would act as Chief of Staff only until Gen. March had completed his studies of the European situation and could return here with the advantage of that experience. When Gen. March did return Gen. Biddle was sent to France and by Gen. Pershing sent to London, where he was in command of all American military activities in England, a post of great difficulty and requiring administrative ability, energy, and tact. Gen. Biddle performed his task in England with the greatest possible success; the dispatch of many hundred thousand American soldiers through England was accomplished under his direction smoothly; the relations between American soldiers and English soldiers and civilians were maintained in a cordial way; and the military business of the War Department with the war office in London was dispatched promptly and intelligently.

It thus appears that the three officers to whom you referred each performed his duty acceptably and that their separation from the office of the Chief of Staff in no case involved the slightest reflection upon them, but that in fact all three are officers whose services entitle them to grateful remembrance by their fellow citizens.

I do not refer in this letter to the other matter discussed in your speech for the reason that the House of Representatives, by adopting the resolution dealing with the award of distinguished-service medals, has called for a presentation of that subject in all of its aspects to the consideration of the full House.

I am taking the liberty of making this letter public as the only means in my power of doing justice to the reputations of three officers who must otherwise sit silent under the imputations contained in your speech.

Very truly, yours,

NEWTON D. BAKER,
Secretary of War.

REPRINT OF WATER-POWER BILL.

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the reprint of the bill H. R. 3184, the water-power bill, with the Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent for the reprint of the water-power bill, with the Senate amendments. Is there objection?

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, when will the reprint be had—immediately?

Mr. ESCH. Yes.

Mr. GARD. And it will be available when?

Mr. ESCH. It may be available to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

CALENDAR FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT.

The SPEAKER. Bills on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent are in order to-day, and the Clerk will call the calendar.

BRIDGE ACROSS SAVANNAH RIVER, GA.

The first business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 10922) to grant the consent of Congress to the Alfords Bridge Co. to construct a bridge across the Savannah River.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object.

Mr. BRAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

RECLAMATION OF ARID LANDS IN CALIFORNIA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 8864) to encourage the reclamation of certain arid lands in the State of California, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of this bill?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman withhold his objection for a couple of minutes?

Mr. WALSH. I reserve the objection.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, this bill is practically the same bill that passed the House a couple of months ago and passed the Senate and is now a law. The Secretary of the Interior made a favorable report on the bill. A similar bill, with language practically the same, passed the House by unanimous consent, relating to Nevada. The Secretary of the Interior reported this legislation to the Committee on Public Lands. It was then transferred to the Committee on Irrigation, and it relates to California. The committee amended the bill in one particular at the request of the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. SMITH] to include Idaho. The bill is fully and fairly and safely guarded in every particular, and I want to call the attention of the House to the fact that the bill as applied to Nevada works well.

Mr. WALSH. It passed only last October.

Mr. RAKER. I know; but there have been many filings.

Mr. WALSH. Does the gentleman mean to say they have done any work under the Nevada law?

Mr. RAKER. They have commenced and many filings have been made.

Mr. WALSH. Does the gentleman pretend that because the filings work well the law is working well?

Mr. RAKER. It will, unquestionably, in the opinion of all of us who have knowledge of that country. We did not offer to amend the Senate bill—because that passed—in order to get through, and we thought we would put this bill through for California.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MADDEN. I object.

Mr. RAKER. I ask, Mr. Speaker, that I may have five minutes in which to proceed, and I ask that the gentleman withhold his objection, which will defeat this meritorious legislation.

Mr. MADDEN. I object.

BRIDGE ACROSS NIAGARA RIVER.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 3427) to establish a commission to report to Congress on the practicability, feasibility, and place, and to devise plans for the construction of a public bridge over the Niagara River from some point in the city of Buffalo, N. Y., to some point in the Dominion of Canada, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I ask unanimous consent that the bill just passed may remain on the calendar and go to the foot thereof.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that the previous bill, to which objection was made, may go to the foot of the calendar. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. Is there objection to the consideration of this bill H. R. 3427?

Mr. CRAMTON and Mr. GARD reserved the right to object.

Mr. MADDEN. I object, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

EASTERN DISTRICT OF KENTUCKY.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 2476) to amend the act establishing the eastern district of Kentucky.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I just wonder if it is the purpose of the Members of the House to object to all these bills where a similar bill applying to a particular State has already been passed?

Mr. MADDEN. I withdraw my objection to the bill S. 3427.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks we can return to that. At present there is one unanimous consent bill pending. The Chair will return to that when this is disposed of. Is there objection to the consideration of this bill?

Mr. RAKER. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I am just making a few feeble remarks regarding the attitude of the House upon the Calendar for Unanimous Consent, and I wondered whether or not it was the purpose of the House and the intention of the Members to object to all the bills on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent just simply because they are on the calendar?

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I object if we are to waste our time in this way.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Michigan object?

Mr. CRAMTON. I will withhold the objection if we are going to discuss the bill before us.

Mr. RAKER. The gentleman has his rights.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. MADDEN. I object. I have already objected.

BRIDGE ACROSS NIAGARA RIVER.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill S. 3427.

The Clerk read as follows:

S. 3427. An act to establish a commission to report to Congress on the practicability, feasibility, and place, and to devise plans for the construction of a public bridge over the Niagara River from some point in the city of Buffalo, N. Y., to some point in the Dominion of Canada, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. GARD. Reserving the right to object——

Mr. WALSH. In order to save time, I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made. The Clerk will report the next bill.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. GARD. To inquire whether the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] made objection to the bill about the time of fixing time for holding court at Lexington?

Mr. MADDEN. I objected to 130. I did not intend to object to 131.

EASTERN DISTRICT OF KENTUCKY.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill S. 2476.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 2476) to amend the act establishing the eastern district of Kentucky.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. GARD. Reserving the right to object, I shall not object, except to call attention to the language of the bill with respect to possible amendment. The amendment which the Attorney General recommended in his report on the bill was that a small proviso should be added, so that the Government would be under no expense for the holding of the court at Lexington. The proviso, as it appears on page 2, lines 8, 9, 10, and 11, is to provide—

That suitable rooms and accommodations for holding court at Lexington shall be furnished without expense to the United States.

The Attorney General's letter indicates as a condition precedent that the city or county authorities at Lexington should furnish court quarters rent free until a courthouse has been built. It is my purpose to inquire of those who are familiar with conditions at Lexington whether this is to be done by the county in which Lexington is situated or by the city of Lexington?

Mr. CANTRILL. The fiscal court has already passed a resolution which gives the handsome courthouse of the county for the holding of the Federal court without expense to the Government. The resolution has already been adopted by the fiscal court.

Mr. GARD. Then no amendment would be necessary in the bill?

Mr. CANTRILL. I do not think it is necessary, but as the committee has reported it I have no objection to it.

Mr. GARD. I mean the amendment suggesting Fayette County?

Mr. CANTRILL. That would be all right, although, as a matter of fact, Fayette County has taken the necessary steps to provide quarters in the handsome building in that town.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the bill. It is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That regular terms of the District Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Kentucky shall be held at the following times and places, namely:

At Jackson: Beginning on the first Monday in March and the third Monday in September in each year.

At Frankfort: Beginning on the second Monday in March and the fourth Monday in September in each year.

At Covington: Beginning on the first Monday in April and the third Monday in October in each year.

At Richmond: Beginning on the fourth Monday in April and the second Monday in November in each year.

At London: Beginning on the second Monday in May and the fourth Monday in November in each year.

At Catlettsburg: Beginning on the fourth Monday in May and the second Monday in December in each year.

At Lexington: Beginning on the second Monday in January and the second Monday in June in each year: Provided, That suitable rooms and accommodations for holding court at Lexington shall be furnished without expense to the United States.

And at such other times and places as may hereafter be provided by law.

The clerk of the court for the eastern district of Kentucky shall maintain an office in charge of himself, a deputy, or a clerical assistant at each of the places of holding court within said district.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, this bill is being read for amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

With a committee amendment as follows: Page 2, line 8, after the word "year," insert "Provided, That suitable rooms and accommodations for holding court at Lexington shall be furnished without expense to the United States."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, this bill, in fact, is an amendment to some section of the Judicial Code. I think it ought to so state. It is a copy of a part of some section, the section relating to Kentucky, in a judicial code, but it comes in as an independent proposition.

Now, it has usually been considered desirable in legislation relating to the holding of Federal court in a State to keep together the provisions relating to a State as far as possible, and instead of this being done that way it seems to be proposed as an independent proposition. If anyone wants to know hereafter about the places of holding court in Kentucky he will have to read the section of the Judicial Code in relation to the matter and then to compare it with this bill, as an independent law, instead of having it all together. Of course, it can be done, but it is a very sloppy way of doing business.

The Committee on the Judiciary really ought to have some uniform practice about these things, it seems to me. Two weeks ago we passed a bill to amend the act relating to the holding of court in the State of New York, a Senate bill, and in that case the Committee on the Judiciary reported in an amendment in conformity with the practice which I have just suggested, striking out all after the enacting clause, and inserting the section of the Judiciary Code in reference to the holding of Federal courts in New York. I do not know why this is done differently. The next bill on the calendar is still different.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Certainly.

Mr. GARD. I wish to say that I think the suggestion of the gentleman from Illinois is a very good one. I think the amendment should be made as we amended the New York section of the code, for the reason which the gentleman has given; that is, that it places the whole matter in one condensed paragraph or section, so that the law can be considered as amended without having to resort to different parts of the code.

What I rose for was to ascertain whether either the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CANTRILL] or the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VOLSTEAD] has the code before him. If so, they could suggest the section of the code which is amended.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. That section of the code covers other districts besides the eastern district of Kentucky. That is carried as a part of the section. It could easily be provided by copying the section of the code which is changed and incorporated in this bill. That ought to become the practice of this committee. The committee clerk, who is an able man, would know how to prepare bills in that shape for presentation to the committee when the committee considers them.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. KINCHELOE. I want to ask as a matter of information, because I have no interest in this except indirectly, but in another bill directly. In establishing a court at Lexington, as this bill provides, in whose hands is vested the power to lay off the district—that is, the subdistricts where the litigants will go to the Lexington district courts?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. It is within the power of the judge to require the cases to be presented at a certain meeting of the court.

Mr. KINCHELOE. At a certain geographic point in the district?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. He can do as he pleases about that, I believe.

Mr. MORGAN. I think the court can direct the trial of these cases at any of these points and direct that the witnesses be called there.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. That is what I said.

Mr. KINCHELOE. I understood there was a certain territory in each of these districts where the litigants and witnesses all go.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Practically there is; but if the lawyers agree to go to another place, it is within the power of the court to let them do so.

Mr. KINCHELOE. It is also in the power of the court to allow the witnesses and litigants to go to any point?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Yes. That is the reason for this bill. It is to enable the litigants in one part of the district to have their cases heard in a different place from the present location. They are not required to go all over the district. They are not required to follow the judge in all his perambulations over the district.

Mr. MORGAN. Take Oklahoma for example. There are four or five districts, and a district may cover several counties. The court can try cases in every one of those counties. The lawyers have no say about it. The court determines that the case shall be tried in a certain town.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Practically the court exercises his power so as to accommodate lawyers and litigants.

Mr. MORGAN. I am not certain about that.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. That is the whole theory of litigation of this character. That is the reason why they want this Kentucky place created.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I would like to suggest that the criticism made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is well taken, and the better practice would be to set out the section of the statute that is covered.

But this bill came from the Senate, and, at the suggestion of the Attorney General, who appeared before the Committee on the Judiciary, it was thought best to report the bill as it came from the Senate with the proposed amendment. But I am perfectly willing to offer section 83 of the Judiciary Code in place of section 1 of this bill, with the amendment including Lexington. The provisions of the Judiciary Code with reference to the terms of court at these various other places mentioned in the bill seem to be the same as those fixed by the bill. This bill simply adds as to the places of holding court in the eastern district of Kentucky.

I offer the following amendment: To strike out lines 1 to 11 on page 1 and lines 1 to 17 on page 2 and insert the following, which is section 83 of the Judicial Code, amended so as to include Lexington.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WALSH: On page 1 strike out all after the enacting clause, and on page 2 strike out lines 1 to 17, inclusive, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"Section 83 of the Judicial Code is hereby amended to read as follows:

"'SEC. 83. The State of Kentucky is divided into two districts, to be known as the eastern and western districts of Kentucky. The eastern district shall include the territory embraced, on the 1st day of July, 1910, in the counties of Carroll, Trimble, Henry, Shelby, Anderson, Mercer, Boyle, Gallatin, Boone, Kenton, Campbell, Pendleton, Grant, Owen, Franklin, Bourbon, Scott, Woodford, Fayette, Jessamine, Gerrard, Madison, Lincoln, Rockcastle, Pulaski, Wayne, Whitley, Bell, Knox, Harlan, Laurel, Clay, Leslie, Letcher, Perry, Owsley, Jackson, Estill, Lee, Breathhitt, Knott, Pike, Floyd, Magoffin, Martin, Johnson, Lawrence, Boyd, Greenup, Carter, Elliott, Morgan, Wolfe, Powell, Menifee, Clark, Montgomery, Bath, Rowan, Lewis, Fleming, Mason, Bracken, Robertson, Nicholas, and Harrison, with the waters thereof. Terms of the district court for the eastern district shall be held at Frankfort on the second Monday in March and the fourth Monday in September; at Covington on the first Monday in April and the third Monday in October; at Richmond on the fourth Monday in April and the second Monday in November; at London on the second Monday in May and the fourth Monday in November; at Catlettsburg on the fourth Monday in May and the second Monday in December; at Jackson on the first Monday in March and the third Monday in September; at Lexington on the second Monday in January and the second Monday in June: Provided, That suitable rooms and accommodations are furnished for holding court at Jackson and Lexington free of expense to the Government until such time as a public building shall be erected there. The western district shall include the territory embraced on the 1st day of July, 1910, in the counties of Oldham, Jefferson, Spencer, Bullitt, Nelson, Washington, Marion, Larue, Taylor, Casey, Green, Adair, Russell, Clinton, Cumberland, Monroe, Metcalfe, Allen, Barren, Simpson, Logan, Warren, Butler, Hart, Edmonson, Grayson, Hardin, Meade, Breckenridge, Hancock, Daviess, Ohio, McLean, Muhlenberg, Todd, Christian, Trigg, Lyon, Caldwell, Livingston, Crittenden, Hopkins, Webster, Henderson, Union, Marshall, Calloway, McCracken, Graves, Ballard, Carlisle, Hickman, and Fulton, with the waters thereof. Terms of the district court for the western district shall be held at Louisville on the second Mondays in March and October; at Owensboro on the first Monday in May and the fourth Monday in November; at Paducah on the third Mondays in April and November; and at Bowling Green on the third Monday in May and the second Monday in December. The clerk of the court for the eastern district shall maintain an office in charge of himself or a deputy at Frankfort, at Covington, at Richmond, at London, at Catlettsburg, at Jackson, and at Lexington; and the clerk of the western district shall maintain an office in charge of himself or a deputy at Louisville, at Owensboro, at Paducah, and at Bowling Green, each of which offices shall be kept open at all times for the transaction of the business of said court. The clerks of the courts for the eastern and western districts, upon issuing original process in a civil action, shall make it returnable to the court nearest to the county of the residence of the defendant, or of that defendant whose county is nearest to a court, and shall, immediately upon payment by the plaintiff of his fees accrued, send the papers filed to the clerk of the court to which the process is made returnable; and whenever the process is not thus made returnable, any defendant may, upon motion or before the calling of the cause, have it transferred to the court to which it should have been sent had the clerk known the residence of the defendant when the action was brought.'"

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachuetts is to put the bill in the form in which it should have been introduced and reported, or reported whether so introduced or not; but unless we have information whether this section has been amended heretofore we ought not, in my judgment, to agree to this amendment. That could be easily ascertained; but the fact is that this amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts is based on a printed section in the judicial title as it originally passed Congress, with an amendment including the holding of court in Lexington for the eastern district. I venture to say that in most of the States there have been changes in the districts or in the time of holding court in the various districts, enacted as amendments to the original law since it was passed. I suggest to the gentleman from Massachusetts that it might not be very safe to agree to this amendment unless some gentleman, between now and the time when the Senate agrees to the amendment, sees to it that the act has not heretofore been amended and that we are not by this amendment eliminating some amendment heretofore enacted into law.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask if it is the purpose of the gentleman from Massachusetts to offer an amendment likewise to the title. The title should be amended by stating that it is an act to amend section 83 of the Judicial Code.

Mr. WALSH. We can not amend the title in the committee.

Mr. GARD. I am simply calling attention to it for the purpose of ascertaining whether the gentleman is going to offer that amendment in the House.

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The question being taken, the amendment was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the remainder of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That this act shall take effect and be in force from and after its passage.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I move to strike out section 2. It is not good practice.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

TRANSFERRING EARLY COUNTY FROM THE NORTHERN TO THE SOUTHERN JUDICIAL DISTRICT OF GEORGIA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 11053) to transfer the county of Early from the northern judicial district of Georgia to the southern judicial district of Georgia.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Reserving the right to object, this bill is subject to the same criticism that was made to the other bill, but we agreed to the other bill without objection. The House committee inserted an amendment providing that the clerk of the division of the United States court at Columbus shall transmit all pending litigation, with related documents and papers, to the clerk of the division of the United States court at Albany. What do you propose to do, abolish all proceedings of the court where the old court is held? I suppose the intention clearly was to transmit to the division to which this county is now to be attached litigation originating in this county?

Mr. PARK. Yes.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. That is not what the amendment says by many degrees.

Mr. PARK. It should be "all pending litigation from Early County."

Mr. MANN of Illinois. There are now five divisions in the southern district, of which the Albany division is one, court being held at Albany. It is proposed to attach a new county to that division, taking it away from the division where the court is held at Columbus. I confess that I do not know the exact language that ought to be used. My recollection is that we never have provided, where a county is detached from one division of a district and put in another division of a district, anything at all in reference to the transfer of the papers.

Mr. PARK. The gentleman thinks that would go by operation of law?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I can not say whether the judge has the authority or not. I do not know just how you would describe it. You say here that he shall transmit "all pending litigation." Of course, that would abolish all litigation at Columbus or in the division to which Early County is now attached.

Mr. PARK. It is intended to relate only to litigation in Early County. You might add the words "Early County."

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Does not the gentleman think that if the language was recast so as to read "shall transmit all pending litigation, with related documents and papers, as may be directed by the judge of the northern judicial district"?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. It may be. I have simply a memorandum to insert "pending litigation originating in Early County." I do not know whether that is appropriate or not.

Mr. GARD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. GARD. Would not the purpose be served if we put after the words "pending litigation," in line 10, the words "Early County," so that it would read: "shall transmit all pending litigation in Early County, with related documents," and so forth?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I suppose the gentleman means originating in Early County. There is no litigation pending in Early County.

Mr. PARK. Make it read "all litigation that originated in Early County."

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The gentleman will readily see that under the language of the bill no one would know what litigation was to be transmitted unless it was all transmitted, and no one desires it to be all transmitted.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. How would the gentleman define "litigation originating in Early County"?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I suppose the only way would be by citizenship.

Mr. WALSH. There is no citizenship of the county; it is the citizenship of the State.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Well, residence. I do not think that language would be sufficient.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Does not the gentleman from Georgia think that the desire would be accomplished if the language was made to read: "transmit such litigation, with related documents and papers, as may be directed by the judge of the northern judicial district"?

Mr. PARK. I think that would accomplish it. He could keep what he wanted to try himself and send the rest to the other court.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I think myself that the language of section 1 is sufficient without the language of section 2. I think that has usually been the custom. Whether it has resulted satisfactorily I do not know. I have no objection to the language suggested by the gentleman from Massachusetts. Clearly the language reported in the bill is not sufficient. I have no objection to the consideration of this bill.

Mr. PARK. Does the gentleman think the suggestion offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts sufficient to cover any objection that he has?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. It sounds all right.

Mr. PARK. That the judge may have authority to transfer to the other court all such litigation as he thinks proper.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Would not the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts leave it in the discretion of the judge to transmit such litigation as he pleased?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The clerk is to transmit it under the direction of the court. The question is what he is going to transfer. You have either got to confine it to litigation originating in the county, and no one seems to know just how you would ascertain it without leaving it to somebody.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. It becomes a discretionary matter with the judge. If you say the clerk shall transmit what the judge directs him to, it makes it certain.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. My observation of judges is, especially in the United States courts, that they are always willing to get rid of a case if they can and have somebody else look after it.

Mr. WALSH. The discretion ought to rest with some one, because the cases may involve other litigants than those residing in Early County.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Yes; and cases may have been heard.

Mr. WALSH. And might be about to be heard.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Some might have pending a motion for a new trial and various other things. I do not object to the consideration.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the county of Early, in the State of Georgia, be, and it is hereby, transferred from the northern judicial district of the United States court to the southern judicial district of the United States court for said State of Georgia.

With the following committee amendment:

Add a new section, as follows:

"SEC. 2. That immediately upon the passage of this act the clerk of the division of the United States court at Columbus, Ga., to which the said Early County is now attached, shall transmit all pending litigation, with related documents and papers, to the clerk of the division of the United States court at Albany, Ga., to which said county is now attached."

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I have an amendment which I desire to offer, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. WALSH moves to amend the committee amendment, as follows: After the word "transmit," in line 10, strike out "all" and insert "such," and on page 2, after "papers," in line 1, insert "as the judge of the northern judicial district may direct."

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, that will make the language read as follows:

That immediately upon the passage of this act the clerk of the division of the United States court at Columbus, Ga., to which the said Early County is now attached, shall transmit such pending litigation, with related documents and papers, as the judge of the northern judicial district may direct, to the clerk of the division of the United States court at Albany, Ga., to which said county is now attached.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer a substitute for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH]. The substitute was prepared by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LANKFORD], and as it is a little difficult to read, I shall read it myself.

SEC. 2. That immediately upon the passage of this act the clerk of the division of the United States court at Columbus, Ga., to which the said Early County is now attached, shall transmit all litigation which is on file in the northern district of Georgia, which would not have been filed in said northern district, but which would have been filed in the southern district of Georgia had the county of Early been in the southern district of Georgia, with related documents and papers, to the clerk of the division of the United States court at Albany, Ga., to which said county is now attached.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio offers a substitute, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. GARD. It is rather difficult to report it the way it is prepared now.

The SPEAKER. The Chair suggests that the gentleman prepare it so that it may be reported.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, while that is being done, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARD. Yes.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. If there be a case which has been heard pending before the judge for decision, does the gentleman think that that ought to be transferred?

Mr. GARD. A case pending before the judge for decision?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. GARD. I should say not.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. But under the language the gentleman has suggested it would be transferred to a new court and a new trial had.

Mr. GARD. If it would, then the amendment should not be adopted.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I think the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] would answer the purpose, for it transfers such cases as the judge directs.

Mr. GARD. That might cover it.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I think we are perfectly safe in saying that the judge shall direct the transfer of all cases originating in the county, or certainly that the parties desire to have transferred, unless the judge had had a hearing of them and had them under consideration and the parties did not want them transferred.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, I ask to withdraw my substitute.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman withdraws his substitute. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the committee amendment as amended.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, it may be hypercritical, but I move to amend, in line 9, by inserting after the word "which" the word "division," and to make the same amendment after the word "which" in line 2, page 2.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment to the amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 9, after the word "which" insert the word "division"; page 2, line 2, after the word "which" insert the word "division."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend, on page 2, line 2, by striking out the word "now" and inserting the word "hereby."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 2, strike out the word "now" and insert in lieu thereof the word "hereby."

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, that is necessary because under the language of the amendment this county is now attached to two different divisions, and plainly it can not be.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment as amended.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BLANTON) there were—ayes 55, noes 2.

So the bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. PARK, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

EXCHANGE OF LANDS IN HAWAII.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 10432) to provide for the exchange of Government lands for privately owned lands in the Territory of Hawaii.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, it seems to me that this is a bill that we ought to have a little more information about than is conveyed by the report of the committee on the bill or by the bill itself. If the gentleman reporting the bill is prepared to answer one or two inquiries, I would be pleased to make them rather than to actually object.

Mr. MONAHAN of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I reported the bill.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, my inquiries are these: I note that you are endeavoring to secure a general permission for the exchange of land now owned by the Government, not alone at the present time but in the future, for certain privately owned lands in the Island of Hawaii. The report of the committee calls attention to five specified tracts, which seem to have reached the committee through the channel of several inquiries made originally to the Secretary of War. When the hearing was held, information could not be secured as to just what was aimed at, but finally five lists were submitted. The first list consists of 254 acres, owned by a leading citizen of Honolulu, Mr. McCandless—I believe a disappointed candidate for governor of the islands—which is valued at $65,000. Some information is gathered that it could be condemned for about $20,000. About the other tracts there is little information given in respect to who owns them or their value or for what purpose they are to be secured on the part of the Government. It therefore seems to me that before a bill of as an indefinite a character as this is given consideration we ought certainly to have very much more information than is given in the report of the committee. I am very glad that the gentleman is prepared to give us the information.

Mr. MONAHAN of Wisconsin. I do not know about that. I will do the best I can. The Government owns in the Territory of Hawaii 1,146 acres of land. It is unfit for military purposes. It is too far away, or its topography is not right——

Mr. TREADWAY. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. MONAHAN of Wisconsin. Yes.

Mr. TREADWAY. Is he aware whether it is suitable land for the cultivation of pineapples?

Mr. MONAHAN of Wisconsin. Some of it is and some of it is not, and the Government asks for authority, now having only authority to buy, if they want to buy, 40 acres of land at a price not to exceed $5,000 for the tract. They ask permission to be given authority to exchange the land now owned by the Government for adjoining lands suitable for military purposes.

Now, as to the maps, I have them here, and any Member can come and look at them, but the department does not want them thrown out to the public, as they are military maps.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MONAHAN of Wisconsin. Gladly.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. As I understand the purpose of this bill, it is to permit the accomplishment of an object which would be accomplished within a short time, to permit the Government to trade some of the land which it owns and does not need for some lands which the Government does need in connection with its military operations?

Mr. MONAHAN of Wisconsin. And without cost to the Government.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. But there is no limit of time whatever in the bill. This would authorize the President hereafter, without any restriction of time, to transfer any land owned by the United States to a private individual for land owned by the individual. Does the gentleman have any objection to putting in a restriction as to time? I would suggest three years.

Mr. MONAHAN of Wisconsin. I would not object to that.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Certainly if it is to go through this transfer can be effected probably within a three-year period.

Mr. MONAHAN of Wisconsin. I have no objection to that at all.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I think there ought to be a restriction of time, because if we grant a general authority for the purpose only of accomplishing a specific object, we ought not to leave the general authority to run forever.

Mr. TREADWAY. Does not the gentleman also think there should be a restriction as to these specific transactions?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Well, no; because I think the Government will do far better if it has a chance to trade with five owners of property.

Mr. TREADWAY. They do not know who the owners are.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. It does not make any difference who the owners are. They can not trade with them until they find them out. With the owners of five different properties the Government can do a good deal better in making a trade than with one individual whose land they want. These gentlemen out there will be told if this bill passes that we will make a reasonable trade with them. If not, we will get authority from Congress to condemn their land. And I have no doubt they will make a reasonably good trade if they are given the authority.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts objects. The Clerk will report the next bill.

CODE OF LAW FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 6025) to amend the act entitled "An act to establish a code of law for the District of Columbia, approved March 3, 1901," and the acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I wish to inquire about the manner in which this committee got control of this bill to revise the Code of the District of Columbia? I find in the report which the Judiciary Committee has brought in the following:

The question of revising the Code of the District of Columbia has been pending before the House Judiciary Committee for the past four years.

I find on examination that prior to 1911 the Committee on Revision of the Laws had prepared a bill to revise the Code of the District of Columbia, and it is indicated that this bill is one to revise the code. It is a bill to revise and amend the act to revise the Code of the District of Columbia. There is no question, Mr. Speaker, but it should have gone to the Committee on Revision of the Laws. This reference is indicative of the general carelessness and general indifference as to a few committees doing all the work. According to their report, this bill has been before that committee for four years. We can not accomplish much in this House if all of the legislation goes to a few committees. Here is one that the learned Committee on the Judiciary has gone ahead on, as if they had some authority over it. I would like to know from the chairman of that committee what they are doing with this bill?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. This bill was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary in the regular order as an amendment to a number of sections. It is not a revision of the law. So I do not see why the chairman of the Committee on Revision of the Laws should find fault.

Mr. LITTLE. Why do you say in your report that the question of revising the Code of the District of Columbia has been before the committee for the past four years?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. It should say, "for amending the laws."

Mr. LITTLE. This is not only an amendment, it is a revision. It covers everything from forcible entry and detainer to rape.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the regular order.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I wish to say this——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts demands the regular order.

Mr. WALSH. I withdraw the demand. I thought the gentleman from Kansas had finished.

Mr. LITTLE. I shall finish in a moment.

I have investigated this bill, and I think it is a good one, and I am not going to stand in the road of good legislation on any mere technicality. I simply wanted to call attention to the lack of wisdom in such adjustment of the legislation of the House. When I introduced a bill to revise and amend, it was referred to the overstocked Interstate Commerce Committee, because the original act came from there. But when a bill went in to amend an act brought in by the Revision Committee it goes for four years to the Judiciary Committee—for four years. If the rule applied against us once, the same ruling would have favored us next—the same interpretation of the rule I mean.

I want to ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks, so that I may insert and include in my remarks a few precedents on this subject, so that I can get before the House the precise point I wish to make. The revision committee has had the approval of its authority to handle bills providing a civil code for Alaska in 1900 and 1901, establishing a congressional correspondence business in 1892, amending laws relating to Government contracts in 1892, on alien-land ownership in 1888, on clerks for Members in 1888, for punishing those setting fire to grass on public lands in 1888, and on the franking privilege in 1892. In 1882 the resolutions distributing the President's message provided that this revision committee should have charge of the subjects of transfer of the Lighthouse Service, the Coast Survey, and the Revenue Marine Service from the Treasury to the Navy. Here are nearly a dozen instances in which this committee has had amending power which had nothing to do with codification. The dictionary says to revise means to amend, and it does. There are many other instances in which the power to revise has been so held. All my argument seeks is that the dictionary be recognized in the House as a rule of good English. I think this bill is a glaring example of the error I referred to. This bill is a bill to revise the District Code.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks on the subject of references of bills to the Committee on the Revision of the Laws. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CRAMTON. Inasmuch as this is a matter purely affecting the District of Columbia, and the rules of the House regarding jurisdiction provide that matters pertaining to the District of Columbia shall go to the Committee on the District of Columbia, what does the gentleman from Kansas think about that?

Mr. LITTLE. That is simply another difficulty in the matter of interpreting the rules and the propriety of interpreting them so that all the committees of the House will be at work.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will pardon me, this law to which these amendments are offered is within the jurisdiction of the Committee on the Judiciary. The Committee on the Judiciary has jurisdiction of the courts, and all bills to amend these statutes have heretofore been referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. LITTLE. This is a bill to establish a code of law in the District of Columbia, not confined to courts at all, and there is no committee of the House that is authorized to report such a bill except the Committee on the Revision of the Laws.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LITTLE. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Does the gentleman contend that a bill to establish an original code of laws belongs to the Committee on the Revision of the Laws?

Mr. LITTLE. Certainly I do; the precedents that I will insert so demonstrate. See the decisions as to the Alaska Code and the Columbia Code. That there should be broader view of the rules assigning bills is evidently in the interests of speedy legislation, of thorough consideration, of putting every Member at work on important propositions, and would put a stop to this talk about idle committees. Is it possible all the brains and industry of the House are on five or six committees? Interpret your rules as they read and every committee will be reasonably busy and none will be overworked.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, this bill is entitled "A bill to amend the act entitled 'An act to establish a code of law for the District of Columbia,' approved March 3, 1901, and the acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto," a public bill, referred by the Speaker to the Committee on the Judiciary. The Speaker is not supposed to read through a bill from one end to the other to find out to which committee it shall be referred, though frequently he does. The Speaker referred this bill, on the title, to the Committee on the Judiciary, a natural reference. It was introduced on June 17, 1919. That is some time ago. The rules of the House provide that where any other committee thinks it is entitled to the jurisdiction of a bill it can bring that matter before the House any day, except on Calendar Wednesday, perhaps. It has been six months since this bill was introduced. The Committee on the Revision of the Laws, which, in my judgment, never had any jurisdiction or any right to jurisdiction over the bill at all, now complains, through its chairman, because the bill was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary erroneously, as the gentleman from Kansas says. If it were referred erroneously, the gentleman from Kansas ought to have brought the matter before the House.

I would suggest to my friend from Kansas, for whom I have great affection, that the only way to avoid the necessity for his frequent complaints about references of bills is to come before the House some morning when a bill to amend a section of the Revised Statutes has been introduced and referred to some other committee and move to discharge the other committee and refer the bill to his committee and let the House settle the question. That is the only way it can be settled. If the House desires to turn all legislation over to the distinguished committee presided over by the distinguished and able gentleman from Kansas, it will vote with him "aye," but I expect the "ayes" will be few and the "noes" will be numerous. [Laughter.]

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman very justly suggests that I am open to the same criticism as the rest of the Members, because he says I should have disposed of this sooner. I plead guilty. That disposes of that. He says I have frequently complained of this. I have complained just twice. I am entirely familiar with the rule for asking a vote. Perhaps when I think the House has considered it sufficiently, I will seek the vote as to whether all legislation should only be considered by a few.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I have heard the gentleman complain more than twice.

Mr. LITTLE. No; I have complained only twice.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I have heard the gentleman complain more than twice on this floor; twice recently.

Mr. LITTLE. My memory is at fault, then. "The gentleman from Kansas," as a matter of fact, has all the work he can stand up under in the Committee on the Revision of the Laws. He does not want any more work there. But that is not the point he is now discussing. The point is, I think, the rules should be interpreted so that every committee should be a working committee instead of all the work being done by three or four committees. As a matter of fact, when I have brought it before you and you have had an opportunity to study it, I expect to demonstrate that I am right. But, as the gentleman suggests, it would not be worth while for me to try to do it now. You have got to assimilate the facts before I am going to ask you to vote on the question, Why should all the real power be in a few hands?

Mr. MACGREGOR. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LITTLE. Yes.

Mr. MACGREGOR. What would be the advantage of having the bills distributed around?

Mr. LITTLE. I am glad you inquire. The advantage would be this, and that is the most important thing about it: As it is now much of the legislation of the House is concentrated in a few committees, and these few committees, having so much to do, are all behind in their work, and people complain because their legislation is delayed. The second result is that some of the committees do not have much to do. The Committee on Education, for instance, as was shown the other day, has not a clerk, and it was hinted that it had little to do. If it has enough to do, it ought to have a clerk. If the committee which speaks for the schools and teachers of the United States has not enough business to entitle them to a clerk, the House should change its methods and give it more authority. The committees should be at work. If our methods were changed, the result would be that most of the committees would be at work all the time, just as a few of these other committees now are.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, do I understand the gentleman from Kansas desires to object?

Mr. LITTLE. No. I was only answering a question.

Mr. MONDELL. It seems to me if an objection is to be made, it should be made.

Mr. LITTLE. I stopped some time ago. Several gentlemen have asked me questions, as does the gentleman from Wyoming.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, I think this is a very comprehensive and very important bill, and should be considered with greater opportunity for discussion than can be afforded by the Calendar for Unanimous Consent. I therefore object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio objects. The Clerk will report the next bill.

HONORABLE DISCHARGE FROM THE MILITARY OR NAVAL SERVICE.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 11449) providing that any person who served in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States during any war, who was killed in action, or died of wounds incurred or disease contracted in such service, shall be deemed to have been honorably discharged from such service, and to give pensionable status to the widow or former widow of any such person.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Reserving the right to object, I should like to ask the gentleman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions how his committee got jurisdiction over a bill so broad as this?

Mr. FULLER of Illinois. The bill refers to any war, of course, but the only cases I know anything about that it would affect are cases of the Civil War. It will be remembered that all recent legislation as to widows' pensions is based upon 90 days' service of the soldier and an honorable discharge therefrom. The Pension Bureau, or the Department of the Interior, has held that a man killed in action or who died in the service was not honorably discharged, and his widow has been denied a pension because he did not technically have an honorable discharge, although he died in the service of his country.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, to save time, I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made. The Clerk will report the next bill.

Mr. FULLER of Illinois. I ask unanimous consent that the bill may remain on the calendar.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Why does not the gentleman move to suspend the rules?

Mr. FULLER of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, will the Chair recognize me to make a motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill?

The SPEAKER. Not at present.

Mr. FULLER of Illinois. I ask unanimous consent that the bill may remain on the calendar.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the bill may remain on the calendar. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

PROOF OF WIDOWHOOD IN CLAIMS FOR PENSION.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 11489) concerning proof of widowhood in claims for pension.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I should like to ask the gentleman from Illinois a question or two about this bill. It occurs to me that in the form in which it is drawn it will permit the pensioning of what are known as widows of common-law marriages. I have read the report of the Committee on Invalid Pensions as to the bill, and it seems that the reason for its enactment lies in the fact that some States have laws providing that where a man is awarded a divorce if he marries again within a certain time the marriage is invalid, and other things of that kind; and that this situation often makes it very difficult for the widow of the deceased soldier to prove that her husband was legally divorced from a former spouse; but the language of the bill is so broad that it not only covers cases of that kind but if a soldier a good many years ago had left his wife and family and gone away with some immoral women into some other State, and had lived with her as his wife and held her out as his wife for the period of seven years and then died, under this bill the later woman would be able to defeat the rights of the lawful wife and children. Now, if the gentleman would agree to this kind of an amendment, I think the bill would be all right:

It shall constitute sufficient proof of widowhood to establish by competent testimony that the claimant was ceremonially married to and lived and cohabited with the soldier, sailor, or marine on account of whose service she claims for a period of seven years or more.

In that case, if you adopt the amendment, it would not require the widow to go back and show that the husband had been legally divorced from some former wife. I understand that it is this matter which occasions a great deal of trouble in the Pension Office, and it would meet the needs of the case if the widow showed that she had actually been ceremonially married to the soldier and had lived and cohabited with him for a period of seven years, although the marriage itself might have been illegal, contrary to the expectation of the wife who acted in good faith.

I will not give my consent to the consideration of the bill if it is left broad enough to include common-law marriages.

Mr. FULLER of Illinois. If the gentleman has read the report of the Commissioner of Pensions regarding this legislation, he knows that the commissioner has stated the reasons why something ought to be done by Congress in the matter. Among other things, he cites cases where it is impossible to prove a ceremonial marriage that took place 40 or 50 years ago. The bill, it seems to me, ought to cover that point as well as the other. The gentleman's amendment would cover a great many cases and would improve the existing law; but in the cases of the old widows who were married 40 or 50 years ago, when no record of marriages was kept and when all of the witnesses have died, it is often impossible to prove a ceremonial marriage. For that reason a great many old widows have been denied pensions, because they could not make that proof, although the present law undoubtedly requires it.

Mr. BLACK. The gentleman will admit that under the broad language of this bill it would be possible to pension some immoral woman with whom the soldier lived in a distant State and whom he held out as his wife when, as a matter of fact, he had a lawful wife and legitimate children in some other State, and this would defeat their rights. I happen to know of a case in my own district where the rights to property had to be decided in court upon that very ground. The man had abandoned his lawful wife and children and had come to Texas with an immoral woman, had lived in the community for years and held her out as his wife, and when he died of course she claimed his property.

Mr. FULLER of Illinois. I think that would be a very exceptional case.

Mr. BLACK. It would be; but I do not think we ought to open up the law so as to permit pensions to women of that kind. I am perfectly willing that the necessity of showing affirmatively that the husband was divorced from his former wife or that she had died be done away with. I recognize that it is a very difficult matter sometimes to prove that on account of the long lapse of time in some cases, but I would not be willing to do away with the necessity of the proof of a ceremonial marriage. That is a fact which ought to be reasonably susceptible of proof by the surviving widow and she should be required to make it.

Mr. FULLER of Illinois. I would be willing to have the gentleman offer his amendment and let the House pass upon it. The bill would then be an improvement on the present law; but I do not think we ought to punish ninety and nine innocent persons in order to catch one guilty one.

Mr. BLACK. I shall have to object unless I get that amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas objects. The Clerk will report the next bill.

WITNESSES IN CRIMINAL CASES.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 4383) to further amend section 858 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this deals with what statute?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. It deals with the section relating to the competency of witnesses in criminal cases. The law at present makes the law of the State applicable in civil cases but not in criminal cases, and there is complaint, because under the common law, which prevails in Federal courts in criminal cases, a number of witnesses are unable to testify. For instance, persons who have been convicted of a felony can not testify in a Federal court in a criminal case if there is objection, nor can the wife testify in favor of her husband in such a case.

Mr. BLANTON. May I state to the chairman of the committee that while the bill enlarges the rights of the Federal courts with respect to the one point that he speaks of, he will find it will restrict evidence in the Federal courts on other lines. In some States many restrictions are placed around confessions made by the defendant. This would bring these restrictions in the Federal court in accordance with the laws of the State court.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. It leaves it to the State to say what the restrictions shall be.

Mr. TILSON. If it is a further restriction it will at least be in line with the laws of the State, with which courts and attorneys will be more intimately acquainted than they are with the common-law practice.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Yes; and I think the time has come when we ought to adopt this change. In nearly every State these common-law restrictions have been eliminated.

Mr. BEE. Reserving the right to object, I should like to ask the gentleman as to the competency of the husband and wife in a civil suit. You propose to let the Federal law follow the State law?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. We make no change in that respect. Under the law as it stands the State law applies.

Mr. BEE. You make a difference in criminal cases?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Under the present statute the common-law rule applies to criminal cases.

Mr. BEE. If a witness is disqualified by reason of a conviction of a felony it would make him an incompetent witness in that State. You want to make it uniform.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. We make it uniform both as to civil and criminal cases.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Yes.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Under the existing law parties to a civil suit are authorized to testify?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Yes.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. But in the United States court in criminal cases they can not testify?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Certain parties can not. Under the common law, if a person is directly interested in the result, he can not testify.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. As to a man indicted?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. A man indicted can testify because the statute authorizes it.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Who is not permitted to testify?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. A wife can not testify in favor of her husband nor persons convicted of a felony.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Providing this sedition bill reported to the House becomes a law and an auctioneer should hang up a red flag, his wife could not testify that he was not doing it for the purpose of raising Ned or destroying the Government? [Laughter.]

Mr. VOLSTEAD. That is correct.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I think she ought to be given that chance. [Laughter.]

Mr. BEE. I would like to ask the gentleman if this case would apply. Take a case in the Federal court of a man convicted and fined, or given a day in jail; that is a felony under the Federal law or a misdemeanor, and he loses his right to testify?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. My recollection is, that under the common law it must be a felony to make a person incompetent as a witness.

Mr. BEE. They consider it a felony where a man is fined $10.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. No; under the Federal law, if there is no special provision in the act itself making it a felony, the imprisonment must be for a year or more, to make it a felony; that is, a person must be subject to imprisonment for that length of time.

Mr. BEE. I do not want men who have been convicted of minor offenses in a Federal court held disqualified unless the law of the State disqualifies them.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. That is correct.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. In regard to what the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] said, this law will not change in any way the present situation whereby it is generally understood everywhere that a red flag of any kind is a sign of danger.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I always supposed it was more the sign of an auction.

Mr. BLANTON. No; danger. When you see a red flag on the railroad track it is a sign of danger.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Evidently the gentleman from Texas is always seeing a red flag in front of him whether it exists or not.

Mr. BLANTON. Sometimes there is occasion for it. With regard to the sedition bill, there is plenty of occasion for it.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Has the Department of Justice considered this matter and recommended it?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. It was submitted to the Department of Justice. My recollection is that it did recommend it.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. There is nothing in the report to show it. I was wondering whether the effect of this would be to restrict or enlarge the field of evidence.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. My opinion is that it will enlarge the field of evidence, because in nearly all the States the common-law restrictions have been wiped out. My attention was called to this by a judge of a United States court on the Pacific coast. He had been trying several cases in which he felt that certain parties ought to have had a chance to testify. It seems to me that it is time that we wiped out these common-law restrictions that were in vogue at a time when people did not trust anybody that had any substantial interest in a suit.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 858 of the Revised Statutes of the United States as heretofore amended by the act entitled "An act to amend section 858 of the Revised Statutes of the United States," approved June 29, 1906, be, and the same is hereby, further amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 858. The competency of a witness to testify in any civil or criminal action, suit, or proceeding in the courts of the United States shall be determined by the laws of the State or Territory in which the court is held."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time and passed.

JUDGES OF COURT OF CUSTOMS APPEALS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 10700) to authorize the judges of the United States Court of Customs Appeals to be assigned to any district or circuit court of appeals of the United States and conferring the jurisdiction of said courts upon them while so assigned.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the report on this bill shows that the Court of Customs Appeals in 1917 had a total of 134 cases and in 1918 a total of 78 cases, which it heard. I am heartily in favor of this Court of Customs Appeals having some work to do and, therefore, would support this bill, but I am interested to know what is in the mind of the chairman of the committee about whether there is to be any reason for the continuance of the Court of Customs Appeals, in view of the fact that they have little or no business at this time.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, we still have the judges. I have no doubt that we will have more or less business for them to do; but as I am informed, and as appears by the report of the Attorney General, they may do considerable work, and are perfectly willing to do the work. In fact, they would rather do some work than not, according to their own statement, and it seems to me that we ought to make use of them, because in many districts——

Mr. GARD. How many judges are there—three or five?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Five. In many districts there is great congestion of business, and at least as long as they have the time we ought to permit them to serve or require them to serve.

Mr. GARD. I observe that the statement in the report submitted by one of the judges of the Court of Customs Appeals gives reasons for their transfer, with all of which reasons I am in hearty accord. It seems to me a very wise procedure to use these men who are on this court with nothing to do in their own court and who are willing to give their time in courts where they may be of value.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk reported the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 188 of the Judicial Code of the United States, in force January 1, 1912, as amended, be amended by adding thereto the following: "Provided, That the judges of the United States Court of Custom Appeals, or any of them upon the consent thereof, whenever the business of that court will permit, may, if in the judgment of the Chief Justice of the United States the public interest so requires, be designated and assigned by said Chief Justice for service, from time to time and until he shall otherwise direct, in the district court of any district, or the circuit court of appeals of any circuit, when so requested by the presiding judge of said court, in aid of the judges thereof, and, while so assigned, said judges and every of them shall exercise and is hereby vested with all the powers, jurisdiction, rights, and duties conferred by law upon a United States circuit judge."

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 7, after the word "them," strike out the words "upon consent thereof."

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I am in favor of the committee amendment, but I desire to ask the gentleman in charge of the measure in respect to the language in lines 8 and 9, where reference is made to the Chief Justice of the United States. Is that the official title of the presiding justice of the Supreme Court?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. That is the official title. I happened to have occasion to look it up. I did not draw this bill myself.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, a few years ago, when one of the tariff bills was passed, the Committee on Ways and Means of the House, or the Senate Committee on Finance, recommended the creation of a Court of Customs Appeals, with a salary of $10,000 for each of the judges. There never was any separate vote in the House upon the subject, I think. It either came in a form where the bill could not be amended and reported to the House, or in a conference report where there was no opportunity to obtain a separate vote. It was said that there was a great demand to have the special court. It may have been wise. I do not say it was not. It was created and seemed likely to constitute a precedent for the creation of a lot of other special courts. After a while came along a proposition to create a transportation court, to have control of suits arising out of railway matters. That court was created. I was not in favor of it at the time. However, it was created under Republican control of Congress. When our Democratic friends came here they proposed to repeal that law creating that court, and there was a wide and bitter discussion in the Congress and throughout the country as to whether the Congress had the power to abolish a court, or, at least, to abolish the judges who had been appointed to the court. Congress did abolish the court and provided that the judges should do other work, which I believe they have been doing very satisfactorily. I doubt whether anyone has ever missed the existence of the transportation court since it was abolished.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. Did they abolish the customs court also?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. No.

Mr. GARNER. It is still in existence?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The customs court is still in existence. It was created with a salary of $10,000 for each judge; but when Congress took a crack at it, the first time Congress had an opportunity to express its opinion at all, it refused to appropriate more than $7,500 a year for the salary of the judges—declined to appropriate the $10,000. Subsequently I think the salary may have been reduced. When we increased the salaries of other judges, I think the customs court was put on the same level with the other Federal judges; and although we had agreed in the law to pay $10,000, we would not do it and did not.

It is only an illustration, after all, of the unwisdom frequently of acceding to the demands to do some special thing so that some one may get special consideration. The commerce court, which I have referred to as the transportation court, has gone out of existence. The customs court has not gone out of existence, but it has not much to do; and in order that it may not be taken out of existence the judges want to be able to do something else, because they do not want the court abolished. At least, I take it that that is one reason.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. What work are the judges of the commerce court now doing?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. They are trying cases by assignment of the chief justice. Judge Knapp, who lived in this city for many years, formerly from New York, an old member of the Interstate Commerce Commission, and afterwards a member of the commerce court, tries cases in Richmond most of the time.

Mr. WALSH. In the district court?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I think he is on the court of appeals, probably. I think they are short of members on the court of appeals in that section, although I am not certain.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HUSTED). The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. BEE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Minnesota yield?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Yes.

Mr. BEE. What about the qualifications of the judges of the customs court? Under this bill they are to be assigned to work in the United States circuit or district courts. There is no probability, I take it, of a man being assigned to this work who is not the same kind of a trained lawyer as those who now sit on those courts.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Oh, these men are amply qualified.

Mr. BEE. The same qualifications are requisite?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Oh, yes.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will permit me to make this observation, I am not informed as to the court as a whole, but as to one member of the court, Mr. Justice Montgomery, I would say that he served for many years on the bench of the Supreme Court of Michigan and was generally recognized by the bar of the State as probably the ablest member of that court for a good many years. He is competent to sit in any court in the country.

Mr. BEE. I just wanted to be certain——

Mr. CRAMTON. He is fully competent to sit in any court of the country.

Mr. BEE. I wanted to know if they were competent to sit in any court of the country.

Mr. CRAMTON. They are.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. They are very able judges.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The bill was passed.

The title was amended so as to read as follows: "A bill to authorize the judges of the United States Court of Customs Appeals to be assigned to any district court or circuit court of appeals of the United States and conferring the jurisdiction of said courts upon them while so assigned."

On motion of Mr. VOLSTEAD, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Also, on motion of Mr. VOLSTEAD, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill H. R. 4383 was passed was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS WACCAMAW RIVER, N. C.

The next bill on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 10701) granting the consent of Congress to the Whiteville Lumber Co., Goldsboro, N. C., to construct a bridge across the Waccamaw River, in Brunswick County, N. C.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Reserving the right to object, I take it that this bill as reported is not quite in the form in which the gentleman desires to have it passed?

Mr. GODWIN of North Carolina. Yes, sir; I desire to have it correctly amended.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. This says the location of a bridge—at or near Old Dock (Old Dock, in the county at Columbus, or adjacent thereto), in the county of Brunswick.

If that makes sense, I can not understand.

Mr. GODWIN of North Carolina. The bill was not quite accurately drawn. I introduced it as it was delivered to me. The Waccamaw River forms the line between Columbus and Brunswick Counties. Old Dock is in Columbus County. This is for a bridge across the river connecting both counties.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. This says "at or near Old Dock."

Mr. GODWIN of North Carolina. That is correct.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Then it says, in parentheses—

in the county at Columbus, or adjacent thereto.

And then it says—

in the county of Brunswick.

That does not make sense.

Mr. GODWIN of North Carolina. It does not. The bill has been amended by the committee.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I am reading it with the amendment in it.

Mr. GODWIN of North Carolina. The bill ought to be amended so as to read:

Across the Waccamaw River near Old Dock, in the counties of Columbus and Brunswick.

Mr. GARD. Will the gentleman from North Carolina yield to me?

Mr. GODWIN of North Carolina. Yes, sir.

Mr. GARD. I would suggest that the gentleman offer an amendment striking out the first words, "Old Dock," and striking out the parentheses as they appear in the bill, and strike out the comma after the words "adjacent thereto," or whatever the language is.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I think the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is entirely correct about this. It does not make sense as it reads. I do not understand how this got in this shape. The committee reported this amendment here, or what is supposed to be an amendment, in the parentheses, because we found out that Old Dock was in the county where the bill that was originally introduced was supposed to place it, and therefore these words down here, "in the county of Brunswick," in the last line, should be stricken out, and I think probably that would make sense of the bill.

Mr. GODWIN of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out——

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I do not object to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. GODWIN of North Carolina. I move to strike out——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HULINGS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman whether it is proposed to establish a toll bridge?

Mr. GODWIN of North Carolina. No, sir. It is a lumber company bridge, built by the Whiteville Lumber Co., for the purpose of transporting lumber and logs.

Mr. HULINGS. Is the right to charge toll prohibited?

Mr. GODWIN of North Carolina. No, sir. It is a private corporation. It is a lumber company.

Mr. HULINGS. I think in passing these bills we should abandon this old-time idea of establishing tolls over a public highway.

Mr. GODWIN of North Carolina. They have no such idea.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the Whiteville Lumber Co., Goldsboro, N. C., and their successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Waccamaw River at a point suitable to the interest of navigation, at or near Old Dock, in the county of Brunswick, in the State of North Carolina, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

Also the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 8, after the words "old dock," insert: "Old Dock, in the county at Columbus, or adjacent thereto," in parentheses.

Mr. GODWIN of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend the bill by striking out all of line 8 and all of line 9, down to and including the word "Brunswick." That would be "Old Dock," in line 8, and all in parentheses.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is first on the committee amendment.

Mr. RAYBURN. The committee amendment has got to be adopted, and that in the parentheses has got to be stricken out, with the two words preceding the parenthesis.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. If you make the bill read "at or near Old Dock, in the county of Columbus or adjacent thereto," that would be sufficient.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from North Carolina offers an amendment by way of substitute for the committee amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GODWIN of North Carolina as a substitute for the committee amendment: Line 8, page 1, strike out the words "Old Dock," strike out the parenthesis before the word "Old," and strike out the word "at" after "county," and insert the word "of" in lieu thereof, and strike out the parenthesis after the word "thereto," in line 9, and the words "in the county of Brunswick," so that it will read: "Old Dock, in the county of Brunswick or adjacent thereto."

Mr. MANN of Illinois. While it is not, in fact, a substitute for or amendment to the text, still it presents it in a concrete way, and I think nobody has any objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. GODWIN].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment as amended.

The committee amendment as amended was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the title will be amended in accordance with the text.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I am not sure about the amendment of the title. The county of Brunswick is not referred to in the bill, anyway. The title may properly be amended in this way: "Granting the consent of Congress to the Whiteville Lumber Co., Goldsboro, N. C., to construct a bridge across the Waccamaw River at or near the Old Dock, in Columbus County, N. C." The committee amendment surely is incorrect.

Mr. RAYBURN. I agree with the gentleman. But it appears to me to be hardly necessary to amend the title, because one end of this bridge is in this county, whether it is properly set down in the bill or not. One end of the bridge is in one county and one end in the other.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Yes; one end of the bridge is in one county and one end is in the other. If you say "at or near," it could be considered in both places. The title should read, "To construct a bridge across the Waccamaw River at or near the Old Dock, county of Columbus, N. C." That is the latter part of the title.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment to the title, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment to the title offered by Mr. MANN of Illinois, making the title read as follows: "A bill granting the consent of Congress to the Whiteville Lumber Co., Goldsboro, N. C., to construct a bridge across the Waccamaw River at or near the Old Dock, in the county of Columbus, N. C."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the title.

The amendment of the title was agreed to.

Mr. GODWIN of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I move to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed, and to lay that motion on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed and to lay that motion on the table.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, instead of asking unanimous consent that that action be taken, he moved that the action be taken.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Yes; it is for unanimous consent, however. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

NO QUORUM—CALL OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Speaker, I make a point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Oklahoma makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] In the opinion of the Chair a quorum is not present.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts moves a call of the House. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The question was taken, and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. PARRISH. Division, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. A division is demanded.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 20, noes 5.

So the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The SPEAKER. On this roll call 287 Members have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. WALSH. I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will unlock the doors. The Clerk will report the next bill.

PROCESS IN CAUSES REMOVED TO UNITED STATES COURTS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 10207) providing for service of process in causes removed from a State or other court to a United States court.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I should like to have some explanation of this bill. I should like to know from the chairman of the committee when, within the purview of this bill, is the cause removed to the Federal court? I have grown a little hazy on that matter. I used to have some familiarity with the procedure. As I recall it, the defendant within the time in which he has to answer in the State court must file with the State court his petition for removal and must serve that upon the plaintiff. Then the process of the State court stops. At least the State court proceeds at its own peril. Then the defendant has 30 days or some such period in which to file the record of the removal proceedings with the Federal court. That gives the defendant 30 days in which this entire matter is left up in the air unless the plaintiff himself files a certified copy of the defendant's petition and record for removal.

Now, I want to find out when within the purview of this act is the cause removed? The filing of the petition causes an automatic removal, at least temporarily, but the plaintiff can come into the Federal court and ask that the entire proceeding be remanded back to the State court.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I presume that just as soon as the papers are filed in the State court, so as to complete what has to be done there for the purposes of removal, the transfers really take place, so the State court loses its jurisdiction.

Mr. SINNOTT. It may be that the certified copy of the record has been filed with the Federal court, and the Federal court has ordered a remand and sent the case back to the State court, and the process server is out serving the process and has served it after the order of remand is made. What becomes of that service, and is that a good and valid service under this bill, and is there any time under this bill when the jurisdiction of the Federal court to make the service stops, even though the case has been remanded back?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I presume so. I presume that service of process made while the Federal court had jurisdiction under the provisions of this bill would be valid. If the case is remanded to the State court, I presume that whatever service takes place while the Federal court holds, it would be good service; if not, the State court could go on and complete the service.

Mr. SINNOTT. There is nothing here directing any information to be given to the defendant served after the order of remand is made in the Federal court, and he does not know whether he is in the State court or the Federal court, unless he goes to the Federal court.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. If the process was issued out of the Federal court, of course he would have notice. If it was served by an officer of the Federal court he would also have notice.

Mr. SINNOTT. It may be served by that officer after the Federal court has lost jurisdiction for other purposes. I do not know whether it is the gentleman's intention to retain jurisdiction in the Federal court, in order to complete the service, even after the remand has been made.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. No; I do not think we could under this bill. If process should be served in the Federal court after the case had been sent back to the State court, that would probably be a useless proceeding, and it would be necessary to go on and complete the jurisdiction in the State court. But I am not prepared to say just what the court might hold in reference to that point. There is a defect that ought to be cured by a bill something like this.

Mr. SINNOTT. I think so.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. And only once in a good while could a situation arise such as the gentleman has called attention to.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I should like to ask the gentleman with respect to the language in lines 8 and 9—

> Such process may be completed by the United States court through its officers.

As to whether it is proper to say that the process may be completed by the United States court through its officers. Officers of courts do not ordinarily complete a process. Ought not that language to be modified or changed in some way?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I think it would be better if it said that it should be completed "under the direction of the United States court."

Mr. WALSH. Through its officers?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. That would not be necessary, because very often process is served by publication, and the publication might be going on at the time, and the court might simply direct that the publication be continued for the purpose of completing the service.

Mr. TOWNER. I think the gentleman's last statement is explanatory of what is intended; that is, that the court shall direct what kind of service shall be made, and shall direct that service be made. It could have no other meaning properly.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, we on this side were totally unable to hear the statement made by the chairman of the committee. This is a rather important matter. I notice that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES] is the author of the bill. We would like to have an explanation of the necessity for it.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Under the law as it exists at the present time if a suit were filed against five defendants and three of them were served properly before the case is removed and the other two were not served, the plaintiff must dismiss as to the two who are not served, or as to any upon whom service has been defective, or else dismiss his whole suit and start over again, which is an expensive proceeding. This bill authorizes the court, in the event there are more than one defendant, either to complete the process on any one or more of the defendants after the case is removed to the Federal court or to issue a new process as to defendants who have not been served. In other words, it will do away with the necessity of dismissing and refiling and paying the fees and costs incident thereto.

Mr. DEWALT. I do not think the gentleman's statement is quite correct. As I understood the gentleman, he said that where there were five defendants and three of them had been served and two had not been served, and the case was removed to the Federal court, the plaintiff would have to dismiss as to the two who were not served. Am I correct in my statement of what the gentleman said?

Mr. JONES of Texas. That is what some of the courts have held.

Mr. DEWALT. Reading your bill I find this:

> That hereafter in all cases removed from any State court to any United States court for trial in which any one or more of the defendants has not been served with process or in which the same has not been perfected prior to such removal, or in which the process served upon the defendant or defendants, or any of them, proves to be defective—

And so forth.

That would include all defendants, and therefore it follows that you might have no service at all on any defendant.

Mr. JONES of Texas. There has to be service on some one defendant or the defendant must come voluntarily and appear before the court, which is the same thing, before it can be removed, because some defendant must file a petition and bond.

Mr. DEWALT. Grant that. Let me ask this question: I suppose the gentleman will admit that service of process in a State court in some cases is different from the service of process in a Federal court, not only as to time of service but as to the manner of service required? Is not that correct?

Mr. JONES of Texas. In some instances, yes; but in most instances the State procedure is followed by the Federal court in this regard.

Mr. DEWALT. Granting that is true. Say there are defendants in an action in which there are five who have been served according to the State process and three have not been served. They would be served after the removal to the Federal court by a Federal process.

Mr. JONES of Texas. That might be true.

Mr. DEWALT. Is it not true that certain rights or benefits may have accrued to those served under State process that the other defendants would not get under the Federal service?

Mr. JONES of Texas. Not at all. The Federal court, once the case is removed, assumes complete jurisdiction and conducts the entire case as if the case had been filed originally in a Federal court. It does not take cognizance of the orders or decrees of the State court as far as the jurisdiction or disposition of the case is concerned.

Mr. DEWALT. I have no objection to the bill, but I am asking these questions for information. This bill provides for adding defendants and bringing them in.
